Ours is the only school in existence where you can learn PERSONAL Efficiency. In twenty-four fascinating lessons, in your home, at your leisure, you learn of these wonder working truths that have saved railroads, industrial plants, and factories millions of dollars each year, and which have raised salaries, in many cases, one-hundred fold.

Harrington Emerson

the man who founded this school, and who wrote these twenty-four vital lessons, has spent his life in the study and practice of Efficiency. During the past twenty years, this world famous expert, has been advising the leading industrial plants of the country. This vast experience he has put into this course of study so that you can reap the benefit.

What This Means For You

This course is for everybody who wants to make the most of his life—the professional man, business man, the young man hoping to achieve—everyone who wishes to go as far as he can, do as much as he can, achieve the best that is in him—with the least effort. The coupon at the side, if mailed to us tonight, will bring to you a Free copy of "The Story of Emerson," an outline of the Course, and full information.

"I did not see the register at the inn. I did not know till afterwards that we were not booked. Once upstairs, I refused to remove my hat or my veil or my coat until he brought his friend to me. He pretended to be very angry over his friend's failure to be there beforehand, as he had promised. He ordered a supper served in the room. I did not eat anything. Somehow I was beginning to understand, vaguely of course, but surely—and bitterly, Mr. Wrandall. Suddenly he threw off the mask.

"He coolly informed me that he knew the kind of a girl I was. I had been on the stage. He said it was no use trying to work the marriage game on him. He was too old a bird and too wise to fall for that. Those were his words. I was horrified, stunned. When I began to cry out in my fury, he laughed at me but swore he would marry me even at that if it were not for the fact that he was already married. . . . I tried to leave the room. He held me. He kissed me a hundred times before I could break away. I—I tried to scream. . . . A little later on, when I was absolutely desperate, I—I snatched up the knife. There was nothing else left for me to do. I struck at him. He fell back on the bed. . . . I stole out of the house—oh, hours and hours afterward it seemed to me. I cannot tell you how long I stood there watching him. . . . I was crazed by fear. I—I—"

"We will spare you the rest, Miss Castleton," he said, his voice hoarse and unnatural. "There is no need to say more."

"You—you understand? You do believe me?" she cried.

He looked down at his wife's bowed head, and received no sign from her; then at the white, drawn faces of his children. They met his gaze and he read something in their eyes.

"I—I think your story is so convincing that we—we could not endure the shame of having it repeated to the world."

"I—I cannot ask you to forgive me, sir. I only ask you to believe me," she murmured brokenly. "I—I am sorry it had to be. God is my witness that there was no other way."

Mr. Carroll came to his feet. There were tears in his eyes.

"I think, Mr. Wrandall, you will now appreciate my motives in—"

"Pardon me, Mr. Carroll, if I suggest that Miss Castleton does not require any defense at present," said Mr. Wrandall stiffly. "Your motives were doubtless good. Will you be so good as to conduct us to a room where we may—may be alone for a short while?"

There was something tragic in the man's face. His son and daughter arose as if moved by an instinctive realization of a duty, and perhaps for the first time in their lives were submissive to an influence they had never quite recognized before—a father's unalterable right to command. For once in their lives they were meek in his presence. They stepped to his side and stood waiting, and neither of them spoke.

Mr. Wrandall laid his hand heavily on his wife's shoulder. She started, looked up rather vacantly, and then arose without assistance. He did not make the mistake of offering to assist her. He knew too well that to question her strength now would be but to invite weakness. She was strong. He knew her well.

"There Was Nothing Else Left for Me to Do."

She stood straight and firm for a few seconds, transfixing Hetty with a look that seemed to bore into the very soul of her, and then spoke.

"You ask us to be your judges?"

"I ask you to judge not me alone but—your son as well," said Hetty, meeting her look steadily. "You cannot pronounce me innocent without pronouncing him guilty. It will be hard."

Sara raised her head from her arms.

"You know the way into my sitting-room, Leslie," she said, with singular directness. Then she arose and drew her figure to its full height. "Please remember that it is I who am to be judged. Judge me as I have judged you. I am not asking for mercy."

They turned away without a word or a revealing look, and slowly moved off in the direction of the boudoir. They who remained behind stood still, motionless as statues. It was Vivian who opened the library door. She closed it after the others had passed through, and did not look behind.

Half an hour passed. Then the door was opened and the tall old man advanced into the room.

"We have found against my son, Miss Castleton," he said, his lips twitching. "He is not here to speak for himself, but he has already been judged. We, his family, apologize to you for what you have suffered from the conduct of one of us. Not one but all of us believe the story you have told. It must never be retold. We ask this of all of you. It is not in our hearts to thank Sara for shielding you, for her hand is still raised against us. We are fair and just. If you had come to us on that wretched night and told the story of my son's infamy, we, the Wrandalls, would have stood between you and the law. The law could not have touched you then; it shall not touch you now. Our verdict, if you choose to call it that, is sealed. No man shall ever hear from the lips of a Wrandall the smallest part of what has transpired here tonight. Mr. Carroll, you were right. We thank you for the counsel that led this unhappy girl to place herself in our hands."

"Oh, God, I thank thee—I thank thee!" burst from the lips of Sara Wrandall. She strained Hetty to her breast.

"It is not for us to judge you, Sara," said Redmond Wrandall, speaking with difficulty. "You are your own judge, and a harsh one you will find yourself. As for ourselves, we can only look upon your unspeakable design as the working of a temporarily deranged mind. You could never have carried it out. You are an honest woman. At the last you would have revolted, even with victory assured. Perhaps Leslie is the only one who has a real grievance against you in this matter. I am convinced that he loved Miss Castleton deeply. The worst hurt is his, and he has been your most devoted advocate during all the years of bitterness that has existed between you and us. You thought to play him a foul trick. You could not have carried it to the end. We leave you to pass judgment on yourself."

"I have already done so, Mr. Wrandall," said Sara. "Have I not accused myself before you? Have I not confessed to the only crime that has been committed? I am not proud of myself, sir."

"You have hated us well."

"And you have hated me. The crime you hold me guilty of was committed years ago. It was when I robbed you of your son. To this day I am the leper in your path. I may be forgiven for all else, but not for allowing Challis Wrandall to become the husband of Sebastian Gooch's daughter. That is the unpardonable sin."

Mr. Wrandall was silent for a moment.

"You still are Sebastian Gooch's daughter," he said distinctly. "You can never be anything else."

She paled. "This last transaction proves it, you would say?"

"This last transaction, yes."

She looked about her with troubled, questioning eyes.

"I—I wonder if that can be true," she murmured, rather piteously. "Am I so different from the rest of you? Is the blood to blame?"

"Nonsense!" exclaimed Mr. Carroll nervously. "Don't be silly, Sara, my child. That is not what Mr. Wrandall means."

Wrandall turned his face away.

"You loved as deeply as you hate, Sara," he said, with a curious twitching of his chin. "My son was your god. We are not insensible to that. Perhaps we have never realized until now the depth and breadth of your love for him. Love is a bitter judge of its enemies. It knows no mercy, it knows no reason. Hate may be conquered by love, but love cannot be conquered by hate. You had reason to hate my son. Instead you persisted in your love for him. We—we owe you something for that, Sara. We owe you a great deal more than I find myself able to express in words."

Leslie entered the room at this instant. He had his overcoat on and carried his gloves and hat in his hand.

"We are ready, father," he said thickly.

After a moment's hesitation, he crossed over to Hetty, who stood beside Sara.

"I—I can now understand why you refused to marry me, Miss Castleton," he said, in a queer, jerky manner. "Won't you let me say that I wish you all the happiness still to be found in this rather uneven world of ours?"

The crowning testimonial to an absolutely sincere ego!

CHAPTER XXII.

Renunciation.

On the third day after the singular trial of Hetty Castleton in Sara's library, young Mrs. Wrandall's motor drew up in front of a lofty office building in lower Broadway; its owner stepped down from the limousine and entered the building. A few moments later she walked briskly into the splendid offices of Wrandall & Co., private bankers and steamship-owners. The clerks in the outer offices stared for a moment in significant surprise, and then bowed respectfully to the beautiful silent partner in the great concern.

It was the first time she had been seen in the offices since the tragic event that had served to make her a member of the firm. A boy at the information desk, somewhat impressed by her beauty and the trim elegance of her long black broad-tail coat, to say nothing of the dark eyes that shone through the narrow veil, forgot the dignity of his office and went so far as to politely ask her who she wanted to see and "what name, please."

The senior clerk rushed forward and transfixed the new boy with a glare.

"A new boy, Mrs. Wrandall," he made haste to explain. To the new boy's surprise, the visitor was conducted with much bowing and scraping into the private offices, where no one ventured except by special edict of the powers.

"Who was it?" he asked, in some awe, of a veteran stenographer who came up and sneered at him.

"Mrs. Challis Wrandall, you little simpleton," said she, and for once he failed to snap back.

It is of record that for nearly two whole days, he was polite to every visitor who approached him and was generally worth his salt.

Sara found herself in the close little room that once had been her husband's, but was now scrupulously held in reserve for her own use. Rather a waste of space, she felt as she looked about the office. The clerk dusted an easy chair and threw open the long unused desk near the window.

"We are very glad to see you here, madam," he said. "This room hasn't been used much, as you may observe. Is there anything I can do for you?"

She continued her critical survey of the room. Nothing had been changed since the days when she used to visit her husband here on occasions of rare social importance: such as calling to take him out to luncheon, or to see that he got safely home on rainy afternoons. The big picture of a steamship still hung on the wall across the room. Her own photograph, in a silver frame stood in one of the recesses of the desk. She observed that there was a clean white blotter there, too; but the ink wells appeared to be empty, if she was to judge by the look of chagrin on the clerk's face as he inspected them. Photographs of polo scenes in which Wrandall was a prominent figure, hung about the walls, with two or three pictures of his favorite ponies, and one of a ragged gipsy girl with wonderful eyes, carrying a monkey in a crude wooden cage strapped to her back. On closer observation one would have recognized Sara's peculiarly gipsy-like features in the face of the girl, and then one would have noticed the caption written in red ink at the bottom of the photograph: "The Trumbell's Fancy Dress Ball, January 10, '07. Sara as Gipsy Mab."

With a start, Sara came out of her painful reverie. She passed her hand over her eyes, and seemed thereby to put the polite senior clerk back into the picture once more.

"No, thank you. Is Mr. Redmond Wrandall down this afternoon?"

"He came in not ten minutes ago. Mr. Leslie Wrandall is also here. Shall I tell Mr. Wrandall you wish to see him?"

"You may tell him that I am here, if you please," she said.

"I am very sorry about the ink wells, madam," murmured the clerk. "We—we were not expecting—"

"Pray don't let it disturb you, Mr. Bancroft. I shall not use them today."

"They will be properly filled by tomorrow."

"Thank you."

He disappeared. She relaxed in the familiar, comfortable old leather-cushioned chair, and closed her eyes. There was a sharp little line between them, but it was hidden by the veil.

The door opened slowly and Redmond Wrandall came into the room. She arose at once.

"This is—er—an unexpected pleasure, Sara," he said perplexed and ill-at-ease. He stopped just inside the door he had been careful to close behind him, and did not offer her his hand.

"I came down to attend to some business, Mr. Wrandall," she said.

"Business?" he repeated, staring.

She took note of the tired, haggard look in his eyes, and the tightly compressed lips.

"I intend to dispose of my entire interest in Wrandall & Co.," she announced calmly.

"What's this?" he demanded sharply.

"We may as well speak plainly, Mr. Wrandall," she said. "You do not care to have me remain a member of the firm, nor do I blame you for feeling as you do about it. A year ago you offered to buy me out—or off, as I took it to be at the time. I had reasons then for not selling out to you. Today I am ready either to buy or to sell."

"You—you amaze me," he exclaimed.

"Does you offer of last December still stand?"

"I—I think we would better have Leslie in, Sara. This is most unexpected. I don't quite feel up to—"

"Have Leslie in by all means," she said, resuming her seat.

He hesitated a moment, opened his lips as if to speak, and then abruptly left the room.

Sara smiled.

Many minutes passed before the two Wrandalls put in an appearance. She understood the delay. They were telephoning to certain legal advisers.

She shook hands with him, not listlessly but with the vigor born of nervousness.

"I don't know what you've heard," she said pointedly.

"Why—why, about selling out to us," he stammered.

"I am willing to retire from the firm of Wrandall & Co.," she said.

"Father says the business is as good as it was a year ago, but I don't agree with him," said the son, trying to look lugubrious.

"Then you don't care to repeat your original proposition?"

"Well, the way business has been falling off—"

"Perhaps you would prefer to sell out to me," she remarked quietly.

"Not at all!" he said quickly, with a surprised glance at his father. "We couldn't think of letting the business pass out of the Wrandall name."

"You forget that my name is Wrandall," she rejoined. "There would be no occasion to change the firm's name; merely its membership."

"Our original offer stands," said the senior Wrandall stiffly. "We prefer to buy."

"And I to sell. Mr. Carroll will meet you tomorrow, gentlemen. He will represent me as usual. Our business as well as social relations are about to end, I suppose. My only regret is that I cannot further accommodate you by changing my name. Still you may live in hope that time may work even that wonder for you."

She arose. The two men regarded her in an aggrieved way for a moment.

"I have no real feeling of hostility toward you, Sara," said Leslie nervously, "in spite of all that you said the other night."

"I am afraid you don't mean that, deep down in your heart, Leslie," she said, with a queer little smile.

"But I do," he protested. "Hang it all, we—we live in a glass house ourselves, Sara. I dare say, in a way, I was quite as unpleasant as the rest of the family. You see, we just can't help being snobs. It's in us, that's all there is to it."

Mr. Wrandall looked up from the floor, his gaze having dropped at the first outburst from his son's lips.

"We—we prefer to be friendly, Sara, if you will allow us—"

She laughed and the old gentleman stopped in the middle of his sentence.

"We can't be friends, Mr. Wrandall," she said, suddenly serious. "The pretence would be a mockery. We are all better off if we allow our paths, our interests to diverge today."

"Perhaps you are right," said he, compressing his lips.

"I believe that Vivian and I could—but no! I won't go so far as to say that either. There is something genuine about her. Strange to say, I have never disliked her."

"If you had made the slightest effort to like us, no doubt we could have—"

"My dear Mr. Wrandall," she interrupted quickly, "I credit you with the desire to be fair and just to me. You have tried to like me. You have even deceived yourself at times. I—but why these gentle recriminations? We merely prolong an unfortunate contest between antagonistic natures, with no hope of genuine peace being established. I do not regret that I am your daughter-in-law, nor do I believe that you would regret it if I had not been the daughter of Sebastian Gooch."

"Your father was as little impressed with my son as I was with his daughter," said Redmond Wrandall drily. "I am forced to confess that he was the better judge. We had the better of the bargain."

"I believe you mean it, Mr. Wrandall," she said, a note of gratitude in her voice. "Good-bye, Mr. Carroll will see you tomorrow." She glanced quickly about the room. "I shall send for—for certain articles that are no longer required in conducting the business of Wrandall & Co."

With a quaint little smile, she indicated the two photographs of herself.

"By Jove, Sara," burst out Leslie abruptly. "I wish you'd let me have that Gipsy Mab picture. I've always been dotty over it, don't you know. Ripping study."

Her lip curled slightly.

"As a matter of fact," he explained conclusively, "Chal often said he'd leave it to me when he died. In a joking way, of course, but I'm sure he meant it."

"You may have it, Leslie," she said slowly. It is doubtful if he correctly interpreted the movement of her head as she uttered the words.

"Thanks," said he. "I'll hang it in my den, if you don't object."

"We shall expect Mr. Carroll tomorrow, Sara," said his father, with an air of finality. "Good-bye. May I ask what plans you are making for the winter?"

"They are very indefinite."

"I say, Sara, why don't you get married?" asked Leslie, surveying the Gipsy Mab photograph with undisguised admiration as he held it at arm's length. "Ripping!" This to the picture.

She paused near the door to stare at him for a moment, unutterable scorn in her eyes.

"I've had a notion you were pretty keen about Brandy Booth," he went on amiably.

She caught her breath. There was an instant's hesitation on her part before she replied.

"You have never been very smart at making love guesses, Leslie," she said. "It's a trick you haven't acquired."

He laughed uncomfortably. "Neat stroke, that."

Following her into the corridor outside the offices, he pushed the elevator bell for her.

"I meant what I said, Sara," he remarked, somewhat doggedly. "You ought to get married. Chal didn't leave much for you to cherish. There's no reason why you should go on like this, living alone and all that sort of thing. You're young and beautiful and—"

"Because I Love You So Dearly," Said Sara.

"Oh, thank you, Leslie," she cried out sharply.

"You see, it's going to be this way: Hetty will probably marry Booth. That's on dit, I take it. You're depending on her for companionship. Well, she'll quit you cold after she's married. She will—"

She interrupted him peremptorily.

"If Challis did nothing else for me, Leslie, he at least gave me you to cherish. Once more, good-bye."

The elevator stopped for her. He strolled back to his office wtih a puzzled frown on his face. She certainly was inexplicable!

The angry red faded from her cheeks as she sped homeward in the automobile. Her thoughts were no longer of Leslie but of another . . . She sighed and closed her eyes, and her cheeks were pale Workmen from a picture dealer's establishment were engaged in hanging a full length portrait in the long living-room of her apartment when she reached home. She had sent to the country for Booth's picture of Hetty, and was having it hung in a conspicuous place.

Passing the open library door, Sara paused for an instant to peer within. Then she went on down the hall to her own sitting-room. The canary was singing glibly in his cage by the window-side.

She threw aside her furs, and, without removing her hat, passed into the bed-chamber at the left of the cozy little boudoir. This was Hetty's room. Her own was directly opposite. On the girl's dressing-table, leaning against the broad, low mirror, stood the unframed photograph of a man. With a furtive glance over her shoulder, Sara crossed to the table and took up the picture in her gloved hand. For a long time she stood there gazing into the frank, good-looking face of Brandon Booth. She breathed faster; her hand shook; her eyes were strained as if by an inward suggestion of pain.

She shook her head slowly, as if in final renunciation of a secret hope or the banishment of an unwelcome desire, and resolutely replaced the photograph. Her lips were almost white as she turned away and re-entered the room beyond.

"He belongs to her," she said, unconsciously speaking aloud; "and he is like all men. She must not be unhappy."

Presently she entered the library. She had exchanged her tailor-suit for a dainty house-gown. Hetty was still seated in the big lounging chair, before the snapping fire, apparently not having moved since she looked in on passing a quarter of an hour before. One of the girl's legs was curled up under her, the other swung loose; an elbow rested on the arm of the chair, and her cheek was in her hand.

Coming softly up from behind, Sara leaned over the back of the chair and put her hands under her friend's chin, tenderly, lovingly. Hetty started and shivered.

"Oh, Sara, how cold your hands are!"

She grasped them in her own and fondly stroked them, as if to restore warmth to the long, slim fingers which gave the lie to Mrs. Coburn's declarations.

"I've been thinking all morning of what you and Brandon proposed to me last night," said Sara, looking straight over the girl's head, the dark, languorous, mysterious glow filling her eyes. "It is good of you both to want me, but—"

"Now don't say 'but,' Sara," cried Hetty. "We mean it, and you must let us have our way."

"It would be splendid to be near you all the time, dear; it would be wonderful to live with you as you so generously propose, but I cannot do it. I must decline."

"And may I ask why you decline to live with me?" demanded Hetty resentfully.

"Because I love you so dearly," said Sara.

THE END.

Pigeon Makes 700-Mile Trip.

Thirteen-year-old Marion Olram of Goldfield, Nev., is in her new San Francisco home today, and so is Dizzy, according to a dispatch to the New York Sun.

Dizzy is not a homer, but for an ordinary pigeon it has an acute traveling sense. It followed its little mistress all the 700 miles by train from Goldfield to San Francisco, and then to her home here. Marion kissed Dizzy good-by at Goldfield and then wept. She looked out of the car window—and there was Dizzy. She took it in, kissed it again and tossed it out once more.

But the pigeon wouldn't go back. When the Olrams got on the ferry at Oakland, across the bay from San Francisco, Dizzy alighted on the girl's arm.

Island Paradise of Birds.

On one little island in Gatun lake, formerly known as Lion Hill, before the impounded waters of the Chagres river isolated it from the rest of the Canal Zone, are more species of birds than in any one locality in the western hemisphere. E. A. Goldman of the biological survey, department of agriculture, in two short collecting trips to Panama has procured about 300 different species, and it is estimated that a larger variety is to be found within the limits of the Canal Zone than in any one state in the United States—about 900.

In the neighborhood of Gatun, at the Atlantic entrance of the Canal Zone, no less than 250 species have been found.

Good Ones.

"Do you want me to misrepresent the goods and say they are fine when they are not?" asked the new salesman.

"Yes," sternly answered the unscrupulous dealer. "Always remember that our assets are your liabilities."

GAY PURIS HEARS THE CURFEW BELL

Martial Law for First Time Since Siege of Paris.

CALM FOLLOWS GREAT NOISE

War Scenes in the Frivolous French Capital—Citizens Must Be Indoors by 9:00 P. M.—Society Women Take Volunteers' Places.

Paris.—Martial law is in force for the first time since 1870, when Paris was in a state of siege. A visitor unaware of the situation would fancy himself in the midst of a national festival. This is on the outside only, for every home has its mourning. But life sits lightly on the Parisian.

The whole city is beflagged; the streets are a mass of color; hardly a building is there that is not gay with bunting. The English flag is conspicuous everywhere.

Horse and motor traffic are almost non-existent. Luckily the weather keeps fine. Immense crowds line the boulevards and chief thoroughfares.

Quietness Succeeds Noise.

A noticeable feature is the strange quietness which has come over the people. Wednesday there was a continuous roar; processions followed one another continuously Thursday it was as though the nation were dwelling on the death struggle with its fiercest enemy.

News sheets were snatched from runners for news of the Belgians' heroic opposition to the German advance. But, above all, the certainty that England is going to stand by transformed the thirst for street demonstrations. The crowd awaits events without noise or bluster. English and Italians are greeted in the cafes with lifted hat or a word of good fellowship. At the hotels the English visitors are treated with especial courtesy and deference. Americans rank in the popular mind with Britishers as friendly to France.

Curfew Law in Force.

The new law is now in force; all citizens are expected to be indoors at 9:00 p. m. The curfew bell warns all at eight, when the cafes close and streets are deserted. The theaters follow suit. The receipts at the Comedie Francaise on Monday were under $90. Twelve of the leading artists have gone to the front, among them Albert Carree and Georges Ricou. The Odeon theater has lost Paul Gavault. A few minor cafes chantant still try to draw, but the Moulin Rouge is closed. Mau-Barres, the eminent academician, has joined his regiment.

The police continue to be on the alert for spies. Many arrests have been made. Foreign residents have to apply to the police stations for permits to remain in the city. The gates are closed all around the fortifications at 8:00 p. m. Late arrivals by automobile have to run close examination. Carrier pigeons are the particular objects of suspicion to the police. The law of 1896 for bidding the importation of pigeons has been renewed. All the gun shops in Paris have been requisitioned to deposit their stock in warehouses to be held till martial law is abolished. Special municipal nurseries have been organized for the care of infants whose mothers have volunteered for the Red Cross or other work.

The third day of mobilization was the big departure day. Men from twenty-eight to thirty left by the northern and eastern stations, which are barricaded to all but the military. Five hundred train loads left in one day. All was done in good order, with an absence of noisy manifestations. Many husbands break down when bidding wives and children adieu.

On the boulevards a superb automobile driven by a white-bearded man bears an inscription that it is for the free use of mobilized soldiers going to the eastern stations. As each soldier hails it and enters the old man hands him a well-stocked hamper and the crowd cheers.

The famous dressmakers have closed their doors. From the front doorways the midinettes stream out, carrying tricolor banners. From one establishment fifty young women emerge. At the head are three pretty girls who hold between them a huge banner. The rest follow, singing "La Marseillaise" as they march up the Rue de la Paix towards the boulevard.

Americans Offer Services.

"In the Montparnasse quarter, Holy Trinity lodge, a meeting house and hospital chiefly for the use of American artists, sculptors, etc., is now transformed into a military hospital. The members of the lodge unanimously offered their services for military work.

As the German ambassador left a street urchin crept through the lines of soldiers to the railway car. As the envoy entered the lad called out, "Give my compliments to William." The crowd enjoyed the joke more than the departing guest.

A smartly gowned young woman has on her arms a lad of fourteen, dressed in a Russian naval suit with a cap marked "Russia." A guard passes. The boy leaves his mother and cries at the top of his voice, "Long live the French army." The officer stops his men and kisses the boy on both cheeks.

A correspondent was approached by an officer in uniform and asked to witness the civil marriage of one of his men. Soldier Delaporte Jean Marie was united with Chomel Caux. Kissing his bride and shaking hands, he hastens off to fight for his country, leaving the bride sobbing convulsively.

Women Fill Men's Jobs.

The women of Paris rose to the emergency created by drafting the men of the city for the army. Society women took the place of men clerks in stores to sell necessities. Young girls sold tickets in the underground stations. Others acted as waiters in cafes. Grocery stores and meat shops were run by women. Small boys were put on as guards on the underground trains. The motormen are aged, gray-haired men, ineligible for service in the army. Paris enjoys the novelty of women doing men's work, and the women apparently do, too.

The war has leveled all classes. French society women have taken into their homes the destitute wives and children of private soldiers ordered to the front.

James Gordon Bennett Is Reporter.

The American adventurer gets the same treatment from the American embassy as the millionaire. James Gordon Bennett, millionaire owner of the New York Herald, is acting as a reporter for his newspapers, going daily to the American embassy to collect "stories."

Ambassador and Mrs. Herrick estimate that all Americans in the city have now been provided with the required police passports.

It was observed that Thomas Ryan, son of the American millionaire, and Oscar Underwood, son of the senator from Alabama, had to take their places in a line of Americans who desired to see the ambassador. Mrs. Howe, a sister of President Wilson, stood hours in line.

FRENCH ARMY OFFICERS

MEN AND THE MAN

Something over a hundred years ago the military genius was with France. Less than half a century ago Germany had the great leader.

However, much more men count than the man, yet the man does count. The spirit of the French people of the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries was finer than the spirit of the German peoples of that time. The spirit of the German peoples of 1870 was finer than the spirit of the French people of 1870. Yet Napoleon and Von Moltke were supreme actors in the two periods.

Of the fateful Battle of the Boyne the Irish have always said that if their leader had been William and their enemies' leader James, a different story would have been written.

Will this European war develop a great military genius? Or will all depend on the higher average of the men and the war machines—on where is the greater discipline, the finer spirit, the greater staying power?

HUBBY GOT THE GOODS, BUT—

It Was the First Flush of the Honeymoon, and He Says "Never Again!"

"Never again," was the conclusion of a story told by a young bridegroom of the month, after he related his efforts to please his bride by fulfilling her every wish.

Sitting in his office a few days after the wedding he received a telephone call which was something like this: "Dearie, I do so hate to trouble you, but I have run out of lace for that dress I was making, and I can't finish it until I have another yard. Can't you stop at the store and get some as you come home—Oh, I can tell you what it is like—just four leaves, then a sprig, then four leaves, then a sprig, and so on—it's just two threads over an inch wide."

He hung up the receiver and mopped his brow. He walked by the store twice, finally entered and approached the lace counter. She was pretty, but he had been married only a week and was busy repeating in his mind: "Four leaves, then a sprig."

"Well, after looking at 500 samples of lace, I got it, but—"—Indianapolis News.

RESINOL STOPS DANDRUFF AND ITCHING SCALP

If you are troubled with dandruff, eczema or other scaly, itching scalp affection, try shampoos with resinol soap and an occasional treatment with resinol ointment. You will be surprised how quickly the trouble disappears, and the health and beauty of the hair improves.

Resinol soap and ointment also heal skin eruptions, clear away pimples and blackheads, and form a most valuable household treatment for sunburn, heat-rash, etc. Sold by all druggists. Prescribed by doctors for 19 years.—Adv.

No Airs About Her.

"Airs!" exclaimed the proud mother, and shook her head vigorously. "My Elsie, for all her learning, hasn't any more airs, so to speak, than her poor old dad."

"La, no!"

"How refreshing! Most girls who go through college nowadays will hardly look at you after they're graduated."

"Well, they ain't like my Elsie, that's all I can say," retorted Elsie's ma. "She's become a carnivorous reader, of course, and she frequently importunes music. But stuck up—my Elsie? Not a bit. She's unanimous to everybody has a most infantile vocabulary, and what's more, never keeps a caller waiting while she dresses up. No, she just runs down, nom de plume, as she is."

Very Effective.

At an English provincial theater not long since the curtain rose on an empty stage in the second act of a play, and by and by a meek-looking young man with a dust-coat slung over his arm came on and loudly called, "Uncle—uncle!"

According to the book of the play he should have received no answer to his call, and after an appropriate pause should have gone on with a monologue. But a graceless "god" in the gallery took upon himself to answer the actor.

"All right, I'm coming in a moment. How much do you want on it?" he shouted.

The effect on the audience may be imagined.

Hot In the Superlative.

"Shipmates," he said, "you've seen the molten iron come running out of the furnace, sizzling and hissing, like some kind of snaky, horrible monster, Well, shipmates—"

"Well, shipmats," he said, solemnly, "they use that stuff for ice cream in hell."

His Mistake.

"He's a self-made man."

"I know. He surely made a mistake in not consulting an expert."

Depends.

"Is a ton of coal very much, pa?"

"It depends on whether you are shoveling it or burning it."

How To Give Quinine To Children

FEBRILINE is the trade-mark name given to an improved Quinine. It is a Tasteless Syrup, pleasant to take and does not disturb the stomach. Children take it and never know it is Quinine. Also especially adapted to adults who cannot take ordinary Quinine. Does not nauseate nor cause nervousness nor ringing in the head. Try it the next time you need Quinine for any purpose. Ask for 2-ounce original package. The name FEBRILINE is blown in bottle. 25 cents.

Betting is an argument that is convincing only when one happens to win.

REVELATION WAS TOO MUCH

Picture of "Hollering Jones" at Favorite Diversion Caused Him to Reform.

A well-known illustrator, who makes interesting western pictures, once made the acquaintance of a noisy but good-natured cowboy who rejoiced in the appellation of "Hollering Jones."

In physical appearance this man was typical of his kind, and the artist made several studies of him, both in repose and in his favorite diversion of "hollering.' Some of the studies were sold by the artist to an eastern magazine. They showed Jones in his most violent state.

A year later the artist again visited the region. He was soon approached by Mr. Jones himself, bearing one of the pictures, which he had torn from the magazine in which its was printed. Pointing to it, he asked:

"Is that me?"

"Well," replied the artist, evasively, "I got the general idea from you, of course, but—"

"Oh, I ain't takin' no offense," Jones made haste to say. "It's all right; only if it's me, say so."

"If you put it to me that way," said the artist, "I can only reply that it is a fairly good portrait of you."

"The men here on the ranch agree with you. So I look like that when I holler, do I?"

"I think you do."

"In that case," said Hollering Jones, "all I've got to say is that Hollering Jones has hollered his last holler. Hereafter, when I celebrates, I does so with a tin horn. In my own opinion, no man has a right to look like that—not round white folks, anyhow."—Youth's Companion.

Rather Effeminate.

Congressman Peter J. Dooling of New York smiled the other evening when reference at a dinner was made to effeminate ways. He said he was reminded of the explanation of Smith.

Some time ago the Smiths attended a reception where they met a man named Brown. On the way home, while exchanging opinions of the guests, Brown was mentioned.

"Speaking of that man Brown," vigorously remarked Smith, "he certainly has an effeminate way of talking."

"Why, John," was the wondering rejoinder of Mrs. Smith, "how can you say that? He certainly has a very loud and masculine voice!'

"Yes, I know he has," explained Smith, "but what I mean is that he talks all the time."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Heartless.

The sun just popped off this earth as Miranda was clasped in her lover's Sandow embrace.

"It has been the longest day in the year," he whispered ardently as he held her still closer.

How perfectly sweet of him, thought Miranda, as she closed her eyes in an ecstasy of happiness.

"Sweetheart," she breathed, raising her face to his, "why has it been so long?"

"Because—because," he answered lamely—"well, because, my dear girl, it's the twenty-first of June."

Perfectly Natural.

As Herbert Cory tells it, he went to a dinner once where Andrew Carnegie was a guest.

"After the eating was over and the speechmaking had started," said Corey, "Mr. Carnegie reached in his pocket for something and pulled out a handful of small change. A dime got away from him and fell on the floor, and at the first chance Mr. Carnegie got down under the table and looked for it."

"Did he find it?" asked one of the audience to whom Corey was narrating the incident.

Some Weather.

College boys who put money in their purses by toil in Kansas wheat fields will not be discouraged by this story: "I think I smell burning meat," said the farmer, as he paused for a moment in the harvest field to mop his brow. "You do," said the raw harvest hand, wearily, as he stooped to get a couple more sheaves of golden grain. "The burning meat you smell is my liver frying. It is overdone." And with that the young fellow spat on a grasshopper and scalded it to death.—Atlanta Constitution.

Found Task a Hard One.

Whether a boy's ears belong to his face or his neck has always been a matter of washing convenience to the boy. One of two boys on a street car evidently had been told to wash his face, for his companion remarked: "You're all dirty back of your ears."

"Aw, I ain't either," remonstrated the accused.

"Well, you don't have to believe me," said the other; "you just look and see."

"Can the contortions," growled the conductor; and the boys became as quiet as boys can be."

"So Jack's married. Did he marry for beauty?"

"No, booty."

Many a man has taken a hand in politics and then put his foot in it.

Every new invention is expected to revolutionize things—but does it?

How Do You Feel After Eating.?

One should feel good natured and satisfied. That is the way one will feel if the digestive organs are working properly. No pain or distress should follow a hearty meal. If there is pain or distress your stomach needs the aid that POINDEXTER'S TONIC will give.

A dose directly after eating will prevent all trouble. This remedy will stimulate the digestive organs thereby increasing the secretion of gastric juices. Its use insures perfect assimilation and the greatest possible percentage of nutriment from what is eaten. Money back if you are not satisfied.

Brought Out by Trial.

There can be no true virtue in those who have never been tried—or at least we cannot be sure of its existence: it may be there, or only its semblance may be there. In real life we have to do with realities: let us make sure that our defenses are real.

Helping Kidneys By Clearing Blood

Most readers will be interested to more clearly understand why analysis of urine is so important. In the use of S. S. S. to purify the blood, its action is a stimulant to the myriad of fine blood vessels that make up the constructive tissues of the kidneys. All the blood from all over the body must pass through the kidneys. They act as testers and assayers. And according to what they allow to pass out in the urine, both as to quantity and materials, the health of the kidneys and the quality of the blood is determined. The catalytic energy forced by S. S. S. is shown in the urine. It is also demonstrated in the skin. And as the blood continues to sweep through the kidneys the dominating nature of S. S. S., acting as it does through all the avenues of elimination, shows a marked decrease of disease manifestations as demonstrated by urine analysis. This assistance is a great relief to the kidneys. The body wastes are more evenly distributed to the emunctories; their elimination is stimulated by the tonic action afforded the liver, lungs, skin and kidneys. Thus, in cases of rheumatism, cystitis, chronic sore throat, huskiness of voice, bronchitis, asthma and the myriad of other reflex indications of weak kidney action, first purify your blood with S. S. S., so it will enable the tissues to rebuild the cellular strength and regain the normal health.

S. S. S. is prepared by The Swift Specific Co., 527 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., and if you have any deep-seated or obstinate blood trouble, write to their Medical Dept. for free advice.

Baby of Future is Considered

Much thought has been given in late years to the subject of maternity. In the cities there are maternity hospitals equipped with modern methods. But most women prefer their own homes and in the towns and villages must prefer them. And since this is true we know from the great many splendid letters written on the subject that our "Mother's Friend" is a great help to expectant mothers. They write of the wonderful relief, how it seemed to allow the muscles to expand without undue strain and what a splendid influence it was on the nervous system. Such helps as "Mother's Friend" and the broader knowledge of them should have a helpful influence upon babies of the future. Science says that an infant derives its sense and builds its character from cutaneous impressions. And a tranquil mother certainly will transmit a more healthful influence than if she is extremely nervous from undue pain. This is what a host of women believe who used "Mother's Friend."

SICKENED BY CALOMEL

If you ever saw anyone made sick by calomel you won't want any more calomel yourself. There's no real reason why a person should take calomel anyway, when fifty cents will buy a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone—a good remedy that perfectly and safetly takes the place of dangerous calomel, which is only another form of deanly and poisonous mercury.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a pleasant-tasting vegetable liquid which will start the liver just as surely as calomel, and which has absolutely no bad after-effects.

Children and grown people can take Dodson's Liver Tone without any restriction of habit or diet. Alred Drug Comdany sell it and guarantee it to take the place of calomel, and will refund your money at once if it fails in your case.

What You Make Us

We—the L. & N.—are what you—the people—make us.

True, you are not responsible for our errors of judgments and our clerical mistakes—

But you influence them.

You—the people—in proportion that you are greater than the L. & N., exert an influence over us that is beneficial or detrimental to both of us in proportion to our relative importance.

You have it in your power to make or break the L. & N., just as you have it in your power to make or break a bank in your community.

And while the bank might have to close its doors, liquidate and go out of business, some of you—the people—would suffer.

On the contrary, mutual trust and co-operation can make of us a strong, a powerful influence for good in the community.

And in proportion that you are greater than the L. & N. you will be benefited.

Every grade on the road should be reduced, every curve should be straightened, every tie kept sound, every rail made secure, in order that you, the people, will get the best transportation possible to be had.

Depots should be cool in summer and warm in winter—clean at all times; coaches should be well lighted at night, clean and well ventilated at all times. Engines should be powerful, fast and safe. Employees should be considerate and polite.

These are things for which we are constantly striving, and you—the people—can help us, and by helping us help yourselves.

Remember, in spite of our rules and discipline we have among our employees, just as there are among you, the even-tempered and the irascible, the happy natured and the grouch. They must come into contact with men, women and children; the old and the newly-born; the white and black; the halt, the lame and the blind, the decrepit, the exuberant, the drunk, the sober, the well-behaved, and the tough.

Remember, in the transportation of freight we handle mllions of consignments; the carload lot and the small package; the shipments from Bombay and Birmingham; the freight from Mandalay and Montgomery.

We need your help in our effort to render satisfactory service to all sorts and conditions of human beings in our freight and passenger departments.

MR. GILLESPIE'S REPLY TO MR. J. F. GOODGAME

Clanton, Ala., August 17.

Editor Union-Banner: If you will kindly permit me, through the columns of your paper, I would like to reply to the personalities cast upon me in last weeks issue of the Clanton Press by Mr. J. F. Goodgame.

I wish to call the attention of the people to my letter in the Union-Banner of July 30, and ask if Mr. Goodgame answered the things I stated in that letter. I think everyone will agree that my letter was written in a broad and general sense and not narrow and personal. But Mr. Goodgame failed to see it that way, and in attempting to answer it he directly poured his "hot shot" of personalities upon me.

I wish to say that I am in favor of good roads and believe the county should spend as much money each year on the public roads of the county as they can spare. However I am opposed to the issuance of warrants and involving the county in debt, as I believe such practice is against the best interests of the county, and against the wishes of at least 80 per cent of the people of the county. I do not take this stand because it affects me so much personally, but because I believe it better for the masses of the people of the county.

However I am not surprised at Mr. Goodgame coming out for the issuance of the warrants and for the Democratic ticket, since I heard some time ago that he was saying that the people out in the county were not competent to decide what they need, and that the warrants should be issued even if the majority of the people was against it, and the highway built. This seems to be the policy of the democratic party in this county, and no wonder you have decided to cast your lot with them, since you have decided that just a few men in Clanton were the only people in the county who were competent to say what the people needs.

He says that he knows three men who pay large taxes, in favor of warrants; does he take this as evidence that the warrants should be issued without further question of the people? Is the democratic party going to depend on these three men to elect their ticket? I do not care who these three men are nor what they are worth, I am not in favor of them dictating what is best for the people. I believe that the people should have the right to say for themselves what they want, and not be run over by two or three in Clanton.

Do you believe in any three men dictating to the people of this county what to to do? Does the man whom you are supporting for Sheriff believe as you do in running over the wishes of the people and not giving them a chance to say what they want? Is it fair for the Democrats of this county to put the county in debt over the wishes of the people? It seems from your letter and from your talk that you do not believe that a poor man in this county should have any voice at all in the management of the county affairs. Is this true and isn't this about the way the democrats run things when they are in power? Does your man for sheriff believe on these questions as you do? He surely does, or you would not be advocating them and his cause in the same letter.

W. H. Gillespie.

Teachers Institute

The most successful Institute that has yet been held in Chilton county closed Friday, Aug. 14. Ninety-four teachers were enrolled. The conductors were Prof. T. W. Smith, Rural Supervisor of the Montgomery county schools, and Miss Rosa Strickland of the Birmingham Teacher Training School. The teachers of the county were highly pleased with their condutors. Prof. Smith is an excellent instructor to explain what he wishes others to know. Then, too, he is so practical in having the teachers to do the actual work. Miss Strickland has very few superiors in making people think for themselves; she ranks as one of the best assistant conductors sent out by the state department of Education.

Among the prominent features of the Institue were the emphasis placed on Vocational Training and the eminently practical nature of the work presented. At three o'clock each afternoon the men adjourned to the nearby shops for manual training work, and the ladies turned their attention to sewing and cooking. At the close of the Institute the products of the manual training work formed a very interesting exhibit. The work acomplished by the ladies in cooking and sewing stands out as one of the most important features of the week's work. The value of the work given by the conductors in the above subjects will no doubt be like "seed sown in good ground."

Mrs. Helen G. Marshall, Red cross Nurse for Chilton county, addressed the teachers several times on the importance of improving sanitary conditions. At the close of the Institute a resolution approving her work was unanimously adopted.

On Tuesday night the people of Clanton joined the teachers in a very interesting social gathering and on Thursday night an old fashioned spelling bee was held, which created much enthusiasm and brought out a large crowd. Several prizes were offered for the best spellers. The folowing ladies received prizes: Miss Ruby Downs, grand prize; Miss Rilla Smith, prize 1; Mrs. Duncan, prize 2; Mrs. Adams, prize 3; Miss Martha Jane Mims, prize 4; Mrs. Lela Mullins, prize 5. The following gentlemen received prizes: S. H. Herbert, grand prize; H. L. Davis, prize 1; J. J. Mims, prize 2; F. H. Chappelle prize 3; F. B. Williams, prize 4; J. J. Pickens, prize 5. The spelling bee was by no means a small feature of the institute.

During the Institute, Prof. E. W. Wright of the State Normal School of Troy, delivered an interesting address on the science of Teaching. He brought out many interesting thoughts as well as created laughter at many of his humorous sayings.

The Institute adopted resolutions favoring compulsory education, consolidation of rural schools, local taxation with the the county as a unit, school Improvement Associations, boys and girls corn and tomato clubs.

Prof. S. H. Herbert will be President of the Reading Circle next year and Mr. W. M. Bean, Secretary; and Mr. J. L. Johnson, President of the School Improvement Association, and Mr. J. L. Harris, Secretary.

An excellent and co-operative spirit dominated during the entire Institute. Much favorable comment was heard on every hand of the most excellent and practical work that was done both by the conductors and the teachers. Thus the teachers who attended went home with many valuable suggestions on Vocational Training, teaching grammar, telling interesting stories to pupils, opening exercises, community pride, citizenship etc.

Progressives To Have Speakings

There will be speakings in the interest of the Progressive ticket at the following times and places:

Providence Beat 16, 7 p.m. Wednesday, Aug. 26.

Maple Springs, Beat 4, 7 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 27.

The following speakers will address the people at the above named times and places: Judge L. H. Reynolds, Hon. P. E. Alexander, Prof. J. W. Moore and Prof. W. T. Bean. Some of the above named speakers will speak at the places named above.

The Democrats are hereby invited to meet in joint debate at any or all the above named places, provided they will give our Chairman two days notice of the time and place, that they intend to meet us and who their speaker will be.

Other speakings will be announced next week.

All persons regardless of political affiliations are cordially invited to attend these meetings. The ladies are especially invited to come.

M. D. Foshee,
Chairman Progressive Campaign Committee.

Singing Convention

The Chilton County Singing Convention will be held at Shilo church near South Calera, 1st, Sunday in September and Saturday before. Books used will be Sacred Harp and Christian Harmony. People coming by rail will get off at South Calera. Those wishing to be met will notify W. F. Armstrong, Calera, Alabama R. F. D. We are expecting several visitors at this session, among them we expect Miss Jackson the far famed director of the Birmingham class.

T. C. Jackson President, Z. J. Jones Secretary.

Mt. Pleasant

The Press accuses The Union-Banner of being the watch dog over the county treasury. We will suggest for the Press man to act as watch dog over the State treasury, and he could also do some good watching over in Cullman county over some of his Democratic friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Jim Price of near Mt. Carmel spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Lonnie Price.

Mr. G. D. Melton made a business trip to Alexander City last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Manning of Mulberry spent one night last week with Mr. and Mrs. Lee Vickers.

Mr. Bentley Dupriest is in Birmingham this week on business.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Lewis spent Saturday night with the latters parents Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Hawkins near Cooper.

Mr. and Mrs. Edd Woodfin and mother spent part of last week with Rev. W. C. Woodfin.

Mr. Kernie Scroggins recently made a trip to Birmingham.

Mr. Silas Kelley and son John T. have just returned from a visit to relatives near Rockford.

Mrs. J. A. Crawford and children of Shelby spent part of last week with her sister Mrs. G. H. Massey.

Mr. J. P. Thomas and family visited near Cooper Saturday and Sunday.

Mrs. Ama Zinnerman of Birmingham is visiting friends here.

Mr. W. J. Blankenship and family were visitors at Mr. E. J. Evans last Wednesday night.

Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Duke were visitors at Mr. W. J. Morris Sunday.

Mr. A. D. Low has just returned from Birmingham.

Mr. W. A. Dozier recently visited in Elmore County.

Al Jennings the reformed bandit who made a good race for Governor of Oklahoma in the Democratic Primary says that he was counted out and he is going to carry the election to the courts so that the fraud can be exposed. And Jennings says that there were gross frauds, that he concede the nomination of nobody, and that he is going to put some of the election officers, where he once was—behind the bars.

If the Press man would look after such as the above is in his own party, he wouldn't have so much time to look after the other fellow. From Democratic reports such things exist in the Democratic party of Ala.

Mr. and Mrs. Jim Bailey of Coosa is visiting at Mr. J. A. Lewis.

Resolutions Of Interest

To Every citizen of the county—Adopted by Teachers Institute

The Committee on Resolutions appointed by the Chilton County Teachers' Institute reported the following Resolutions:

1. We hereby express to our County Supt., Prof. W. T. Bean, our highest appreciation and heartiest thanks for his kindness and fairness manifested to the teachers of the county during the year.

2. We believe that the teachers Institute, as at present conducted, is of incalculable value to all who are teachers, or hope to be; but we believe that its value would be increased if it were held during the school term, and we believe the teachers should be paid for the time spent in attending.

3. We urge our legislature to change the school year so that it will begin July 1st, thus making it possible for teachers to make contracts before school begins. (This will necessitate some other changes, such as the election of Trustees in March, etc.)

4. We believe our Districts should be consolidated, instead of being further divided; and to that end we urge our Legislature to pass a law allowing a certain amount of public school funds to be used for the transportation of pupils in cases where Districts can be consolidated to advantage. We urge our county board to make no further division of Districts, but to plan for consolidation.

5. We urge our legislature to pass a law making some State funds available for the equipment of rural schools.

6. Realizing the necessity of an education for the masses of the people, we ask the Legislature to pass a Compulsory Attendance Law.

7. We favor the elimination of all but two of the white Normal Schools. We favor the abolition of the District Agricultural Schools as such, believing that no distinctive agricultural school will be needed if our County High Schools become increasingly Agricultural High Schools. We believe that the Fertilizer tag Tax should be appropriated to the rural schools.

8. We urge the adoption of a Constitutional amendment providing greater revenue for school purposes, and we suggest the following provisions: A state tax of five mills; a county tax not to exceed three mills, levied by vote of the people of the county; a District tax for construction, repairs and equipment to be levied by vote of the people of the District.

We heartily approve of the course of study outlined by the Teachers Reading Circle, and pledge ourselves to adopt said course.

10. Whereas, our efficient county board of education has token steps to secure the adoption of the Reading Circle course,

Be it resolved, that we endorse such action of said Board as will require the presentation of a Reading Circle Certificate with the last monthly report for the school year beginning Oct. 1, 1914.

11. We wish to go on record as favoring a more complete and systematic organization of the teachers of Chilton county.

12. We, the teachers of Chilton county, pledge ourselves to organize at least one agricultural club and a School Improvement Association in our respective communities during the next school year.

13. We favor the elimination of all High School subjects from one and two room schools, believing that the teaching of such subjects in these schools can only be done by robbing the smaller children of the teacher's time which belongs to them. We believe that the consolidation of Districts and larger revenue for school purposes will make possible the placing of at least a Junior High School within reach of every country boy or girl.

14. We believe no teacher can do his best work in a community during his first year, and therefore, we urge our District Trustees and our teachers to work for longer terms of service.

15. We express our gratification at the fact that our county has secured a County High School, and that the building is in course of construction, and we hope for mutual co-operation between the teachers of the county and the County High School in the upbuilding of the public school system of the county. We request that our next Institute be held in the County High School building.

16. We endorse the action of the county board of education and the Commissioners court in helping to secure the service of a Red Cross Nurse for Chilton county, and we urge every teacher in the county to co-operate heartily in the movement for better health.

17. We wish to thank the Sheriff for his generous service in cleaning up the court room for the Spelling Bee.

18. We are much indebted to the good people of Clanton for their generous hospitality while in their midst, and especially to Mrs. James Middleton and others who assisted in entertaining us so splendidly at the social; to Mrs. Johnson for opening her home for the cooking demonstration, to the blacksmith shops and planing mill for furnishing places for the work of the Manual Traing Classes, the business men for their generosity in providing so generously for the cost of the Social and the prizes for the Spelling Bee.

We wish especially to thank Mr. J. J. Pickens and his efficient committees for their untiring efforts which contributed so largely to the success of the Institute, Social and the Spelling Bee.

We feel further indebted to Miss Rosa Strickland and Mr. T. W. Smith for their faithfullness in conducting the Institute, and to the visitors who added to its pleasure and value, for we feel that this has been the most successful Institute yet held in the county. Signed:

S. H. Herbert, Chm.,
Lottie Johnson, Secy.,
Committee on Resolutions.

The Chairman of the Committee would be glad to receive from readers of this paper any comments on the Resolutions as adopted. The desire in drawing up the Resolutions was not to express the feelings of the Committee, but of the body of teachers as a whole.

PROHIBITION FIGHT IS ON

STANDING COMMITTEES TO BE APPOINTED—FACTIONAL IS PROMISED.

AT THE STATE'S CAPITAL

Interesting News Budget of Happenings in Various Departments of State.

—Montgomery.

Interest in the next legislature now centers in a dispute about the authority to appoint standing committees of the senate. Thomas E. Kilby, lieutenant governor-to-be, and prohibitionist, claims he has authority to name the committees. Local optionists maintain the president pro tem is the person clothed with such prerogative. Mr. Kilby says he will appoint the committees and local optionists say he will not. Thus has the fight begun.

Each side is backed by precedents. When the new constitution was adopted in 1901 Russell M. Cunningham was lieutenant governor. He contended that the distinction between executive and legislative departments of government should be maintained and for that reason would not appoint standing committees. This duty passed into the hands of the president pro tem.

Henry B .Gray succeeded Mr. Cunningham as lieutenant governor. He attacked the former position and won. Standing committees were appointed by him, and in order to make certain that they were legal the senate adopted a resolution ratifying his action. This gave prohibitionists the precedent they are relying upon now.

Walter D. Seed, a member of the same political faith as Gray, was elected lieutenant governor, but he made no fight to maintain the position of his predecessor, and Hugh Morrow, president pro tem, named the committees. The senate then adopted a rule providing that the president pro tem shall appoint standing committes.

This rule is still a senate provision, and says: "The president pro tem of the senate shall appoint the chairmen and members of the standing committees, and he shall appoint all other committees of the senate, both special and joint." But this rule is for the senate which will no longer exist after November. Each senate has power to make its own rules and regulations, and has authority to disregard any former action.

The question is purely for consideration of the senate. If prohibitionists control Lieutenant Governor Kilby will appoint. If they do not, the president pro tem will select the personnel of committees. Local optionists realize that all may be gained while nothing can be lost. If they don't fight they know one of an opposite political belief will select committees that best serve the cause he represents. They have convinced themselves that they have a majority in the senate and that they will elect a president pro tem.

Rains Improve Crops.

Good rains during the past week and a general improvement in the cotton crop are reported in the weekly summary of weather and crop conditions issued by the weather bureau.

The report states, however, that the complaints of rust and shedding are considerable. The report follows:

"In the cotton states east of the Mississippi river, good rains caused general improvement and the cotton crop progressed satisfactory. Early planted cotton is opening rapidly and picking has begun, but somewhat delayed in some portions by rainy weather.

"There are considerable complaints of rust and shedding. West of the Mississippi river beneficial showers occurred in Arkansas and Louisiana and the crop made satisfactory progress. In most of Oklahoma the weather has continued dry. Early planted cotton made some progress, but late planted deteriorated. Heavy rains broke the drought in Texas, and the outlook is much improved.

In Executive Session.

Members of the state railroad commission are in executive sess.on in connection with some matters of the department. Secretary Sam P. Kennedy said the nature of the meeting would be given out later. It was believed at the capitol that the meeting had to do with the question of adjusting freight rates on the Louisville and Nashville railroad.

Artillerymen Break Camp.

Members of the three batteries of artillery, which have been in camp in Mobile have broken camp and the officers and men have returned to their respective homes. One of the batteries is located in Montgomery and the other two are stationed at Birmingham. According to word received at the Office of Adjutant General Joseph Scully, the camp has been a successful one in every respect. The artillery camp was under command of Major I. S. Dorrance of Birmingham.

Capitol Practically Deserted.

Governor O'Neal, W. F. Feagin, state superintendent of education; W. S. Keller, state highway engineer; Dr. W. H. Oates, state prison inspector; Adjutant General Joseph B. Scully, Capt. Rueben F. Kolb, commissioner of agriculture; Lee Cowart, commissioner of immigration; John Mooring, chairman of state tax commission, two or three supreme court justices and several other state officials are absent from the capitol and as a consequence there is little doing at the state house outside of transaction of routine business.

Pythian Home Certain.

The committee named by the grand lodge of Knights of Pythias last May to investigate the feasibility of establishing a Pythian widows' and orphans' home in Alabama and to receive proposals for the location, will meet in Birmingham early in September to adopt final plans for subission to the next grand lodge, according to the announcement of Grand Chancellor L. G. Waldrop of Anniston here.

Four of the 13 Pythian district conventions which have met thus far have unanimously endorsed the movement. The Chambers of Commerce of Gadsden, Anniston, and Montgomery have submitted tentative propositions in an effort to obtain the home. The committee is composed of Jacob D. Bloch, Mobile; Herman Beck, Birmingham, and A. G. Patterson, Decatur.

Incorporation Papers Filed.

Articles of incorporation were filed in the office of Cyrus B. Brown, secretary of state, by six Alabama corporations. The Southern Mining and Milling company of Tuscumbia was the largest company formed, its capital being $100,000, of which $50,000 is paid in. This company will engage in the mining business in Colbert and other North Alabama counties. H. W. Green, E. W. Bishop and others are the incorporators.

Other companies incorporated were the Marengo Cotton Oil company of Faunsdale, capital stock $7500; the Branchville Bottling Works, Branchville, $2000; Spiro and Merrill Heating and Roofing Company, Birmingham, $7000; Dallas Cotton Gin Company, Selma, $1770, and the Pickens County Land and Development Company, Carrollton, $1000.

Take up Montgomery Tax Cases.

The state tax commission will go over the heads of county boards of revenue that refuse to docket cases of tax assessments brought by county tax commissianers, according to John S. Mooring, chairman, who declared that the commission will take up Montgomery county cases which the county board of revenue refused to consider.

The refusal of the Montgomery county board of revenue to take up the cases brought before it by Tax Commissioner Frank Peabody will have no effect on the ultimate action of the state commission, Mr. Mooring said. As soon as its work in other parts of the state is finished the work in Montgomery will be taken up.

K. of K. Committee to Meet.

Announcement of the findings of a special Knights of Pythias committee, appointed to determine the feasibility of establishing a widows' and orphans' home in Alabama, will be made at a meeting of the committee in September. E. G. Waldrop, grand chancellor of the order, made this statement here.

Montgomery, Gadsden and Anniston have made application for the home. It is expected that other towns will make application.

Oil Painting for State.

An oil painting of Judge Alexander Clitheral, register of the treasury of the Confederacy, was presented to the state department of archives and history by Judge J. J. Willett of Anniston. Judge Willett's father was a law partner of Judge Clitheral at one time. The painting has been in the Willett family more than 50 years.

New Bank at Berry:

Organization of a second bank at Berry, in Fayette county, has been announced in an application from J. C. Shepherd, a merchant of that place and one of the organizers. The application was forwarded to the state banking department.

Gen. F. S. Ferguson Returns Home.

Montgomery.—General Fred S. Ferguson, special master of the State Pension Board, left for Birmingham where he will remain for some time. The annual meeting of the State Board was scheduled, but because of the illness of Captain John C. Webb, of Demopolis, chairman, it was postponed until later. At the meeting the Board will consider the applications for pensions filed by more than 1,100 persons.

COTTON CONGRESS O. K'S. WINGO BILL

RELIEF PLANS ARE ADOPTED

Committee Instructed to Co-operate with Authorities—Crop Curtailment Urged—Ask Growers to Get 12½c on Middlings.

Washington.—The Southern Cotton Congress, after indorsing various plans for relief in the cotton market crisis resulting from the European war, authorized committees to co-operate with federal and state authorities in their efforts to enable planters to secure a fair price for the present crop.

After indorsing the work so far done by southern representatives in congress in the matter of furnishing transportation for the export trade, and providing currency to finance the crop, the congress indorsed a bill introduced in the house by Representative Wingo of Arkansas, authorizing the issuance of federal reserve notes on cotton.

Later the report from the resolutions committee was adopted, outlining a plan to meet the entire situation. This provided for the appointment of a committee of five members to cooperate with congress, the treasury department and the federal reserve board, to seek means of "financing and marketing the crop without unnecessary loss to the farmer."

It urged the federal reserve board and the secretary of the treasury to place $300,000,000 in the banks of the south on the basis of the cotton produced i neach state. It then proposed that every farmer should have the right to go to his bank and secure a loan on notes maturing in six months, but renewable for six months, secured by his cotton, on one-half of the crop he raised, to 80 per cent of the value of the cotton, based on the average price for the last five years. These notes, the report recommended, should be made rediscountable in the federal reserve banks.

CARBAJAL IS AT VERA CRUZ

Vera Cruz.—The retiring provisional president of Mexico, Francisco Carbajal, arrived here by special train.

Senor Carbajal was received at the station by a few personal friends and by Brig-Gen. Funston, accompanied by two staff officers. Only a small percentage of the population had learned that Senor Carbajal was on his way here. Even his friends were notified only at the last moment.

It is understood Senor Carbajal will embark on the steamer Marie Cristina, due to sail for Spain. Discussing events in the capital, Senor Carbajal said:

"I am confident there will be no further difficulty. I do not anticipate a continued conflict. I have faith that the constitutionalists will maintain order."

Senor Carbajal's assurance that the federal army evacuating Mexico City had no intention of crowding into Vera Cruz brought distinct relief to American army headquarters. The problem of caring for them would have been embarrassing, it is said.

THROUGH CANAL IN 8 HOURS

This Will Probably Be the Average Time for Ships—Record Set by Cristobal.

Washington.—The first steamship to pass through the Panama canal—the Cristobal—made the trip from the Atlantic to the Pacific in eleven and a half hours.

The return trip, however, was made in eight and a half hours, which probably marks the average time that will be consumed by merchantmen, when all of the machinery of the canal is in smooth operation.

It is reported that everything is in perfect order for the formal opening of the canal, when the Ancon, sister ship to the Cristobal, belonging to the Panama Canal Railway company and of 9,606 tons, will make the official trial trip.

Disposes of Wild Story.

San Francisco.—The arrival at Victoria of the British sloop-of-war Shearwater in convoy of the cruiser Rainbow clears up the naval situation on this coast. It is now positive that the flotsam cast up outside Golden Gate was woodwork jettisoned by the Rainbow when she cleared for action.

Nordica's Will Filed.

New York.—A copy of the will of Lillian Nordica, the singer, who died last May, provides that her entire estate, value not stated, except for bequests aggregating $36,000, be divided among her three sisters.

Bonds For Security.

Washington.—Senator John Sharp Williams of Mississippi has introduced a bill to authorize the secretary of the treasury to accept the bonds of certain cities as security for crop moving deposits.

ELLIOTT MARSHALL

Elliott Marshall, a prominent lawyer of New York and New Jersey, and worth $500,000, whose strange disappearance is mystifying the police of many cities.

WILSON ORDERS PRICE PROBE

Would Punish Any Who Artificially Manipulate Food Prices — War Taken as Pretext.

Washington.—President Wilson set the machinery of the federal government in motion to determine whether the cost of living is being increased "upon the pretext of the conditions existing in Europe." He called upon Attorney-General McReynolds to report if criminal prosecutions were warranted, and if any new law were necessary. The president may send a special message to congress in the latter event.

"Certainly the country ought to be defended," the president wrote to the attorney-general, "if possible, against men who would take advantage of such circumstances to increase the price of food and the difficulties of living."

Attorney-General McReynolds at once set at work the bureau of investigation of the department of justice, with hundreds of agents throughout the country. Agents of the department of commerce also were started upon the inquiry and Secretary Redfield conferred with Secretary Houston of the department of agriculture.

Within a few hours from the time the president acted three of the executive departments of the government were moving to learn the cause of the soaring prices of food throughout the country.

Some officials who believe the great proposition of price increases have no connection whatever with the European war, but are the result of manipulations, attempts at corners of individual efforts of the dealers, contend that the "conspiracy" section of the Sherman law covers the situation. Attorney-General McReynolds, however, will give an opinion on that feature to the president later.

BAILEY TO TRY FOR SENATE

El Paso, Texas.—Former United States Senator Joseph W. Bailey will be a candidate for the senate in 1916, according to his announcement at the state democratic convention here.

Mr. Bailey was defending his three platform resolutions denouncing national prohibition and national woman suffrage and demanding legislation to limit campaign expenses. He said that if the resolutions were defeated he would take the issue before the people of Texas as a candidate for senator. The resolutions were rejected—645 to 107.

PERMIT PURCHASE OF SHIPS

Conferees of House and Senate Agree on Measure Regarding Foreign-Built Ships.

Washington.—Opening of United States coastwise trade to foreign built vessels admitted to American registry during the next two years, under the pending Panama canal act amendment, was agreed upon by the house and senate conferees. All such proposals have been fought by shipping and shipbuilding interests, and presentation of the conference report is expected to precipitate vigorous opposition.

Foodstuffs Go Abroad.

Philadelphia.—Three trans-Atlantic steamers flying the British flag sailed from Philadelphia for English ports, carrying more than a half million bushels of wheat and other foodstuffs.

Wheelers at Hull.

London.—Post Wheeler, recently appointed secretary of the American embassy at Tokyo, and Mrs. Wheeler, who were compelled to turn back at Berlin while on their way to Japan, arrived at Hull from Copenhagen, accompanied by 30 stranded Americans.

Stranded Americans Relieved.

Geneva.—Secretary of State Bryan advised Pleasant A. Stovall, the American minister, that he had deposited $50,000 gold in a New York bank to help Americans.

JAPAN SENDS ULTIMATUM

LOOKS LIKE WHOLE EASTERN HEMISPHERE WILL GET ENVOLVED

ULTIMATUM IN FULL SENT

Papan Minister Says American Interests Will Be Safeguarded.

Japan sent an ultimatum to Germany demanding the withdrawal of German warships from the Orient and the evacuation of Kiau-Chau.

Takaaki Kato, Japanese foreign minister, simultaneously with the dispatch of the ultimatum, conferred with George W. Guthrie, American ambassador, and made to him a broad statement calculated to assure the United States that American interest in the far east would be safeguarded and the integrity of China upheld.

Owing to doubts whether communications with Berlin were assured, Japan, to insure the arrival of the ultimatum, forwarded it to Berlin by six channels, including Washington, London and Stockholm. The government also notified Count Von Rex, German ambassador to Japan, and likewise retarded the time limit for a reply until August 23.

The Ultimatum Issued by Japan.

"We consider it highly important and necessary in the present situation to take steps to relieve the causes of all disturbances of the peace in the far east and to safeguard the general interests as contemplated by the agreement of an alliance between Japan and Great Britain.

"In order to secure a firm and enduring peace in eastern Asia, the establishment of which is the aim of the said agreement, the imperial Japanese government sincerely believes it to be its duty to give the advice to the imperial German government to carry out the following two propositions:

"1. To withdraw immediately from Japanese and Chinese waters German men of war and armed vessels of all kinds, and to disarm at once those which cannot be so withdrawn.

"2. To deliver on a date not later than September 15 to the imperial Japanese authorities without condition or compensation the entire leased territory of Kiau-Chau, with a view to the eventual restoration of the same to China.

"The imperial Japanese government announced at the same time that in the event of it not receiving by noon on August 23, 1914, an answer from the imperial German government signifying its unconditional acceptance of the above advice offered by the imperial Japanese government Japan will be compelled to take such action as she may deem necessary to meet the situation."

News of Ultimatum in Washington.

Washington.—The Japanese ambassador, Baron Chinda, delivered to Secretary Bryan the written announcement of Japan that an ultimatum had been addressed to Germany, requesting the latter's withdrawal from her field of activity in China.. At the same time he communicated Japan's assurances to the United States that the utmost endeavor would be exercised to safeguard interests of this country and all others not immediately concerned in the present operations.

The United States, it became known after Baron Chinda's call on Mr. Bryan, does not intend to be drawn in any way into the controversy, regarding it as a matter purely between Germany and Japan.. The American government considers satisfactory the promise of Japan of "eventual restoration to China" of the territory of Kaiu Chau.

Battle in Adriatic Sea.

"A naval battle between French and Austrian warships took place off Budua, Austria, in the Adriatic. The French squadron, coming from the southwest, attacked the Austrian warships. Two Austrian ironclads were sunk, one was set on fire, and a fourth fled northward toward Cattaro. The fight lasted over an hour."

Aliens Cannot Be Taken

Washington.—In answer to many appeals for information from naturalized citizens and foreign residents as to conditions under which they may be returned to their native lands for military service, Secretary Bryan today issued a statement saying the United States was not a party to any treatise under which such persons might be compelled to return for military service and saying there was no way in which they might be forced to join the armies so long as they remain in the United States.

Panama.—The United States War Department Steamship Ancon made the trip through the Panama Canal, and transit through the waterway is now officially open to the traffic of the world. The Ancon left her berth at Cristobal at seven o'clock this morning and made her way to the end o fthe deep water channel from the Atlantic to the Gatum Locks. She went through the locks in seventy minutes and then continued through the waterway from deep water on the Atlantic to deep water on the Pacific side, without incident.

HYMN BEFORE ACTION

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

The earth is full of anger,
The seas are dark with wrath,
The nations in their harness
Go up against our path;
Ere yet we loose the legions—
Ere yet we draw the blade,
Jehovah of the Thunders,
Lord God of Battles, aid!

High lust and forward bearing,
Proud heart, rebellious brow—
Deaf ear and soul uncaring,
We seek Thy mercy now!
The sinner that forswore Thee,
The fool that passed Thee by,
Our times are known before Thee—
Lord, grant us strength to die!

From panic, pride, and terror
Revenge that knows no rein,
Light haste and lawless error,
Protect us yet again.
Cloak Thou our undeserving,
Make firm the shuddering breath,
In silence and unswerving
To taste Thy lesser death!

E'en now their vanguard gathers,
E'en now we face the fray—
As Thou didst help our fathers,
Help Thou our host today!
Fulfilled of signs and wonders,
In life, in death made clear—
Jehovah of the Thunders,
Lord God of Battles, hear!

LIBAU VITAL POINT

If the bombardment of Libau by a German warship was effective, then Russia was certainly wounded in one of her most important naval strategic positions. To Russia Libau is a port of very great concern and one that normally in time of war should be of prime importance to her, especially in the winter time.

St. Petersburg is substantially ice-bound for months each year. This is the reason for Libau's military significance. This Baltic city lies far enough south of the capital to be substantially an open port the year round, and by a moderate use of an ice breaker continuous intercourse by sea is maintained the winter through by vessels running to Germany, England and the United States. In fact, Libau is the home port for the Russian volunteer fleet whose ships enter New York.

Originally Libau offered poor inducements for either a naval base or a commercial port, the town lying upon a stretch of low sandy coast directly exposed to the sweep of the Baltic gales, while the water off shore deepened so gradually that its shallowness induced a very nasty sort of sea. However, it was a matter of necessity and money was not allowed to count.

Accordingly, the Russian authorities adopted heroic measures and set about the building of an artificial harbor. With characteristic extravagance the work was started and carried through in the face of many difficulties.

Today Libau boasts two harbors, one military, the other commercial, and both lie behind a great breakwater more than four miles long, pierced by two narrow and heavily guarded entrances. Once inside of that shelter a very large fleet can anchor securely no matter how hard it may blow in the Baltic without. It was there that Admiral Rozhdestvensky assembled his ships before setting out for the far East and the fateful battle of Tsushima.

Breakwaters are commonly built of big masses of piled rock capped with a topping of cut stone. But ordinary practice was out of the question at Libau, and the engineers were soon face to face with a serious difficulty. Rocks were scarce in that sandy region, and even small stones could be gathered only by dint of a good deal of searching.

To overcome the dearth of desirable material of nature's making and to avoid the impracticable alternative of bringing rock overland by very inadequate rail facilities, it was decided to fashion monster blocks of concrete, weighing 30 tons apiece, out of the readily available sand. In this way millions of dollars were spent in the producing of artificial stone, and these enormous units were dumped upon the bed of the Baltic until they reached above the water's surface.

For some years Libau has been the prime Baltic center for Russia's submarine flotillas and an instructional base for these craft. Indeed, the admiralty has been engaged for some years in working out a general system of submarine defence for the Baltic, and any grave damage to the port will seriously affect her strategic program for those waters.

Although bombarded by the Germans, it is doubtful if any material damage has been done the navy yard, and the destruction of the town, unlike the hidden naval basin and docks, would not hamper the port in a military sense.

It must not be forgotten that Libau is naturally an important railway terminal, with lines running both back toward the Russian-German frontier and up along the coast to the other Baltic ports, with a northern terminal at St. Petersburg. For purposes of supply it is therefore of the greatest concern to Russia to hold the harbor of Libau open to her shipping and to other craft bringing her contraband. The German attack was logical, but it is yet to be learned whether or not the results were conclusive. If so, the kaiser has scored heavily against the czar should the present struggle run on into the winter months.

Modern Wars Are Short.

The more modern the war the shorter it is apt to be, especially when only central Europe is involved. For example (in actual fighting): Austro-Prussian war of 1866, seven weeks; Franco-Prussian war of 1870, a month; the present war, ——?

THEIR GOLD HIDDEN

Unguessable Quantity of Coin and Bullion Buried in the Ground—Nations' War Chests Estimated to Contain $2,000,000,000.

European authorities figured that when the Balkan war began and there was dread among the common people of Europe that a general war might result, nearly $350,000,000 in gold was hoarded in three countries in sums ranging from a gold piece or two up to tens of thousands of dollars. Austria-Hungary was credited with hiding away $150,000,000, Germany $65,000,000 and France $130,000,000.

This was money which had been traced into those countries just before the Balkan hostilities began and after war started. In addition to this vast sum there was an unguessable quantity of gold already buried in the ground.

Russia is believed to have tens of thousands of hoarders of money. It is utterly impossible to guess at the amount of gold which the people of Russia have put into the ground or into the cellars of their homes. The sign of wealth would mean the coming of the tax collector, and among the men who look poor are owners of immense weight in gold.

Vast sums of gold and silver coin have gone into Russia, which seldom lets go of it. The great imperial war chest has behind it, if the signs mean anything, other sums in little war chests—gold which the government might draw out if it offered lands for sale, or bonds the people would trust, or opportunities in commerce heretofore denied them.

England has its hidden hoards, no one knows how large or how many, but there is concealed in England nothing like the amount that is hidden in continental Europe, where foreign armies have only to cross a surveyed boundary line or a little creek to raid their enemies. Turkey, whose people have been terrorized for ages, has more lost hoards than the world will ever know about, because there the hoarding has gone on for ages, during which armies have swung up and down the denuded lands, tearing down cities and destroying everything that could give comfort or sustenance to an enemy.

Spain has millions of dollars in gold, silver, pearls and gems buried and lost in a thousand ancient castles, monasteries and other public buildings. In the heyday of her glory Spain imported countless millions of gold and silver from the Americas and faithless officials made away with great sums in bullion, hiding it away—and many of them never recovered it.

India is the bottomless pit of the world's gold. In one year India imported $300,000,000, and there has never been a time, apparently, when India was not importing gold, silver and precious jewels. In the temples of India there are said to be $1,800,000,000 in precious metal and precious stones.

If the hoards of Europe could be tapped—if the hidden treasures of European cities should be tapped by invading armies—the possibilities of loot in jewels and precious metals are beyond compute. But all the loot possible would not compensate for the hundreds of thousands of ounces of gold which must be paid each day for army sustenance and equipment. In olden times wars paid for themselves, reckoning from the viewpoint of the victors. Wars were then for loot.

The war chests of Europe are supposed to contain about $2,000,000,000 in gold coin and bullion. What possibilities of loot this indicates is in some measure understandable when one considers that this means about 50,000 tons of yellow metal—and no mention is made of the bushels of diamonds, rubies, pearls and gems also in peril.

RUSSIA RICHEST OF ALL.

Of all the nations involved in this European war probability, Russia is the only independent one. She has gold mines in Siberia and not a pennyweight of that gold ever gets out of Russia. It is all in the gold vaults of the empire. Russia doesn't have to borrow money for her war. She is the only nation of Europe that does not. Furthermore, Russia has food for her great army. She is the only nation that has. That is to say, she has claimed that she has the money, and has the wheat. This war will test the truth of her claims.—Birmingham Ledger.

"And why not?"

"For one thing, each one would stop in a hot engagement to powder her nose."

Unreasonable.

George Bernard Shaw is one of the few vegetarians who have remained true to the faith, and in a recent letter to a woman, reproaching her for her fight against the aigrette when she still ate meat, Mr. Shaw said:

"The lack of logic prevails everywhere! We call the tiger a ferocious and ravaging beast, but what would you ladies be called if, for example, the lamb chop had a voice?"

Well Meant.

On one occasion when the king and queen of Great Britain visited together very elaborate preparations were made for their reception.

The city was lavishly decorated and one enterprising tradesman, desiring to display his loyalty, has the words, "Heaven bless them both!" outlined in paper flowers across the front of his shop. Unfortunately he forgot to remove a large business sign that was just above.

The result read:

"Ham and beef sandwiches."

"Heaven bless them both!"

DISAPPEARED
Coffee Ails Vanish Before Postum.

It seems almost too good to be true, the way headache, nervousness, insomnia, and many other obscure troubles vanish when coffee is dismissed and Postum used as the regular table beverage.

The reason is clear. Coffee contains a poisonous drug—caffeine—which causes the trouble, but Postum contains only the food elements in choice hard wheat with a little molasses.

"Until 18 months ago I used coffee regularly every day and suffered from headache, bitter taste in my mouth, and indigestion; was gloomy and irritable, had variable or absent appetite, loss of flesh, depressed in spirits, etc.

"I attribute these things to coffee, because since I quit it and have drank Postum I feel better than I had for 20 years, am less susceptible to cold, have gained 20 lbs. and the symptoms have disappeared—vanished before Postum."

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

THE UNION-BANNER

UNION PUBLISHING CO.

We ask the Clanton Press to explain whether or nor the Democrats in the state have any platform, and what they intend to do if elected in November.

We have a candidate for Governor of Alabama whom we all know stands for licker; we have another who stands flat footed against it; we have still another who doesn't stand for anything. Now take your choice.—Collinsville Courier.

Look out for the speaking dates in the interest of the Progressive party in Chilton county. The announcements appear in this paper. Read them and go to the speakings. You will learn some things you need to know.

We wanted to make some comments on the resolutions adopted by the teachers institute last week, but were hindered from doing so by that universal pretext behind which all editors find refuge—lack of space. However the resolutions are being published, and we hope to give some discussion of them later.

What do the Democrats in this county stand for? Have they come out for anything except putting the county in debt over the wishes of the people? This is the only thing we can see that they have done. We would be glad to hear from the official organ of the party on these questions. The people are justly entitled to know these things, so lets be fair and tell them such things of great importance.

Will the Clanton Press kindly explain to the people of the county who was the first man to suggest to the Commissioners Court the issuance of time warrants, and placing the county in debt over the wishes of the people? Will they also explain if this officer did not advocate the issuance of $125,000 worth of time warrants? Didn't he fight continuously for the issuance of these warrants from then up to this time?

Can the Clanton Press tell the people which two of their candidates made speeches in the Democratic meeting, and urged the Democrats of the county to put up the bars, and keep all men out of their primary except straight Democrats? We feel that the people should know these two, therefore we ask the Clanton Press to give their names. Can these two candidates now ask any except straight Democrats to vote for them? Surely not, as they did not want their help in getting the nomination.

According to telegrams received by New York banks and bankers, cotton planters in the south are much alarmed over the foreign situation in its relation to their interests. Some of the telegrams stated in substance that a continuance of the war would reduce the demand for cotton by fully 35 per cent.

In response to one of these communications, A. B. Hepburn, Chairman of the Chase National Bank of New York City, has sent the following telegram to Congressman Underwood at Washington: "The south is unnecessarily alarmed over the prospective reduction in the price of cotton in view of the general European war. European manufacturers may not require the usual amount of cotton, but American manufacturers will require it all. It is inevitable that all over-sea trade of Germany will be at the mercy of any nation which first seeks it and can best serve the former patrons of Germany. Of all the nations, the United States is in the best position to fake and hold the trade. Merchants, manufacturers, bankers and statesmen should work together for that purpose. First liberalize our shipping laws. Germany supplied the coarse and cheaper cotton trade of Mexico and Central and South America, Africa, Asia and the Orient generally. There will be no embargo on the commerce of the Pacific. Our cotton should go abroad as the finished product, and not as raw material, and when the war of Europe is over we should hold largely the trade that now is waiting to fall into our hands"—The Birmingham News.

Possible Solution.

"Why do you suppose it is," she asked, "that nearly all the great men of this world have been married?"

"I suppose," replied the old bachelor, "it's because they had to do something to get their minds off the troubles they had at home."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Thorsby Fruit Growers Picnic

The people of Thorsby and vicinity laid aside their regular occupations Tuesday and turned out en-masse at the annual picnic of the Thorsby Fruit and Truck Growers Association, held on the Campus of Thorsby Institute. This organization now numbers upwards of 100 members, who with their families and friends made a large gathering, not the least among them being a considerable contingent of the boys and girls who in the season are depended on to gateer the big crops as they mature. The Thorsby Brass Band under the leadership of Mr. J. O. Johnson, furnished music which was greatly appreciated. Several good speakers were provided for the occasion, and after a bountiful dinner in the grove the afternoon was given over to sports, among them being finding a quarter hidden in a pan of flour which had to be accomplished by rooting for it with the face and picking it up in the mouth, great fun for the boys; an egg race for the girls; a tug of-war; a sack race; and a base ball game. The day was simply perfect and so full of enjoyment that many remained for supper on the ground.

MARS HILL.

Here I come again on the same Progressive "band wagon" that I was on two years ago. I want to let all the boys know that I am still in the game. Everything about our wagon is running smoothly, and she is going to land us safely in November. We want everybody to get in line and help in this great race.

Let me call the attention of you fellow citizens, that we need this new Progressiveism in our dear old state. The old and worn out schemes of the Democrats have for many years consumed all the means the farmer was able to rake and scrape, and if they continue in their reckless course, bankruptcy awaits us in the near future. I tail to see how any good man can vote the Democratic ticket with all its rottenness. How can the good men who were supporting Henderson or Comer either continue to vote for them after all the frauds were perpetrated in the primary? There are good democrats who did not do these things, but aren't they endorsing them when they vote the ticket?

No wonder they wanted to put up the bars and keep the Progressives out. They were afraid they would be told on for some of their rotten schemes. Progressives believe in a square deal in all things; and when a man gets into office and doesn't conduct it fair and square, it is our policy to apply the recall dismiss him, and get someone in the place who WILL do those things which are to the interest of the people. Until such conditions exist you will find crooked officers doing as they please, and disregarding the peoples' wishes.

We invite all qualified white voters to come in with us this fall and help us give to this county and state a universal, popular and economic government. The men we have nominated will do it, and we can look any man square in the eye and tell him that our ticket is worthy of his support.

Yours for success,
J. N. SCOTT.

OUR NEXT SERIAL STORY.

In this issue of the Union-Banner we are beginning another serial story, "The Ambition of Mark Truitt," by Henry Russel Miller. It is nothing less than a high class modern piece of fiction in the form of a newspaper serial. The story epitomizes, in the life of one big man; his big foes and big friends, the strifes, the hopes and the aspirations of modern America. Involved with his ambition is the ambition of the laborer, of the capitalist, of the progressive, of the humanitarian, of ihe socialist, of the society woman, and of the woman who gives all for love. The opportunity of giving our readers such rare literary treats as are contained in these serial stories is accorded us thru the excellent ready-print syndicate service of the Western Newspaper Union. We hope our readers will utilize this advantage by beginning now and following the story through the series.

Guard Your Children Against Bowel Trouble

Many children at an early age become constipated, and frequently serious consequences result. Not being able to realize his own condition, a child's bowels should be constantly watched, and a gentle laxative given when necessary. Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets are especially well adapted to women and children. The Sisters of Christian Charity, 531 Charles St., Luzerne, Pa., who attend many cases of sickness say of them:

"Some time ago we began using Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets and find that we like them very much. Their action is excellent and we are grateful for having been made acquainted with them. We have had good results in every case and the Sisters are very much pleased."

The form and flavor of any medicine is very important, no matter who is to take it. The taste and appearance are especially important when children are concerned. All parents know how hard it is to give the average child "medicine," even though the taste is partially disguised. In using Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets, however, this difficulty is overcome. The shape of the tablets, their appearance and candy-like taste at once appeal to any child, with the result that they are taken without objection.

If the first box fails to benefit, the price is returned. Ask your druggist. A box of 25 doses costs only 25 cents. Never sold in bulk.

Mother's Friend Before Baby Arrives

During several weeks of expectancy there is a splendid external embrocation in our "Mother's Friend" in which thousands of women have the most unbounded confidence. They have used it and know. They tell of its wonderful influence to ease the abdominal muscles and how they avoided those dreaded stretching pains that are so much talked about. This safe external application is gently used over the skin to render it amenable to the natural stretching which it undergoes. The myriad of nerve threads just beneath the skin is thus relieved of unnecessary pain-producing causes and great physical relief is the result as expressed by a host of happy mothers who write from personal experience.

It is a subject that all women should be familiar with as "Mother's Friend" has been in use many years, has been given the most severe tests under most all trying conditions and is recommended by women who to-day are grandmothers and who in their earlier years learned to rely upon this splendid aid to women.

You can obtain "Mother's Friend" at almost any drug store. Get a bottle to-day and then write for our little book. Address Bradfield Regulator Co., 412 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Rheumatic Throat Is Common Trouble

Should Be Treated in Blood To Prevent Recurrence.

There are successful gargles that stop soreness in the throat, but to prevent their incessant return, the blood must be put in order. The best remedy is S. S. S., as it influences all the functions of the body to neutralize the irritants or waste products and to stimulate their excretion through the proper channels.

Rheumatic sore throat is a dangerous indication, as it means that the blood is loaded with more uric acid than the kidneys can excrete, and may thus lead to serious general disturbance.

The action of S. S. S. stimulates cellular activity. It prevents the accumulation of irritants in local spots. It enables the arteries to supply quickly the new red blood to replace worn-out tissue.

For this reason uric acid that finds the throat an easy prey to its breaking-down influence, is scattered and eliminated. In other words, S. S. S. prevents chronic conditions by enabling all the mucous linings of the body to secrete healthy mucus. Its influence is shown in a marked improvement of the bronchial tubes, whereby the huskiness of voice with thick, grayish expectorations is overcome. S. S. S., well diluted with water, means a blood bath, since it is welcome to any stomach and at once gets into the blood.

S. S. S. is free of all minerals and contains ingredients wonderfully conducive to well-balanced health.

You can get it at any drug store, but do not accept anything else. There is danger in substitutes. S. S. S. is prepared only by The Swift Specific Co., 528 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Our Medical Dept. will give you free instruction by mail on any subject of blood disorders. Write today.

Colored People Organize League

A branch of the Law and Order League has been organized in Clanton by Rev. I. N. Fitzpatrick, the Grand Royal Son Archon of America. The work that is given the Colored people by this league is of a high character and is fostered by the intellects of the foremost characters of the colored race. It teaches the negro that the Southern white man is his best friend, and that the southland is the best home for the race. It endeavors to make peace between the negro and his white neighbor by teaching the former to utilize his opportunities of learning the ideas with which he comes in contact.

Rev. Fitzpatrick will deliver a speech to-night at the court house describing fully his work. Both white and black are assured that their time will be well spent to come out and hear him.

The organization, if carried out, will certainly result in much good, and it is to be hoped that the colored people will co-operate with the organizer, Rev. Fitzpatrick, and do all they can to make the ultimate outcome what it should be to insure the best results.

RHEUMATISM ARRESTED

Many people suffer the tortures of lame muscles and stiffened joints because of impurities in the blood, and each succeeding attack seems more acute until rheumatism has invaded the whole system.

To arrest rheumatism it is quite as important to improve your general health as to purify your blood, and the cod liver oil in Scott's Emulsion is nature's great blood-maker, while its medicinal nourishment strengthens the organs to expel the impurities and upbuild your strength.

Scott's Emulsion is helping thousands every day who could not find other relief. Refuse the alcoholic substitutes.

You Are Not Wanted

Do you know that your efficiency is probably not much above the average—35%? And do you realize that no employer wants a man who is not efficient, even if his services are given free?

Do You Want to Acquire Efficiency for the Job of Life?

Do you want to be wanted by all men? Do you want to know that you cannot be replaced by a better man? Do you want to know just how and just where you can make a bigger profit on your time and effort?

Your Job for the Day, your Job of Life, and your Success for All Time demand that you make yourself efficient.

The Institute of Efficiency

Ours is the only school in existence where you can learn PERSONAL Efficiency. In twenty-four fascinating lessons, in your home, at your leisure, you learn of these wonder working truths that have saved railroads, industrial plants, and factories millions of dollars each year, and which have raised salaries, in many cases, one-hundred fold.

Harrington Emerson

the man who founded this school, and who wrote these twenty-four vital lessons, has spent his life in the study and practice of Efficiency. During the past twenty years, this world famous expert, has been advising the leading industrial plants of the country. This vast experience he has put into this course of study so that you can reap the benefit.

What This Means For You

This course is for everybody who wants to make the most of his life—the professional man, business man, the young man hoping to achieve—everyone who wishes to go as far as he can, do as much as he can, achieve the best that is in him—with the least effort. The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of
"THE MAN HIGHER UP," "HIS RISE TO POWER," Etc.

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

This story epitomizes, in the life of one big man, his big foes and big friends, the strife, the hopes, and the aspirations of modern America. Involved with his ambition is the ambition of the laborer, of the capitalist, of the progressive, of the humanitarian, of the socialist, of the society woman, and of the woman who gives all for love.

CHAPTER I.

Dreams.

He drifted into the delectable land that lies between sleep and waking, tasting the fleeting savor of his dreams—the epic visions of full-blooded youth. They had passed just beyond memory, leaving a confused yet glowing sense of sharp combats waged, of victories won. A golden haze enveloped him. Through it filtered a dwindling resonance, as of some noble processional sung by a departing far-distant choir.

A wave of delight rippled over him. Then the thought that, not sharing his slumber, had painted his colorful dreams, worked to the surface.

"My last day here!"

He awoke slowly. Before him, seen through the unshuttered window, lay a world somber enough to one tugging against its restraints, lovely when it was to be left behind. He saw the September sun peep over the hills at the head of the valley, rise majestically and swing clear, a golden disk hung in the sky, symbol of the reward of men's struggles; its radiance, streaming into the little room, dispelled shabbiness with a mellow glow he could almost feel. The matin sounds arose, according finely with the lingering echoes of his dream music. He reveled in a new perception.

He was twenty years old.

He was not one to loll. He sprang from bed and stood naked; supple beautiful youth, too slender for great strength but with the unconscious grace of the wild animal.

He dressed and stood by the window in the attitude of a listener. Intently he sought to define the faint otherworld resonance that still seemed to vibrate about him. But the theme eluded him.

His illusion was effectually shattered. Into the subdued melody of the Sabbath morning thrust a profane intruder, the jerky wheezing notes of a cabinet organ in the day's hymns, played by some one who aspired beyond endowment.

He frowned, then threw back his head and laughed silently—a trick he had sometimes—at the absurd anticlimax.

"I'm still in Bethel. It's a long way from here to—there." He drew a long deep breath.

A question halted him. "There—where?"

He shook his head vigorously, as though to throw off the query, and went down to the kitchen.

The odor of frying ham saluted his nostrils; he sniffed it hungrily. A man, apparently old, was placing heavy, chipped ironware dishes on the table. He nodded briefly in response to the youth's blithe greeting.

"I'll be ready," he said in a dull flat voice, "time ye're back from the stable," and continued his slow precise setting of the table.

In a few minutes the other returned, the horses fed and his own hands and face scrubbed in cold water from the cistern. They sat down without speaking. The youth ate eagerly, gulpingly.

When the first keenness of appetite was gone, burning to talk of the great hour at hand, he broke the silence. "Well, father, this is my last day in Bethel."

The old man merely nodded, keeping his eyes on his plate.

Joyishly the son began to set forth his plans and hopes and expectations; they were not small. But the old man maintained his silence. The youth conceived him to be an unsympathetic audience.

"Guess you're not interested," he said a trifle sulkily.

"Yes, I'm interested, Mark," the father answered, "but there ain't anything to say." He raised his glance to the window. "Guess I couldn't say anything that'd help much."

The sweep of the youth's anticipation faltered before a quality in the old man's words. Old, "old Simon;" so his neighbors called him. Yet he was not really old, but in the noonday of life wore the gray mantle of age. For he, too, had dreamed his big golden dreams. Below the village stood a dismantled rotting forge, monument to their futility. After his failure he had returned to his shop and trade, shoeing his neighbors' horses, mending their wagons and plows, a dull-eyed, taciturn, spiritless plodder.

Simon Truitt rose and began to clear the table. The son moved toward the door. There he paused, vaguely sensible of a sorrow to which some soothing word was to be said. But the word would not come to lips unschooled in such tender office. He went slowly out into the sunshine.

In the stable he curried the horses, lingering over the pretty brown mare—latest and finest trophy of his horse-trading—until her coat shone satiny. This labor of love ended, he lighted a pipe and sat in the stable doorway.

He sat there until from across the town came a flat unmusical clamor, the cracked church bell calling the faithful—that is to say, all Bethel save one—to worship. He rose reluctantly. Soon he emerged from the little house, shaved to the blood and clad in the discomfort of Sunday clothes.

Always on warm Sabbath mornings Simon Truitt was to be found sitting on the stoop, and always facing the north; the dismantled forge lay to the south. He was that one for whom the cracked bell tolled in vain; he was supposed to be an atheist.

"Goin' to church?" he asked in the expressionless tone that was his habit.

"I guess so," answered Mark. "Unless," with sudden understanding, "you'd like me to stay."

Simon hesitated, then shook his head. "No, ye'd better go same as always. Courtney'd want ye to."

"I owe him a lot."

Simon nodded. "More'n to—anyone else here. Think a good deal o' him, don't ye?"

"Yes. Sometimes he's kind o' queer, though."

Simon nodded again. "D'ye," he asked unexpectedly, "d'ye believe what he preaches?"

"Why, yes!" said Mark. "Yes, I s'pose so," he amended.

The dull glance momentarily sharpened. "Not very much, I expect. Better believe it hard—or not at all. It's most time fur church."

Mark swung heavily down the path. The father's eyes followed him wistfully.

Mark joined the straggling procession that moved, stiffly decorous, toward the house of worship. Once, during the short journey, a spring wagon overtook and passed him; a girl in the rear seat turned and nodded. A wave of red surged into his dark face. Until the wagon drove into the churchyard, his glance clung to the mass of yellow hair under the pink hat. Unconsciously his step quickened.

He found an empty pew near the door, and entering, leaned back, half closing his eyes. He followed the congregation as it rose and sat in hymn and prayer and lesson; but he moved mechanically, without thought of worship. His glance sought the far corner where a shaft of morning sunshine had set a mass of yellow hair ashimmering. The sight and his dreams gave him a new and daring resolve. The hour sped swiftly.

He went quietly from the church; in the yard he took a station by which the farmer folk must pass to their vehicles and there, as he had resolved, boldly, in the eyes of all, he waited for her.

She appeared, a slender girl who, as she moved slowly around the church, wove a spell over the betrousered portion of Bethel, even where she had not the subtle aid of dreams. She was not small, but, neatly made, gave an effect of daintiness not characteristic of the maids of that valley. Unity was supposed to be "delicate," hence was spared those arduous tasks that leave so little time to study of beauty hints and fashions. If there were some to suggest that "Squire Martin's family let Unity make fools of 'em," at least no males were among these critics.

"To the City? For Good?"

Self-conscious to the finger-tips but not betraying it, she picked her dainty way among the gossiping groups, tossing gay little smiles to this and that intoxicated youth, blissfully deaf to an occasional feminine titter in her wake.

She came to a halt beside Mark, looking up with a smile that made him forget curious observers.

"Good morning, Mark!"

"Unity!" His voice was low, tense, as though he announced some tragic happening. "I'm going away tomorrow."

The vivacity fell from her face, leaving it very serious.

"To the city? For good?"

"To the city. For good."

"I am glad."

"Glad!" he stammered. "I thought—I wanted you to be sorry."

"Yes," she nodded emphatically. "I'm glad—for you," she added more softly.

He remained silent, an unreasoning, indefinite disappointment lingering. Something he wanted—he could not say what—was lacking in her words.

"Aren't you glad?"

"Yes, but—" He dismissed the doubt. His eagerness returned. "I'm going driving this afternoon."

She became girlish again. "Is that an invitation?" with a demure little smile.

"If you want to go."

"Say it!" he besought thirstily.

There was a delicious moment of uncertainty, a breathless little laugh.

"My lover. There! I'll be waiting for you, just after dinner." And the butterfly fluttered away.

He went from the churchyard and followed the street past the point where it returned to its native state of dusty, weed-flanked, country pike. He came to a place where the road rose sharply and fell again. Mounting to the crest, he threw himself on the roadside and waited; thither Richard Courtney would come on the after-service walk that was his custom.

Up the rise, village-bound, leisurely creaked an ancient top buggy. In it slouched a middle-aged man upon whose face were written humor and patience, qualities of which he had great need just then. His horse labored heavily at its task, head hanging low; not the bellows in Simon Truitt's smithy puffed louder or harder. At the crest it stopped without urging. Mark frowned impatiently. Then he noted the sad state of the horse and a grin displaced the frown.

Mark nodded, the grin widening. "Maybe you'd like to help pay my fare?"

"I have helped," the doctor rejoined dryly. "Going to get rich, ain't you? They all think that."

"It happens sometimes."

"You might, though. Any man ought to get rich that could sell me this—would you call it a horse?"

"Hmm!" Mark considered the animal judicially. "Well, it has four legs."

"So's a billy goat," drawled the doctor. "Goat'd be more use to me, too."

"What did you buy it for, then?"

"I ain't squealing. Pretty slick customer, ain't you?"

The grin returned. "I can sell horses," Mark modestly admitted, "to some people."

"Humph! Only a fool'd buy 'em of you," the doctor agreed. "What'll you take for the brown mare?"

"The brown mare isn't for sale."

"I wouldn't sell her for two-fifty."

The doctor sighed and clucked to the weary horse.

Out of the dusty cloud trailing behind the creaky buggy emerged a tall stooping figure, clad in the rusty black of the country clergyman. He walked slowly, and when he came to the rise, with a slight effort; evidently he was a frail man physically. At the crest he stopped, breathing hard.

"No. Just waiting for you."

The preacher smiled faintly; the worn dispirited face lighted up a little. He turned his glance to the valley.

"It's worth a farewell. You'll be homesick for it sometimes—I hope. Shall we walk a bit farther?"

At his lagging pace they tramped along the road, constantly rising and descending but always reaching up toward a higher level. They kept the frank silence of those who have been companions often.

Ten years before Richard Courtney had resigned the city congregation that was steadily withering under his ministry and had come to shepherd the little flock of Bethel. It proved to be a life sentence, but in the end he stayed, if not gladly, at least with such Christian fortitude as a quivering sensitive soul could summon; having found—so he put it—a need to which he could minister. In the early days of his new service he had discovered a neglected, unlettered, moody youngster suffering under the blight of his relation to Simon Truitt, who, for his supposed atheism, was accounted a little less than respectable. Some quality in the boy caught the preacher's fancy. Tactfully he sought to win into Mark's heart, not a very difficult task once the lad learned that ministerial conversation was not confined to graphic pictures of eternal torment. And then, not quite realizing how this new interest eked out the Christian fortitude just mentioned, he set about to make Mark over. From Richard Courtney the blacksmith's son had had his Vergil and Xenophon and Homer, his Euclid and Quackenbos. What may have been best of all, he had had Richard Courtney.

In the intense, imaginative, quick-brained lad Courtney thought he discerned a rare spirit fitted to be a chevalier of the Lord, a fighter of others' battles, a bearer of others' burdens; thus we may read what Richard Courtney would have made his own life. He, the exile, had failed; but in the larger life from which he had been banished he would live again and be felt through a fine strong man of his making. For ten years he had jealously surveyed the prospect, patiently toiled and prayed that it might be.

But now, when the day for which he had prepared was come, he was not happy. The question continually recurred. How well had he builded?

With suddenly clarified vision he beheld the youth at his side, raw, unshaped, the reaches of his soul as yet unlighted by purpose, unwarmed by inspiration. After ten years he was almost as Richard Courtney had found him.

"I have scoured the windows. I cannot give the light," thought the preacher sadly.

He became aware that Mark had broken the silence. "I—I owe you a lot," he had said.

"Not very much," Courtney sighed. "I wish it were more—much more."

"Oh, yes, it is much. You've taught me to read and talk and—and think." Courtney repressed an unhappy smile. "You've made me—see big. You've got me ready to go away from here. I—I appreciate it."

"I'd rather you could see true. But must you go?" The plea was without spirit; he knew its uselessness. "There's a life to be lived here, even by a man who sees big. I wish you would stay, at least for a while."

"No, I must go now. I've a reason you don't know."

The preacher felt a jealous pang.

After a while he said. "Did you by any chance hear my sermon this morning?"

"Of yellow braids and a pretty complexion," Courtney said to himself bitterly.

Mark was frowning in an effort to recall and piece together detached phrases that had floated to him during the service and then, finding no welcome, floated away. "It was about," he said hesitatingly, "it was about a man finding his big idea."

"I am flattered." The dry droll inflection was a concealment.

"The big idea," said Mark vaguely, "does it mean—God?"

Suddenly, with an oddly appealing gesture, he turned again to Mark. All the intense longing of the man who has dreamed and failed and yet clung to some fragment of his hope, painting his vision, breathed in his words.

"Some day you may remember I told you. It's the big purpose that sometimes comes to the big, passionate man, to accomplish some work for its own sake; that grips him, drives him, makes him ruthless to his own desires, forgetful of his failures and blind to everything but his task; that transforms him into a narrow zealot, a fanatic, but a power—always a power, because he is his purpose incarnate. It is that without which the big man is wasted, because he is that dangerous, useless thing, a force uncontrolled. . . . It's what I wanted you to have."

Mark stared. "I—I'm afraid I don't understand."

"And I," Courtney cried, "I can't make you understand! But you will know, when it comes to you." The fire began to die from his eyes and voice. "If it comes," he added.

For a while Mark considered perplexedly this outburst. Then he dismissed it as one of the incomprehensible moments of a man whom, despite oddities, he liked very much. He returned to the thought that had led to the moment.

A little timidly he made the offer. "I'm going to leave the brown mare with you, if you'd like her."

"It's good of you to think of it. But you can sell her well. And you'll need the money."

"I know. But I want you to have her. I traded to get her for you."

"He needs a good horse. The one he has—"

"It was a fair trade," Mark asserted defensively.

A turn of the road brought them within sight of a great hill that stood across the valley. Over its level top swept breezes filtered pure through many leagues of forest. "Hedges hill" the village called it, finding humorous matter therein.

"I know. He's cracked over that. He'll never do it."

Mark looked long at the hill, as though from the site of the sanatorium in Spain might be gleaned some hint of the meaning of the "big idea."

After a while he said slowly, "Would you really rather he'd have the mare?"

CHAPTER II.

The Path of Youth.

Mark, whose life, the preacher supposed, was to be made over by many books and sermons on purpose, unselfishness and clean living, was in fact seeing a miracle of quite another sort unfold within him.

Companionship, once sought, had suddenly become distasteful. He was happy only when wandering alone in the woods, idle gun on shoulder, or drifting lazily in his canoe.

After a period, during which his body shot up to its full height, wholesome toil and study busied his thoughts and Richard Courtney began to nurture vain hopes, occurred an event of no small importance to many young gentlemen of Bethel. Unity Martin, proud possessor of a diploma declaring to those who cared to peruse that she had mastered certain arts, came home to exhibit in all its perfection the product of education.

He was returning late from an afternoon's hunt in the woods behind the Martin farm, when he unexpectedly came upon her one autumn day. She was standing on a little knob, gazing absently into the fading sky. His ever-ready imagination was touched. In the dusk, the pale glow of the dying day upon her, her pensiveness and apparent frailty gave her a seeming of soulfulness that abashed him, moved him strangely. He thought he beheld one far finer and purer than any of the clayey creatures his life had touched. She saw him and smiled faintly. That smile put him in an agony of confusion and awkwardness. Courtney repressed an unhappy smile. Because he did not know how to depart, he found himself walking home with her, and when she praised the pheasants slung over his shoulder, on a sudden glad impulse he gave to her and she quite naturally accepted the trophy of his hunt. This was a prophecy, but he was no seer.

It was long before he lost that impression of her, the frail spirit-like girl of the dusk, even though riper acquaintance might have taught him that she was indeed a dweller upon the earth. He whispered her name to himself, thinking it finest poetry. His desire to "do something" became a burning impatience to do large and splendid deeds that would prove his mettle. He was, in a word, a boy who thought himself in love.

Came a night, a still winter's night when moonlight gleamed on the snow and the chimes of sleighbells added to the enchantment, when he kissed her, with a sense of sacrilege—and she did not resist.

No wonder, then, Richard Courtney preached purpose in vain! His pupil's horizon was filled with a purpose not his own. Even the preacher's incomprehensible outburst was forgotten, as the boy went to his tryst that Sabbath afternoon.

For a mile he drove carefully and then, letting out the mare, with a flourish of speed drew up before the house of Squire Martin. It was the most pretentious in the valley.

Soon Unity appeared, fresh and dainty in her white dress and pink hat, followed by her sister Susan bearing a heavy pasteboard box. While Mark awkwardly helped his lady into the buggy, Susan slipped the box under the seat. Mark got in and the brown mare, needing no command, started away.

"And so," breathed Unity, "you're really going away—at last! How did you happen to decide to go just now?"

"I don't know. It just came to me the other day that I couldn't stay here any longer. Somehow, ever since we began to talk of the city, this place has seemed so small and shut in—until this morning."

"Until this morning?" in some alarm.

"Then it seemed kind o' cozy and—and protected. I hate to leave it. I hate to leave you, Unity."

"And I'll hate to have you go. But, of course, you must. And then, before very long, you'll come back—and take me away with you."

For a while in silence they gave this prospect the consideration it deserved. Then:

"Oh, Unity, how can you love me so?"

She was able to answer him on this point in a way to satisfy him and yet leave him humbly grateful for his vast good fortune.

The shadows were quite long when they espied a great flat rock in a clearing a little way from the road. And there, in a delicious intimacy that they solemnly asserted was but a foretaste, they remembered to eat the lunch put up by the thoughtful Susan. Afterward they spent a rapturous hour watching the sun glide down to meet the hills.

She broke a long silence to say, dreamily, "You're going to be very rich, aren't you?"

He laughed. "Maybe. It isn't always so easy to get rich, you know."

"But everybody says you will."

"Everybody—in Bethel—may not know." Then he added firmly, "But I will—for you. And then—"

He got down from the rock and lifted his arms to her. She stood uncertain, looking down at him. The glow of the sunset was still upon her; in her eyes was another glow, from within, for him.

She measured the distance to the ground—it was almost her own height—then, with a gasp for her daring, she sprang into his arms. He caught her and held her, kissing her again and again, thirstily. She began to respond; her arms tightened around his neck; she clung very close.

She cried tremulously, "Oh, Mark, you won't forget me—out there. I—I couldn't bear—that."

"I will not forget."

A last bright shaft reflected from the crimson west flooded their little clearing, fell upon her. And that was the picture of her he carried "out there"—Unity in the sunset glow, eyes and cheeks aflame with love, desiring him only and not that he would win.

"Little late, ain't ye?" Simon greeted Mark. But there was no reproof in the words, and no question; he assumed no right to pry into his son's affairs.

"I've been taking a drive," Mark answered.

Simon rose and went into the pantry. He returned, carrying a pitcher of milk and a plate piled high with buttered bread.

Mark was not hungry, but he ate with a show of great relish. Some instinct told him not to decline this little service.

In the morning Mark would have answered with an unqualified "Yes." Now he said, "I am—and I'm not." He drew a long breath that was almost a sigh. "It's like going in swimming in April."

"Ye're right to go," Simon said. "I wouldn't want ye to stay. There ain't any prospect fur a young man round here."

He rose, and going to the cupboard, fumbled among the dishes. When he returned, he laid before Mark a worn

He looked up questioningly. "Why, there must be 'most a thousand dollars!"

"Jest that. I've been savin' it fur ye."

Impulsively Mark pushed it back toward Simon. "But I can't take it. It won't leave you anything, and I don't need it. I've got more'n five hundred of my own."

"I'd ruther ye'd take it," Simon insisted heavily. "It'll come in handy. If ye don't need it, ye can find a safe place fur it. An' ye can pay it back, if ye ever git rich. I," he repeated, "I've be'n savin' it fur ye. I knowed ye'd go away some day an' I wanted ye to take somethin'—frum me."

Mark's hand went slowly to the pocketbook. "All right, father." The words fell awkwardly. "I'll pay it back some day. And—thank you."

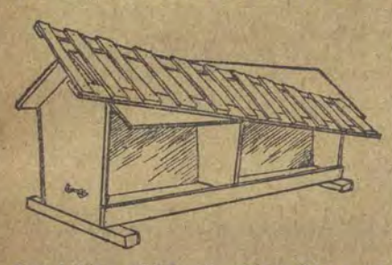
Fishes That Emit Sounds.

There is a fish in the Tagus that emits sounds resembling the vibrations of a deep-toned bell, gong or pedal pipe of an organ. Herrings, when the net has been drawn around them, have been observed to do the same, and similar accounts are given of the river bullhead. An amphibious siluroid fish on being taken into the hand, is said to shriek, and certain of the blennies emit similar sounds.—Field.



POULTRY

HYGINE IN HOUSE AND YARD

Second in Importance Only to High Constutional Vigor and Health of Poultry Stock.

(By RAYMOND PEARL.)

Every one knows instances of more or less successful poultry keeping under the most unsanitary and unhygienic of conditions, so similarly human beings are able when forced to do so to live under unhygienic conditions. But every civilized country in the world believes that the most economical insurance against the steady loss of national wealth which the prevalence of disease involves, is the enforcement of sanitary regulations throughout its domain. In poultry keeping many may be successful for a time in managing their birds in defiance of the laws of sanitation and hygiene. A very few may be suc cessful in this practise for a long time, but in the long run the vast majority will find that thorough, careful and intelligent attention to these laws will be one of the best guaranties of permanent success that they can find. It may be said that the essentials in the correct management of poultry are: Clean houses; clean air; clean food; clean water; clean yards and clean range; clean incubators and brooders; clean birds, outside and inside.

Too great stress cannot be laid on the importance of fresh air in the poultry house if the birds are to be kept in good condition. And it must be remembered that "fresh" air and cold stagnant air are two very different things. Sunlight is nature's great disinfectant. Its importance is no less in poultry than in human sanitation. Probably there is no greater assistance to the diseases of poultry than dark and damp houses, and dark houses are frequently damp. The poultry house must be airy, light and dry. The place where poultry are housed must be kept dry if the flock is to be productive and free from disease.

Along with housing as a prime factor in poultry sanitation goes feeding. Detailed discussion of the compounding of rations and such topics will not be considered here, but there are, however, certain basic principles of hygienic feeding which must always be looked after if one is to avoid diseases. These are: Purity of food; overfeeding; green food; fresh drinking water, and clean troughs or receptacles for the food.

The type of slatted feed trough, used by many poultrymen, in feeding growing chickens is open to certain objections. It is very difficult to keep the grain dry in it in wet, stormy weather. Furthermore, the fact that very small chickens cannot use this type of trough entails additional labor. An improved trough devised by Mr. F. W. Tenney, obviates all disadvantages and has many points to recommend it. The improvements consist, first, in making the slatted front of the trough removable as a whole, leaving then a flat board bottom with a rail in front of it an inch high to hold the grain in place. With the slat front removed the trough duplicates the conditions of the flat chick feeding board, used by many poultry keepers for feeding chicks during the first two or three weeks of life. As the chicks grow older this slatted front can be put on the trough and held in place with hooks.

Of course it is entirely possible to make troughs in accordance with the principle of this improvement, with removable slatted openings on both sides, to be set down in the middle of the yards so that the birds can get at the feed from both directions. Convenient dimensions are as follows: Length, 8 feet 4 inches; height to peak, 1 foot 6 inches; width at bottom, 3 inches; width at widest part, 9½ inches; height of front opening, 12½ inches; width of roof boards (front and back the same) 11 inches. A strip of canvas keeps the hinged joint of the roof dry.

Infertile Eggs Best.

The eggs will keep better during the summer if no males run with the flock, for it is the germ in the egg that first starts the decay and when that germ is absent, the keeping quality of the eggs is considerably improved.

VOTERS IN REVOLT

Democratic Party Weakness Increasingly Apparent.

The lesson of Democratic disorganization and Democratic loss of voters was revealed in the returns of the election in November, 1912, and it is a poor politician of any party who does not learn from it the weakness of the strict party vote of that year.

The Republican recruits of 1912 have, in nearly every instance, departed from the Democratic camp, while the real Democratic voters are alienated, disappointed, dissatisfied.

The rank and file have always been proud of their leaders keeping faith with the people as to platform pledges and campaign promises, and they can no longer retain that pride or point with pleasure to the record which is now black with repudiation of the platform pledge and the stains of broken promises.

The platform pledges and the candidates' promises are all that the voters of the Union are offered by any political party; when those pledges are worthless and the promises valueless, candidates of the party have little reason to expect either popular support or popular approval.

There is a firmly grounded moral sentiment in the voters of the United States which is in revolt at the recent blows to political morals and national honor.

It is reported in California, in Colorado, in Louisiana, in Indiana, in Pennsylvania, in New Jersey, in Massachusetts now, and next November will bring news of it in every district and every state of the union.

War Is Against the Bosses.

Col. Theodore Roosevelt disclaimed any idea of building up a reunited Republican-Progressive party for the campaign of 1916. "The Progressives are appealing to the voters of the Republican and other parties who want to see the bosses downed," he said. "We are not seeking fusion anywhere for the mere sake of winning an election. We realize that the boss issue is the one dominant factor this year in many of the states. Whenever possible we shall join the Republicans in those states that war on the bosses.

He said the Progressives were not thinking now of the presidential nomination, as there would be time enough for that after the autumn election.

Limit to Generosity.

We—meaning the United States—probably can, as Secretary Bryan says, afford to be generous with Colombia. We may even at this time afford to pay her $25,000,000 and throw in an apology to boot for our part in fomenting and assisting to a successful conclusion the revolt of Panama and the setting up of the new Isthmian republic. But it is strongly to be doubted if the United States will be able to afford many similar generosities at the end of the Democratic administration unless some new method of producing revenue to take the place of the tariff deficit is devised.—Springfield Union.

Committee Likely to Ponder.

Twenty peace treaties negotiated by Secretary Bryan have been sent to the Senate with the announcement that the President desires their ratification at the present session. With the little joker in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and the $25,000,000 apology in the Colombian treaty fresh in their minds, the Foreign Relations committee will not be blamed if it regards twenty treaties as rather more than a day's work.

The Work Is the Thing.

You can always depend on Theodore Roosevelt doing what he believes will best advance the causes he has at heart, without regard to the effect his action may have on his own personal fortunes.

As in the case of all really great men, the thing he is doing absorbs him. The consequences to himself hardly reach the level of consciousness.—Kansas City Star.

Roosevelt's Personality.

The Chicago Progressive club furnishes an interesting little sidelight upon the power of the Roosevelt personality. In the first twenty days of May the club had no applicants for membership. In the next ten days it had twenty-five voluntary requests for admission. T. R. landed from South America on May 21.

Tired of Hollow Promises.

The great elements of American life—business, labor, and agriculture—are out of patience with Democracy. The good times promised did not come. Cheaper cost of living did not come. The square deal at Panama did not come. The tariff plan worked the wrong way. The business world was kept in terror of drastic and inquisitorial laws.

The Democratic party goes into the Congressional race handicapped with a mountain of resentment and antagonism.

UNION MIGHT BE POSTPONED

The Blanks' maid of all work was a practical young woman of about twenty-seven years. One day when her mistress was making some plans for the future the matter-of-fact Serelda said:

"I don't know, ma'am. It might be that I won't be with you much longer, an' then mebbe I will. I ain't sure yet."

Knowing that a young man had called a good many times to see Serelda, her mistress said:

"Are you thinking of getting married, Serelda?"

Without the least show of embarrassment or enthusiasm Serelda said:

"Well, yes, to tell the truth, I am. Then again I don't know if I will. I've got a good place here with good pay, and he's such a fool mebbe I'll stay on with you!"

BABY HAD SCALP TROUBLE

Carthage, Texas.—"My little girl had some kind of breaking out on her head that came in white blisters and when the blisters burst they formed something like scales. If I washed her head and combed the scales off they would come again in just a few days. The trouble looked something like dandruff but was hard and scaly and when the scales would come off all of the hair came also and would leave the head raw.

"I had tried salves which only softened the scales so I decided to use Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I washed her head with warm water and Cuticura Soap and then applied the Cuticura Ointment and let it remain over night. I used only one box of Cuticura Ointment and one bar of Cuticura Soap and her head was well." (Signed) Mrs. Luella Biggs, Jan. 28, 1914.

WELL, HE MADE THEM LAUGH

Speaker at Banquet Intended to Be Humorous, and Quite Unconsciously He Was.

Henry returned from the dinner and faced his expectant wife with a proud and smiling face.

"Yes, thank you, my dear," he said, in answer to her anxious inquiry. "The dinner was most pleasant, and my speech was the success of the evening."

"What did you say, darling?"

"Oh, well, I can't remember exactly, you know. But until I spoke all the speech had fallen rather flat, so I thought I would give them a little humor. And I succeeded, too! I had hardly said more than six words when there was a pleased giggle round the huge table. In a few minutes I had them all rolling about with laughter, and when at last I sat down the applause was tremendous—tremendous!"

At this point Henry removed his overcoat.

"I am glad your speech was such a success, dear," answered his wife, dutifully. "But next time you have to speak in public would it not be better to put a waistcoat under your dress-coat, especially when you wear a dickey?"

No Menace In Sanatorium.

Dr. Edward L. Trudeau, who built the first tuberculosis sanatorium in the United States in 1885, says:

"When I bought the first land on which the Adirondack Cottage sanatorium is built, I paid $25 an acre for it, but the price was then thought absurdly high. My last purchase of five acres cost me $5,000. To my knowledge, there has never been an employe who came to the sanatorium in sound health who developed tuberculosis while there; and a sanatorium can no more endanger the health of the neighborhood in which it is built, even if the residences are at its very gates, than it could if it were placed on top of a high mountain miles away from habitation."

Invitation and Answer.

Mr. F. C. Phillips in his book, "My Varied Life," tells how the late Sir George Honeyman, an infamous writer, sent down from the bench to a friend of his, a leading Q. C., a little note. Not able to make head nor tail of it, the barrister scribbled something equally undecipherable upon a half-sheet of notepaper, and passed it up to the judge. Sir George looked annoyed, and when the court rose, said to his friend: "What do you mean by this? I asked you to come and dine with me tonight." "Yes," said the barrister, "and I replied that I should be extremely glad to do so."

Possible Chance.

A young man who last month received his diploma has been looking around successively for a position, employment and a job. Entering an office the other day he asked to see the manager, and while waiting for that gentleman to become disengaged he said to the office boy:

"Do you suppose there is any opening here for a college graduate?"

"Well, dere will be," was the reply, "if de boss don't raise me salary to t'ree dollars a week by termorrer night."—Boston Evening Transcript.

WOULD MAKE A POLITICIAN

Little Willie's Capacity for Sticking to One Idea Singularly Like Way of Rabid Partisan.

"The late Adlai E. Stevenson," said a Republican leader of Bloomington, "hadn't, after all, much use for politics. He once explained to me why this was.

"He said that party politicians believed their side to be always right, and the other side to be always wrong. Whatever the other side advocated, it was horrible and infernal; whatever their own side advocated was holy.

"He said the partisan couldn't understand that you might arrive at the right thing by more ways than one—and thus the partisan was like the urchin whose teacher said:

"'Willie, what does six plus four make?'

"'Eleven.'

"'No. Try again.'

"'Twelve.'

"'No.'

"'Thirteen.'

"'No, no, no. You're just guessing. But why couldn't you have guessed that six plus four makes ten?'

"'Because it don't make ten,' said Willie. 'Five and five makes ten—I remember that.'"

Teacher's Boast.

A teachers' meeting was in progress and it was decided that the more difficult subjects should come in the morning, and those that required less application later in the day. History was last on the list, and Miss Wheeler, the young teacher, protested.

"But it certainly is easier than science or mathematics," the principal insisted.

"As I teach it," replied the young teacher, "no subject could be more difficult and confusing."—Lippincott's Magazine.

Continuing the Argument.

"You prefer swords to pistols when you engage in a duel?"

"Yes," replied the Frenchman. "Swords enable you to get in more gestures."

NEW HARDWARE FIRM

The Clanton Hardware Company, incorporated to do a general hardware business in the town of Clanton, filed its incorporation papers in the Probate office on August 5th. The new company has a paid up capital of $20,000.00, and the incorporators are C. F. Jones, J. D. Martin and L. A. Collins. These three gentlemen compose the board of directors of the company.

C. FENN JONES

Mr. Jonee is the President of the new company, and is Clanton's pioneer in the exclusive hardware business. He, with Mr. W. D. Spigener, formed the first hardware firm in Clanton about twelve years ago. They operated for several years under the name of Spigener & Jones, but finally sold out the business to the Gamble Hardware Company of Wetumpka. Mr. Jones at once formed a connection with that company, and was made manager of the Clanton branch. In that capacity he has worked for the past five years. As a result of his zealous efforts and far reaching business ability he has in this time seen a steady growth in the business, till it is now the equal of any in the state. It is this business which the new firm has purchased, and will continue, with some improvements and additions.

L. A. COLLINS

Mr. Collins, who is Vice-President of the new firm, comes to Clanton from Wetumpka, where he has been sales manager for the Wetumpka branch of the Gamble Hardware Company for a number of years. He is the only member of the new firm who is married, and is bringing his family to Clanton. For the present he will occupy a residence in the Gowan addition.

The Secretary and Treasurer of the new Clanton Hardware Company is Mr. J. D. Martin, the very pleasing likeness of whom is paesented below. He Secretary of the Gamble Hrrdware Company, and Secretary and Treasurer of Alabama Retail Hardware Dealers Association. He was born and reared in Elmore County, and has been living at Wetumpka for several years.

We join the citizens of Clanton in extending to these enterprising business men a hearty welcome to our town and county. May we be able to accord to them such warm feelings of friendly citizenship that they may not have the least cause to regret casting their lots among us.

CHILTON COUNTY MUSIC TEACHERS INSTITUTE

Pursuant to a call issued by a committee of the leading music teachers of the county, several persons interested in the teaching of music met at the office of the County Superintendent of Education last Saturday for the purpose of organizing the Chilton County Music Teachers Institute. R. A. Smith was elected President pro tem, and W. T. Bean Secretary pro tem. These officers were elected for permanent offials after the body was formally organized, with the addition of A. H. Glasscock as Vice-President.

Talks were made by A. H. Glass, James Franklin, R. A. Smith, W. T. Bean, and W. O. Rich, on better co-operation, and how to create better interest in all day singings.

The meeting adjourned to meet again at such time and place as might be designated by the officers.

CALOMEL MAY HURT YOUR LIVER

Every time you take this powerful drug you are in danger. Take Dodson's Liver Tone instead. Calomel is made from mercury, and while mercury has many valuable uses, it is a dangerous things to swallow. If calomel stays in the system very long it salivates. Even when it works naturally, its after-effects are often bad.

Alred Drug Company will sell on Dodson's Liver Tone, which is positively guaranteed to take the place of calomel. Liver Tone stimulates the liver just enough to start is working, and does not make you sicker than ever—as calomel often does. You feel good after taking Dodson's and it won't force you to stop eating or working after taking it. It is as beneficial for children as for adults.

Try a large bottle for fifty cents under the guarantee that you money will be given back cheefully if you're not satisfied.

VOL. 3 | THE UNION 11th Year | CLANTON, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, AUGUST 27, 1914 | THE BANNER 21st Year | NO. 20

Register Chancy 2April2

Resolutions of The W. O. W.

To the Consul Commander and Sovereighs of Clanton Camp.

We, the undersigned committee of three heretofore appointed to draft and present resolutions upon the death of our late Sovereign, Ernest Mahan, beg leave to submit the following:

Sovereign Mahan was born in Chilton county, Ala., near Clanton on September 2nd 1887, and died at his residence in Clanton, Ala., on the 8 day of June, 1914.

Sovereign Mahan became a member of our order while residing in the state of Texas, and united with this camp by card. The insurance certificate was issued to Sovereign Mahan prior to his marriage and was payable to his niece.

On January 20, 1914 Severeign Manan was married to Miss Knowlton Marcus who survives him.

At the time of his death Sovereign Mahan was a member of our Camp in good standing; he was buried at the cametery in Clanton with full honors of our fraternity.

Therefore, be it resolved, that in the death of Sovereign Mahan, this camp has lost a worthy member; that his wife has lost a loving and affectionate husband; and our community a good citizen.

Be it further resolved, that we extend to the widow of our departed Sovereign, our heartfelt sympathy; and commend her to our sovereigns, as one worthy of their care and good will.

Be it further resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be published in each of the county papers; that a copy be furnished his widow; and that they be spread upon the minutes of this Camp.

Respectfully submitted,
W. F. Culpepper,
J. P. Crumpton,
G. W. Willis, } Committee.

To the Consul Commander and Sovereigns of Local Camp No. 322, Woodmen of World.

We, the committee appointed by you to draft resolutions on the death of Sovereign Rudolph Cleckler, report as follows:

Whereas, God has seen fit to remove from this forest one more of its trees, whose branches shelter the bleak and helpless; though this tree decayeth, the emblem of Woodcraft will ever mark the place where it has fallen.

Resolved first that Clanton Camp, No. 322, has lost one of its faithful members; his wife, an affectionate husband, his children, a kind and loving father; the community in which he lived, a friend and neighbor.

Resolved second, that a copy of these resolutions be furnished his widow and children; that they be published in each of the county papers; and a copy be spread upon the minutes of this Camp.

Resolved third that, though Sovereign Cleckler was a member just two short months, he was in good standing and his family is entitled to, and will receive all the benefits his policy calls for; and a monument will be erected to his memory by the Woodmen of the World.

W. F. Culpepper,
G. W. Willis,
E. F. Sartor, } Committee.

Attractions at The County Fair

Mr.J. N. Dennis, the business manager of the Chilton Fair has informed us of the following attractions and entertainments which have been arranged for exhibitions at the fair this fall. It is a series of high class entertainment, and something which everyone will enjoy. This of course will only be a supplement to the main agricultural purpose of the occasion.

Free Diving—"Merimaid," the Diving Venus, will give wonderful exhibitions of high diving each afternoon and evening from a 75 foot ladder into three feet of water. Also scientific exhibitions of swimming.

Dog, pony and monkey circus. Twenty-five clever and intelligent animals that do everything but talk.

The Katz-Kaz—A trip to the land of bewilderment, and return through the land of surprise. A new novel, fascinating device.

Ferris Wheel—75 feet high; massive giant of amusement weighing 20 tons; absolutely safe

Busy City—A thriving community representing every phase of urban life. A study in skill and examples of industry.

"Oberitr"—The show beautiful, known as the ladies' delight, a gigantic electric illusion, a marvelous and mystifying exhibition. Carloads of special scenery.

Carry us all—The oldest and newest of ammusement devices with a charm that never fails.

Italian Band—Antonio Olivetto's Royal Italian Band; Superb artists, musicians and soloists. Concerts every afternoon and evening.

Motordome — Thrilling race with death by three high-power motorcycles traveling on a 90 deg. angle, ridden by famous dare-devils.

Tango Girls--Depicting and demonstrating all the the modern fad dances in their grace and beauty. Krouse, proprietor of the greater shows, represents every attraction as clean, meritorious, instructive and educational

Death of Mrs. F. L. Heaton

The wife of Prof. F. L. Heaton was called to higher life Wednesday evening, Aug. 19 at Cedar Head, Ga. Mrs. Heaton was a model wife and made many friends during her stay here, who with her husband mourn her loss until they meet in the infinite. Prof. Heaton was connected with the Business College here at its organization last spring. — Bullock County Breeze.

Mrs. Heaton will be remembered by the many friends of her and her husband. While in Clanton they won the love of all with whom they came in contact, and it will be with much sorrrow that they learn of her death. The kindest sympathy of many people in Clanton goes out to the bereaved husband in his sad hour of affliction.

Work Finished At Lock Twelve

The work of constructing the big power plant and dam at Lock 12 on Coosa River near here, which was begun about two years ago, has been completed, and all the workmen have left the place, except those who are required to keep the electrical machinery in operation. The plant is in operation every day and power is being furnished by the plant to Birmingham, Gadsden, and other cities of north Alabama.

CHILTON COUNTY IS AGAIN TO THE FRONT

There has just been discovered in the northern part of the county within three miles of the main line of the L. & N. railroad, a mine of the finest structural and roofing slate in America. It varies in colors, principal among which are purple and unfading green, and the supply is inexhaustible. Investigations and reports have been made on the product by Capt. Thomas Evans of Lithonia, Ga., an expert in the work for many years. Sample of the slate and Col. Evans report may be seen at W. I. Mullins, W. H. Sartor's and J. B. Downs'.

Baker School House

There will be an all day singing at this place next Sunday August 30th. Books used will be Harp and Harmony. Everybody is invited.

CHILTON DELEGATES TO FARMERS UNION.

Prof. S. H. Herbert of Thorsby who with County Secretary J. M. Smith and Rev. W. S. Cox attended the State Meeting of the Farmers' Union as delegates from Chilton County, reports a very interesting and profitable meeting. State Supt. Feagin, Mrs. Thomas M. Owen of Montgomery, National President Charles S. Barrett, and other speakers of note brought messages of inspiration and information, and many measures affecting the welfare of the farmer were discussed and acted upon. The Farmers' Union promises to be more and more a force for good in this County and the State.

Singing Convention

The Chilton County Singing Convention will be held at Shilo church near South Calera, 1st, Sunday in September and Saturday before. Books used will be Sacred Harp and Christian Harmony. People coming by rail will get off at South Calera. Those wishing to be met will notify W. F. Armstrong, Calera, Alabama R. F. D. We are expecting several visitors at this session, among them we expect Miss Jackson the far famed director of the Birmingham class.

T. C. Jackson President, Z. J. Jones Secretary.

Politics Discussed

Editor Union Banner: Please allow me a few words in regard to the political conditions in Chilton county at present.

I am always in favor of everybody getting on peacably and quiet, but it seems that the democrats of Chilton county think it something honorable to speak disrespectfully of the Progressive party and everybody else but their brother Demies.

The Clanton Press devotes a great deal of its time in criticizing the works of the Progressive party; and how gloomy the future is for them. If they fail out as the Press predicts, we poor people had better look out. They just want to show us how they rule a county, state and nation; and I think we are getting a pretty fair example of their work from the present administration of Woodrow; and the Press wishes to give everybody a general good soaking.

If the democrats are doing so much good work over the nation, it does seem like we could see the effect of it some time. I have never seen any prosperity come from a Democratic administration in any county, state or nation at any time.

Always when bad times come in during a democratic administration, they are right ready to lay the cause of the hard time to something done by the other party just before they got into office. People, and fellow Progressives, you had better prepare for hard times again, real hard times like you had to endure back in Cleveland's administration of hard times, panics and everything to despair.

I shall close for this time but may come again if this escapes the waste basket; but in closing I wish to say to the Progressive brethren and to the dear old Union-Banner, just rally together for the support of the nominees in November, and pay no attention to what is said in the Clanton Press in regard to the outlook of our party, for they are trying to defeat our ticket by windwork and the excessive use of their natural gas. Just stick to your post and we'll together rejoice over the election of our nominees in November.

I am as always, a Progressive.
Uncle Pete.

POPE PIUS X DIES IN ROME

HEARTRENDING SCENE AS DYING MAN PROTESTS AGAINST EUROPEAN STRUGGLE.

ILL ONLY FOR SHORT TIME

Alarming Symptoms Developed Early Wednesday Morning, Bronchial Trouble Direct Cause

Rome, August 20.—Pope Pius X died at 1:30 o'clock this morning. He had been ill several days, but alarming symptoms did not develop until recently.

Throughout the day Doctors Marchiafava and Amici devoted their utmost energies to stimulating their patient and keeping him alive.

The cardinals were notified of the pope's grave condition and some of them who entered the sick room describe the scene as heartrendering, especially when the pontiff, rousing himself from time to time, spoke. Once he said, "In ancient times the pope by a word might have stayed the slaughter, but now he is impotent."

Prayers were said by thousands and church bells sounded when the sacrament was exposed upon all the altars. When the court learned of the pope's condition there was the deepest concern. King Victor Emmanuel personally informed Queen Helena and the news was communicated to the queen mother.

Extreme unction was administered by Monsigner Zampini, sacristan to his holiness, amid a touching scene. The pope's sisters and his niece were overcome with grief. Cardinal Merry Del Val knelt by the side of his bed, where other cardinals joined him, members of the household intoning prayers.

The dying pope, in a moment of lucidity, said

"Now, I begin to think as the end is approaching that the Almighty in His inexhaustible goodness wishes to spare me the horrors Europe is undergoing."

Wednesday was one of the most anxious days in the history of the papacy. The whole world knew that the pope was indisposed, but it was supposed he was suffering from usual ailment, the gout. Up to noon even the members of the household were unaware of the seriousness of the developments. Almost without warning came the word that the pontiff was at death's door.

LATE WAR NEWS

Paris. — The official communication of the French war office says:

"The French troops have occupied all the region to the west of Fenetrange, 32 miles inside the German frontier in Lorraine. Our troops poured through from the valley of the River Seille, of which a number of passes have been evacuated by the Germans. Our cavalry is at Chateau Salins.

"We have conquered the majority of the valleys of the Vosges upon the slope of Alsace, from where we will soon attain the plain.

"To the south of Saarburg, in Lorraine, 40 miles east of Nancy, the enemy had organized in front of us, strongly fortied, in a position held by heavy artillery. The Germans retreated precipitately and our cavalry pursued them."

London. — A Reuter dispatch from Brussels says the Germans made another attempt to cross the Meuse by a bridge not far from Dinant, where cannon firing was resumed. The French artillery repelled the attack with considerable loss.

London. — An official dispatch to the French embassy, says:

"The Germans have abandoned Sarrebourg, where they were strongly established with heavy artillery."

Washington. — Japan has asked the United States to take over her embassy in Berlin "case of an emergency."

London. — The British official press bureau announces that some desultory fighting occurred Tuesday between the British patrolling squadrons and flotillas and German cruisers, which were reconnoitering. No losses are reported.

FRENCH AND BRITISH SUFFER A REVERSE

Allies are Forced to Retire Following a Bloody Encounter With the German Army.

LOSSES REPORTED AS HEAVY

Offensive Plans Against the Kaiser's Troops Checked Along Long Battle Line.

Paris. — The French and British troops, opposing the invasion of the German army in Belgium have suffered a serious reverse, according to the official announcement issued by the French war office. In the battle line, which extends from Mons to the Luxemburg frontier, several army corps, composed of both British and French, took the offensive on Sunday against the Germans, but their plan of atatack failed, owing to the "unforescen difficulties" as described by the official statement, and the troops retired on the covering positions.

The losses on both sides are reported as extremely heavy, and the French officials describe the Germans as being obliged to establish themselves in fresh positions in Lorraine.

The French have abandoned those portions of Alsace and Lorraine which they previously had occupied and now look for heavy fighting in French territory.

At Tsing-Tau, capital of Kiauchau, the German protectorate in China, the German forces have prepared for a bombardment by the Japanese fleet by dynamiting all the tall structures there which might be used there by the attacking forces as sighting points. They also have taken all possible measures to oppose the advance of a Japanese field army.

There is a report emanating from Rome and Avlona that the Albanian insurgents have entered Avlona and raised their flag.

Emperor Nicholas of Russia is reported to have gone to the headquarters of the Russian army which has taken the offensive in full strength and is said to be advancing rapidly in east and west Prussia.

COTTON CONFERENCE HELD

Producer Must Be Assisted and Assistance Must Be Immediate—Southerners Attend.

SMITH BILL PASSES.

Washington. — The Senate, without roll call, passed the so-called cotton warehouse license bill, proposed by Senator Hoke Smith originally to add value to cotton warehouse certificates by means of government inspection and certification of the grades of cotton stored in licensed warehouses.

Washington. — Three points were emphasized above all others at the conference held here by Secretary McAdoo, the Federal reserve board and representatives of the cotton planters, manufacturers, merchants and bankers to discuss ways and means for carrying the cotton crop to the close of the European war.

First, the producer is the man to be assisted rather than the manufacturer, the banker, the merchant or, above all, the speculator.

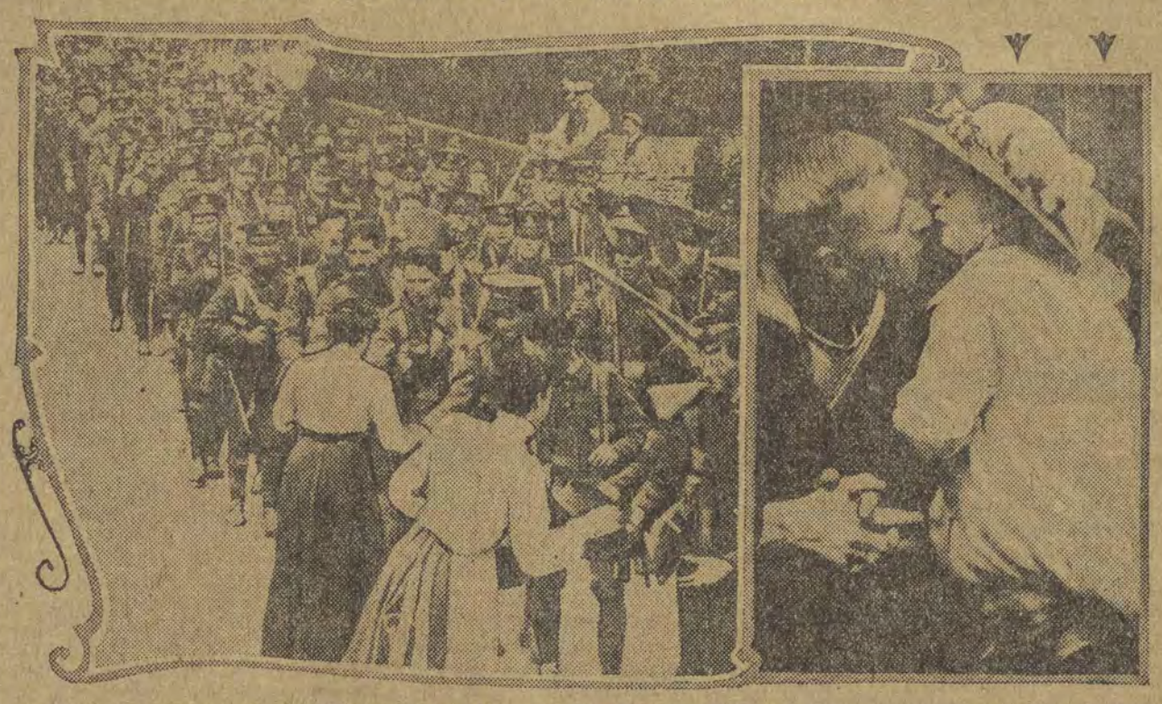
Second, any help to be fully effective must be immediate.

Third, the planters are not asking for "rescue," but are to be entrusted as men capable of handling them, with the means of tiding themselves over the present period of emergency.

The first two points were brought out by representatives of the cotton interests in Alabama and the third was voiced by President Wilson in an address to the visitors at the White House.

Beyond this, Secretary McAdoo said the treasury was prepared to handle the situation and indicated that "with warehouse facilities, cotton warehouse receipts could be made the basis for the issue of the national bank circulation." With the federal reserve system in operation, he estimated that the banks of the south would be able to secure national bank currency to finance 4,000,000 bales at $40 a bale. A total of $160,000,000.

Open Reserve Banks at Same Time.



Washington. — After many days' consideration the federal reserve board has decided that it will open all 12 federal reserve banks at the same time and launch the new banking system simultaneously all over the country. The board is expected to take up the selection of "Class C" directors of the 12 banks. This may take several days, but enough probably will be chosen in each district before the end of the week to make organization of the banks possible.

JAPAN DECLARES WAR ON GERMANY

IMPERIAL RESCRIPT IS ISSUED WHEN KAISER FAILS TO ANSWER ULTIMATUM.

PASSPORTS TO AMBASSADOR

Tokio.—The Emperor of Japan declared war on Germany. This action was taken at the expiration of the time limit of Japan's ultimatum to Germany demanding the surrender of Kiao Chow.

The Japanese government has ordered the beginning of operations on land and sea.

The imperial rescript declaring war on Germany was issued. It officially inaugurates hostilities in the far east as a result of Germany's failure to reply to the Japanese ultimatum.

The proclamation of the Emperor sent a thrill through the country. Japan's entrance upon the fulfillment of her obligations to her ally, Great Britain, responds to the popular will from one end of the land to the other. cheering crowds assembled before the public buildings and there were lantern processions through the streets. The popular manifestations, however, do not approach the enthusiasm which preceded the war with Russia.

Count Von Rex, the German ambassador, has been handed his passports. He probably will leave for America. George W. Guthrie, the American ambassador, will represent Germany The diet has been convoked in special session for September 3.

The Austrian cruiser Kaiserin Elizabeth, which latterly was at Tsing Tau, the seaport of Kiao Chow, is reported to have sailed. She perhaps will go to a neutral port and disarm. It is believed that this act will keep Austria out of the war in the Orient, although unforeseen circumstances may force Japan to change this policy. No action has been taken relative to Austria, and the foreign office has explained that Japan will remain friendly unless Austria adopts an attitude which is regarded offensive.

It is reported here that Germany has been trying to transfer the German railroad in Shan Tung, China, to America. Tokio believes, however, that the United States, pursuing the policy of neutrality outlined by President Wilson, will not accept.

"Issued at Tokio, August 23, 6 p. m.

"We, by the grace of heaven, Emperor of Japan, seated on the throne occupied by the same dynasty from time immemorial, do hereby make the following proclamation to all our loyal and brave subjects:

"We hereby declare war against Germany and we command our army and navy to carry on hostilities against that empire with all their stregth, and we also command all our competent authorities to make every effort, in pursuance of their respective duties to attain the national aim by all means within the limits of the law of nations.

"Since the outbreak of the present war in Europe, the calamitous effect of which we view with grave concern, we, on our part, have entertained hopes of preserving the peace of the for east by the maintenance of strict neutrality, but the action of Germany has compelled Great Britain, our ally, to open hostilities against that country, and Germany is at Kiau Chau, its leased territory in China, busy with warlike preparations, while its armed vessels cruising the seas of Eastern Asia are threatening our commerce and that of our ally. Peace of the far east is thus in jeopardy.

"Accordingly, our government and that of his Britannic Majesty, after full and frank communication with each other, agreed to take such measures as may be necessary for the protection of the general interests, contemplated in the agreement of alliance and we on our part being desirous to attain that object by peaceful means commanded our government to offer with sincerity an advice to the Imperial German government. By the last day appointed for the purpose however our government failed to receive an answer accepting their advices. It is with profound regret that we, in spite of our ardent devotion to the cause of peace, are thus compelled to declare war, espicially at this early period of our reign and while we are in mourning for our lamented mother.

"It is our earnest wish that by the loyality and valor of our faithful subjects, peace soon may be restored and the glory of the empire enhanced."

PROTESTS TREATY VIOLATION.

Washington.—Mr. Havenith, the Belgian minister, has presented a note of protest to the state department against violation by Germany of the treaty of 1839, which guarantees the neutrality of Belgium. The same note will be delivered to the foreign offices of all neutral and allied nations.

BELGIAN'S PLUCK IS SHOWN ANEW

GERMANS OCCUPY BRUSSELS

Throngs Flee Belgian Capital as Forces of Kaiser Approach—Story of How Teutonic Army Took the City.

By ERNEST SMITH.

(Correspondent of the London Daily News.)

Ostend.—After the heroic defense of Diest and Tirlemont it was the turn of Louvain and Aershot to try with handfuls of troops to keep the invader at bay while the main Belgian army was reforming its position.

The battle of Tuesday before Tirlemont had gone on till ten o'clock at night, and even after that, during the few hours before daybreak, rifles snapped out the notice there would be no sleep in the land that night.

Under the cover of darkness the Belgian general staff and army was silently moving to its new position. To have fought where it was at that moment would have given away all the advantages of the allies and would have been to risk heavy loss, and perhaps defeat.

Germans Charge Trenches.

It was, however, not to do military expert's work that I started to write this, but rather to follow the fortunes of the plucky rear guard of Belgians left behind to harrass the oncoming Germans.

At dawn on Wednesday I saw the Germans hotly attacking the trenches that had been filled up during the night with fresh men. Part of them were of the famous Liege field force that had decimated the Germans who approached the trenches before the Liege forts. They had begged to be sent back to Liege to meet the enemy again there. This could not be done, but they had their opportunity now, a desperate one, it is true, for each of those men knew he was marked down to be sacrificed if necessary in the interest of the plans of the defense.

Air Scouts Get Range.

Two German aeroplanes flying audaciously low swept over the trenches to see how they were held. Almost immediately afterward the German artillery got the range of the trenches and commenced bursting shrapnel over them. Infantry and machine guns were quickly at work and the little band of defenders settled down to keep the enemy's masses of troops at bay as long as possible.

By six o'clock the attack was general along the whole line, but it was particularly violent in front of Aershot. There was a pitiless and determined onslaught in which the German commanders showed the same disregard for the loss of men as elsewhere. Two of the heroic regiments from Liege bore the brunt of the attack in the position northeast of town. They were outnumbered by ten to one, but they stuck to their positions with the courage of desperation and inflicted a fearful loss on the Germans. Their own losses were terrible.

Germans Enter Louvain.

By 10 o'clock the Germans were in Louvain. They had brought their infantry and machine guns up by motor cars, moving quickly. As the civil guard already had been disbanded, there remained only the rear guard in the town to harass the enemy as long as possible.

It was the same story at Diest, Tirlemont and Aerschot. A brief heroic resistance was followed by the inevitable envelopment of the vast forces the Germans were pushing forward. There were desperate combats at Corbeckloe and Lovenjoul and the honorable retreat had been sounded once more.

THRONGS FLEE BRUSSELS.

By John Banister.

(London Standard Correspondent.)

Ostend.—The Germany are in Brussels. This knowledge is brought home to us more forcibly as each hour brings a fresh flock of fugitives from the east. These are not so much the citizens of Brussels as inhabitants of the regions between Liege and the capital who have been wearily making their way towards the coast to evade the ravages of the war.

I left Brussels at 10 o'clock on Wednesday night. The streets were full of excited civilians who were crowding round the gunsmiths' shops clamoring for fire arms. At that time the civilian population of Brussels was bent on holding the city against the invaders and only urgent advice by the Belgian authorities and the proclamation of the burgomaster prevented the shopkeepers and artisans from facing the kaiser's hordes. They seemed resolved to sell their lives dearly rather than give up their beloved capital without a blow.

Crowded With Fugitives.

Early Thursday morning those of the civil guard who had not been removed were disarmed and ordered by the Belgians to maintain a pacific attitude.

The Germans entered Louvain at nine o'clock Wednesday morning, and when an abbe left an hour or two later many of the houses were in flames.

Ostend is overrun with fugitives of all classes. Hundreds are camping out on the sands and others are living as best they can in the fields. The Digue is black with fugitives, many of whom are in great distress, having lost all and having no means of support.

Tell of Brussels' Fall.

The German cavalry which entered Brussels Thursday afternoon was preceded by a group of horsemen, one of whom carried a white flag to indicate that the Germans had no intention of committing any act of hostility unless menaced by the civilian inhabitants.

The officer in command formally notified the burgomaster that the Germans had taken possession of the city. The conversation was carried on with cold courtesy on both sides. The burgomaster mentioned the measures he had taken to pacify the inhabitants, and the German officer gave his assurance that the civil population would not be molested in any way so long as perfect order was maintained.

Citizens Watch Entry.

The German cavalry was followed by considerable bodies of infantry, who marched into Brussels in perfect silence. Their arrival was watched by the citizens, but there was no demonstration of any kind. German troops occupy the public buildings, and others are encamped in the open spaces of the city.

In front of the Hotel Metropole and before the principal railway station are encampments of German troops, while others have taken up quarters in different parts of town.

Communication between them is maintained by military cyclists, and German army automobiles dash to and fro carrying officers from point to point.

Many of the shops are closed, but the Germans pressed the bakeries into their service, each bakery being compelled to supply a certain fixed number of loaves per day in return for the local prices of bread.

All stations and railway lines in and around Brussels are guarded by German troops, who also are watching over the water and electric works and gas reservoirs.

Military Law Proclaimed.

German military law has been proclaimed and stringent regulations have been issued for the control of the inhabitants, who are strictly prohibited from being outside their doors after 7 o'clock at night. The Germans also seized a number of prominent citizens, their number being given as 18 to 20, to be held as hostages for the good behavior of the remainder of the inhabitants.

The Germans are commandeering all sorts of provisions and supplies from wholesale stores and retail shops, paying the price which they themselves fix for the goods supplied. Horses and motor cars also are being pressed into service by the invaders.

Portugal's Stake in the War.

The participation of Portugal in the great war is not of such little importance as is generally believed. She has colonies comprising over 800,000 square miles, inhabited by more than 9,000,000 people. All of these colonies would be exposed to seizure were Germany and Austria successful. Portugal, therefore, has a big stake involved. On the other hand, the alliance with England has been a guarantee to Portugal of the permanence of her possessions.

Sends Son to Death.

Paris.—Sub-Lieut. Vincent Folque the only son of Colonel Folque, had just left the Polytechnic and had been attached to his father's regiment. On Friday last Colonel Folque called for an officer to volunteer for what was practically a forlorn hope. His son was the first to come forward. Colonel Folque appointed him to the mission, and a few hours later the young lieutenant fell mortally wounded.

Paris to Name Street for Liege.

London.—According to a Paris dispatch to the Reuter Telegram company, the council of ministers at the French capital has approved the proposal to rename the Rue d'Allemagne as the Rue de Jean Jaures and the Rue de Berlin as the Rue de Liege.

GERMANS WILL FIGHT TO LAST DROP OF BLOOD

London.—A Marconi wireless message from Berlin tells of the German emperor's farewell address to the First regiment of Foot Guards.

They had assembled, the emperor said, to pray that German arms might be blessed, so that they should be able to keep flying the flag of the fatherland over the envy of its enemies, even if this entailed the sacrificing of the last drop of German blood.

The sword which he had allowed to remain in its sheath decade after decade, and which he now drew, must decide. He declared it could not be sheathed again without victory and honor. This war found the nation trusting in Almighty God and remembering the glorious days of old.

The commander of the regiment renewed the oath of loyalty and proclaimed the regiment's unquenchable thirst for victory, and its determination to fight to the death.

GOOD SHOWING IS MADE AT ASYLUM

DOINGS AT STATE CAPITAL

Proceedings of Public Events—News of An Important Nature Given.

Montgomery.—Books and accounts of the Bryce Insane Hospital, located at Tuscaloosa, are in excellent condition, and the institution is a model of its kind, according to Public Accountant J. T. Gorman in a report to the Governor of Alabama.

The report of the examiner covered a period extending from October 1, 1912, to July 31, 1914, during which period the total receipts from all funds amounted to $724,348.30, and disbursements $699,593.53.

Examiner Gorman declared that on August 1 last there were 1434 patients in Bryce Hospital and 775 patients in the Mt. Vernon Hospital, colored.

"No state in the United States has a better and more modern asylum for the treatment and protection of its unfortunate insane population than Alabama."

CORPORATION LAWS CODIFIED.

Daniel W. Troy Prepares Handbook Dealing With Subject.

Montgomery.—Foreign corporation laws in Alabama have been codified and compiled in documentary form by Daniel W. Troy, special counsel for the state in foreign corporation cases. The volume is just off the press and it will supply a strong demand among the lawyers of the state.

Mr. Troy is considered one of the leading authorities in the state on every phase of the corporation law and his handbook has already met with much favor among the lawyers of the state.

GOVERNOR OFFERS REWARD.

Montgomery.—Details of one of the most horrible crimes ever committed in Alabama have been received at the office of Governor O'Neal from Lee County and as a result a reward of $100 was offered for the conviction of Pomp Dickerson, charged with wife murder.

It is alleged that Dickerson killed his wife and hid the body in a swamp where it was found a few days later. It was horribly mutilated. Dickerson disappeared.

The request that a reward be offered for the arrest of Dickerson was made by Sheriff G. P. Butler and Solicitor G. A. L. Samford.

Must Prove Title to Lands.

Montgomery. — Claimants of unpatented Sixteenth Section school lands in the State of Alabama who have failed to establish their title to these lands must pay the state for them, according to W. J. Martin, State Land Agent, who issued a statement that suit would be brought against the claimants immediately. Mr. Martin will act in accordance with instructions received from Governor O'Neal.

"Some time ago the governor gave instructions that all the unpatented Sixteenth Section lands in the state which were claimed and occupied by various persons should be recovered, by suit, if necessary, except in cases which might be compromised," said Mr. aMrtin.

"Following publication of this announcement hundreds of applications were filed and proof in support of the applicants' claims to the property was submitted. These cases are being compromised and settled, and, of course there will be no suit in any of them.

"In all other cases, where the parties claiming these lands have failed to respond to the notices sent them, it is taken for granted that they are unable to make proof as to sufficient possession to entitle them to the property, and action will be brought to recover the lands claimed by them."

New Banks Begin Business.

Montgomery.—Papers reporting the incorporation of the Wilsonville State bank of Wilsonville, Shelby county, have been filed in the office of the secretary of state. The bank began business with a paid in capital of $10,000. A. H. Smith and several others are interested.

The Tuskegee State bank of Tuskegee, Macon county, is another new one. The new institution will have a paid-in capital of $42,000.

Montgomery.—John Moffatt, recording secretary to Governor O'Neal, has the "reins of government" in his hands during the absence of Governor O'Neal, who has gone to Tate Spring, Tenn., for a short rest. Kirkman O'Neal, son of the governor, and his secretary, is also away, hence Mr. Moffatt is in full charge.

The governor said that he would be away for about a week. He has been extremely busy during the last few days disposing of routine business matters.

DESTROY INTEREST COUPONS.

Huge Sum Represented Interest on State's Debt in January.

Montgomery.—Destruction of interest bearing coupons for $60,955, representing the interest on the state's debt in January, has been reported to the governor by Examiner of Public Accounts J. T. Gorman, who verified the amount and payments and assisted Treasurer John Purifoy in burning the coupons.

The examiner reported that records of the state's debt are being properly kept. His investigation showed that $35,000 is credited to the bond redemption fund in the American National bank of New York.

FURBEARERS TO BE PROTECTED.

Wallace Says Game Laws Should Be So Amended.

Montgomery.—Game laws of Alabama will be amended at the next session of the legislature so as to provide protection for fur-bearing animals, according to John H. Wallace, Jr., state game and fish commissioner. Mr. Wallace believes that a season for fur-bearing animals should be prescribed and that adequate punishment should be provided for those who disregard the law.

"No semblance of protection has ever been furnished even the most valuable of our fur-bearing animals, such as beaver, otter and mink," said Mr. Wallace. "They have been taken at will at all seasons of the year, regardless of the fact that during the spring, summer and early fall months the fur is practically worthless and now these valuable quadrupeds are nearing the point of extinction.

"Many states prohibit the taking of otter and beaver at any season of the year. The constantly diminishing resources of this state, as it consists in fur-bearing animals, should be protected by providing that these quadrupeds can only be taken during the winter months, and that those trapping for them on the lands of others cannot do so legally without first having had duly issued to them a trapper's license."

Alabama Exhibit at Frisco.

Montgomery.—The European war will have no effect on the plans for Alabama representation at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, which will be held next year at San Francisco, according to a telegram sent by Lee Cowart, secretary of the Alabama exposition commission, to Charles C. Moore, president of the exposition. Mr. Cowart's telegram was sent in answer to a request from President Moore that Alabama's position and intention be outlined so that the information can be included in a statement to be issued soon by William Jennings Bryan, secretary of state.

"Our national government, through the department of justice, desires to proclaim to the world that there will be no postponement of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition," wires President Moore.

Suit Against Sheriff Filed.

Montgomery.—In a suit filed in the city court the State of Alabama claims $750 from Sheriff Horace Hood for funds alleged to have been illegally collected from the state by the officer's feed bills, which the state claims were irregular.

The suit grew out of a report made by Examiner Townes to Governor O'Neal, who charges irregularity in the feed bills and the illegal payment of such. Sheriff Hood denies owing the state any money and recently informed the state board of compromise that he would not pay any such amount unless ordered by the court.

Pope Given Respite.

Montgomery.—Governor O'Neal has granted a four weeks' respite to Ervin Pope, condemned negro murderer of Calhoun county, who was to have been executed Friday August 22. Notice of the respite was telegraphed to the sheriff of Calhoun county and the prisoner has been transferred to the Jefferson county jail for safe-keeping.

Injunction Against Headland.

Montgomery.—An injunction to restrain the town of Headland, Ala., from enforcing its license tax of $500 against the Buckeye Cotton Oil company was granted the corporation by Judge Gaston Gunter in the city court in equity.

Road Contracts for Greene and Marion

Montgomery.—Contracts for the construction of state-aid roads in Greene and Marion counties have been let by the state highway department. The new road in Greene county will cost $7000, of which amount the state will pay $3271.

Sues Railroad.

Montgomery. — Injuries received while in the employ of the Western Railway of Alabama caused Will Smith to bring suit against the road for $10,000 damages.

Montgomery. — Announcement was made by the state military department that Sergeant A. J. Pahnke, United States army, will spend September in Birmingham instructing the hospital corps of that city. The following month he will instruct the Mobile corps.

During the year Sergeant Pahnke has organized the hospital corps and put it into serviceable condition. His assignment to Alabama is for three years, subject to removal, and he will spend the next two years instructing the corps

PIMPLES ITCHED AND BURNED

Route No. 3, Dadeville, Ala.—"I was troubled with a terrible breaking out between my shoulders and down to my hips. It came in pimples and my back looked very red and raw. It itched and burned so that sleep and rest were impossible and I could not sleep any hardly for weeks. My clothes irritated my back till it got so sore I had to have a soft cloth pinned to my shirt.

"As I heard of Cuticura Soap and Ointment for years I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap and box of Cuticura Ointment and to my surprise and joy my itching and burning had disappeared. My back had been so raw and inflamed I could not lie on it and the first application brought relief. I washed my back twice a day with a strong lather of Cuticura Soap and then applied the Cuticura Ointment. In two weeks I was sound and well and have never been troubled since." (Signed) J. D. Confident an Enemy Will Appear.

The Irish people are managing to get some old-fashioned fun out of the menacing situation in Ulster. The London Chronicle (which is for home rule) says that at the moment when both bands of volunteers were swarming through an Ulster town a volunteer of some kind, in full panoply of war, was met in the street by a friend.

"So you are going to fight?" said the friend.

"Yes."

"Who are you going to fight, the Nationalists?"

"No, we are not going to fight the Nationalists."

"Are you going to fight the police?"

"No, I do not think we are going to fight the police."

"Are you going to fight the English soldiers?"

"No, I don't think we shall fight the English soldiers."

"Then who are you going to fight?"

"The Lord will provide."

Forgetful Vacationist.

"Forgotten the tickets?" cried a neighbor.

"No," said the irate householder, "but my wife's just remembered that she's left a kettle boiling on the gas stove."

He dived into the house, and came back the next moment with a ghastly calm on his face.

"All right now?" said the neighbor cheerily.

"Right! I'd forgotten that I'd turned the gas off at the meter—and now we've two hours and a half to wait for the next train."

Easily Classified.

Hemmandhaw, who was writing a letter, looked up to inquire:

"Is it ever permissible to apply gender to volcanies?"

"I don't know," Mrs. Hemmandhaw returned, "but if it is they are surely masculine."

"Why?"

"Because they sputter, grumble and smoke."

Why are the people not taken into the confidence of the plans which you democrats propose on road building?

If what you democrats want to do is so good for the people, why not give them a chance to vote on the question?

Is it not a fact that before the present democratic officers were hardly seated in their chairs, the Press began to advocate the issuance of bonds?

We believe fully in the initiative referendum and recall, and wish we had this law now. If we did our people would have more to say about county affairs.

The Union-Banner stands for good roads. We will be glad to see as many miles of permanent road built in this county each year as the county is able to build, and will lend every effort we can along this line; but we will never advocate running any thing over the people.

This paper believes that the will of the people is supreme and that every tax payer has a right to know every transaction of the county involving taxes. We will never advocate putting all the money of the county on one road for a few special people, and get the county in debt so far that the work on the rural roads will have to stop.

This paper stands for the rights of the common people; it is againtst bossism it makes no difference where it comes from.

The Press misunderstands the Union-Banner entirely in this argument against the issuance of warrants by the county to build the Birmingham - Montgomery Highway; or else they know our correct attitude, and are endeavoring to portray it falsely. The editor of the Union-Banner does not care a flip of his finger whether warrants were issued or not in 1906. What we are fighting is the issuance of warrants NOW, for the purpose which is in view. We do not believe it is right, as we have repeatedly said, and we would fight against it whether it were in 1906, now or any other time. It matters not who attemts to put such a thing over the voters of the county, so long as this editor is in the position he is in now, you will find his protest registered against such practice. Let the Press tell us in what way the warrants which are alleged to have been issued in 1906 affect the present campaign, and we will discuss it with them.

Will the Clanton Press kindly tell the people what the chairman of the Democratic executive committee told the commissioners court that influenced the Probate Judge to cast the deciding vote for the road changs just south of Clanton? Could your chairman have accused your Probate Judge of anything worse? How about this Mr. Press man? Does perfect peace and harmony exist in your party as you would have people believe? But on the other hand aren't about half of the democrats of the county discusted with how things are being run in this county at this time, under democratic principles? Have not the people the right to vote on any bond issue? Is the warrant issue which has been suggested and pushed by the Democrats of this county anything more than whipping the devil around the stump? If the people want their county involved in debt to build one special road, why not allow them their constitutional right to vote on the question?

Listen to a bunch of all-confident "chronic" democrats assembled on a street corner on Sunday afternoon displaying their political wisdom, and immagine the terrible end they predict for the Progressive party. How exultantly they smile and talk of the fatal "split" in the republican party, and gloat over the untrammeled success that will inevitably come to the Democratic party forever hereafter! Such political gas bags are sickening in the superlative degree, and as to actual political knowledge, they could not distinguish Wilson's platform from the fourteenth Amendment. But oh, the voice of Democracy! How welcome is the refreshing sound of thy promises of peace and prosperity to a nation so much in need! And where art thou, Fulfillment of these promises? Hast thou come forth fresh with the bloom of growing industry at the empty call of these extremests, or hast thou receded to a covert of safety to await the beckoning hand of Confidence to summon thee again to thy ministry of benevolence among the neeey multitudes?

I seems from the way the Clanton Press deals with certain questions of politcs in last week's issue that they regard the editor of the Union-Banner as being simply led around by supposed bosses, and as really having no head of his own. Then directly on another matter they seem to regard this same editor as a veritable Solomon in point of knowledge and wisdhm. Now we cannot tell from such statements where you intend to place us, Mr. Press, but we wish you to distinctly understand one thing: We have sense enough to know that the people of this county do not care for things so foolish and frivolous as some things you said last week about us, and we are not going to attempt to answer them. They are not deep enough to pass as the simplest reason; they are too narrow to be recognized as even the most cynical logic. We could get our volume of Brann's Iconiclast and review up a little too, and probably say a few funny things that would "jar a speckled hen off the roost," or make a "kangaroo ashamed of himself;" but who cares for such? Who would be more enlightened by it? Who in this campaign, stakes anything on a personal controversy between the editor of the Press and the Union-Banner? We are not so important as that Mr. Press man. But you will observe that we are not trying to get around any reasonable argument on any question that really does concern the issues of the campaign. We will be with you there any time you call on us.

Bethel.

Mr. Editor:—Please allow me space in your paper for a few words.

Enoch Driver and wife, and Whit Brown visited the singing school at New Harmony Friday.

Rev. J. S. Kelley and wife visited relatives in Clanton last Saturday and Sunday.

Mrs. Tim Smith of near Cooper died Saturday night, and was buried at Cooper Sunday.

The little 18 month old child of Sam Nations died Monday and was buried at Cooper. Its mother died about two or three months ago.

There has been a lot of sickness here, but all seem better now.

Answers of The Clanton Press

The Union-Banner in its always eager desire to criticise the official acts of the present Beard of County Commissioners, has the following to say in the last issue:

"They have failed for the last three years to even pay the current expenses of the county. How can they do more? Doesn't the county owe several thousand dollars on accounts that have not been passed on by the Commissioners Court?"

The Union-Banner is either grossly ignorant of the financial condition of the county, or is willing to resort to any kind of scheme to deceive the people and discredit the present Board of Commissioners without first ascertaining the facts.

There is not one word of truth in the statement that the county has failed to pay the current expense; nor is it true that the county owes several thousand dollars on accounts that have not been passed on by the Commissioners Court.

The Union-Banner in its issue of August 6, propounded some questions to us, and we are going to answer them as they come, in a "plain and open" way, as follows.

"Doesn't the county owe at this time six or seven thousand dollars on road work?" No.

"Doesn't the county owe three thousand dollars on one of the road machines?" No.

"Doesn't the county owe over a thousand dollars to the managers and clerks of the elections that have been held this year, and to school enumerators?" YES, and the Union-Banner is fully aware that for the years 1908, 1910 and 1912, these officers were not paid until the November term of the court, except one year—1908—they did receive payment in part for their services. Yes, we repeat that the Union-Bannnr knows as well as does every well informed man, that it has been the custom of the court to pay these officials, at the November term.

"Doesn't the county owe its own current expense for the last four or five months?" YES.

"Will not all the above amount to about fifteen thousand dollars, and perhaps more?" No, not half of it.

"Is it not a fact that there is not a dollar in the general funds of the county?" Yes.

These two articles appeared in the same paper, the Clanton Press, of different dates. Can they be reconciled so that both of them will speak the truth? Is it not a fact that one of them says that the other one is not true? and both printed in the Clanton Press. How can this be? Would the Clanton Press have aknowledged that the county owed anything at all, if the direct questions had not been propounded to it by the Union-Banner? We will now ask them how much the county does owe on road work. We will also ask them how much the county owes on the road machine. One of the Commissioners counted over ten thousand dollars that the county owed, and he did not count the current expense of the county for the last four or five months, in that; however, the Press says that it is less than half of fifteen thousand dollars. Which is true, the commissioner who knows or the Clanton Press? We would like for the Clanton Press to tell the people just how much the county does owe at this time.

Why wasn't the Press fair, and tell you that the reason the election officers were not paid heretofore before November, was that there was no law authorizing the paying of election managers and clerks for primary elections. Does not the Clanton Press know that this is a new law and was not enacted until 1911?—See the general acts of 1911 on page 523 and read for yourself and see who is right and who wrong.

We want to ask the Clanton Press why they tried to deceive the people of the county in their issue of Aug. 20, in regard to the financial condition of the county. Why don't they be fair and tell the people the real truth in regard to the condition of the county? Will they come plain now and acknowledge that they were trying to deceive the people in last week's issue about the election officers never receiving their pay until in November, when there was no law at all to pay them for managing a primary election? We will be pleased to hear their explanation of these things, if they will give it. It would doubtless be interesting reading.

Heart Disease Almost Fatal to Young Girl

"My daughter, when thirteen years old, was stricken with heart trouble. She was so bad we had to place her bed near a window so she could get her breath. One doctor said, 'Poor child, she is likely to fall dead any time.' A friend told me Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy had cured her father, so I tried it, and she began to improve. She took a great many bottles, but she is spared to me today, a fat, rosy cheeked girl. No one can imagine the confidence I have in Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy." A. R. CANON, Worth, Mo.

The unbounded confidence Mr. Canon has in Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy is shared by thousands of others who know its value from experience. Many heart disorders yield to treatment, if the treatment is right. If you are bothered with short breath, fainting spells, swelling of feet or ankles, pains about the heart and shoulder blades, palpitation, weak and hungry spells, you should begin using Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy at once. Profit by the experience of others while you may.

Political Speakings are Success

The public speakings that are being held over the county in the interest of the Progressive party this week are meeting with the most favorable success. Large crowds are coming out to meet the speakers, and great interest is being shown in the questions discussed. Mr. L. R. Sawyer, nominee for the Legislature, met Judge Reynolds in joint debate at Cane Creek Monday night. The main subject of his speech was in trying to show some of the blessings the people are receiving at the hands of the Democratic administration. Every man in the county should keep a watch out for the dates they are to be held in his community, and come to here what is beieg said in his behalf.

ASTHMA AND HAY FEVER A GUARANTEED RELIEF

"I have arranged with Alred Drug Company so that every sufferer from Asthma, Hay Fever or Bronchial Asthma in Clanton can try my treatment entirely at my risk," Dr. Rudolph Schiffmann announces. He says: "Buy a 50-cent package of my Asthmador, try it, and if it does not afford you immediate relief, or if you do not find it the best remedy you have ever used, take it back to Alred Drug Company and they will return your money, cheerfully and without any question whateyer. After seeing the grateful relief it has afforded in hundrers of cases, which had been considered incurable, and which had been given up in despair, I know what it will do. I am so sure that it will do the same with others that I am not afraid to guarantee it will relieve instantaneously. The druggists handling Asthmador will return your money if you say so. You are to be the sole judge and under this positive guarantee, absolutely no risk is run in buying Asthmador."

Persons living elsewhare will be supplied under the same guarantee by their local druggist or direct by Dr. R. Schiffmann, St. Paul, Minn.

HOW TO GET STRENGTH

after any sickness is purely a matter of nourishment, whether the attack was an ordinary cold or severe illness; the weakened forces cannot repulse disease germs, and this is why a relapse is so often fatal or why chronic weakness often follows sickness.

Restoring strength to millions of people for forty years has proven the real need for taking Scott's Emulsion after any sickness; nothing equals it—nothing compares with it. Its pure, medicinal nourishment, free from alcohol or opiates, promptly creates rich blood, strengthens the nerves and lungs to avert tuberculosis.

A Letter From Squire Waldrup

Editor Union-Banner:—Please allow me space to reply to some charges which I hear are being circulated against me on the road question by some democrats, saying I am opposed to good roads.

I have favored good roads all the time, but I don't believe in plunging the county into debt over the will of the tax payers. No; anyone hearing the false reports, pass them by as false.

I send you a clipping from the Birmingham News, which gives my position on road building; and we, with good tax, can do the same. The clipping is as follows:

"Anniston, Ala.—Calhoun county is building a fine system of good roads without a bond issue or other debt device.

"The improvement has been under way for several years and is now rapidly assuming countywide proportions.

"The work is being done with the use of regular road funds under the supervision of a good supervisor and engineer. Teams and men are kept on the highways all the time.

"The road north of Jacksonville has been completed a distance of fifteen miles. The road west through Alexandria valley toward Ohatchie and Ashville has been completed for a distance of twenty miles. This is one of the routes to Birmingham.

"Another road running east up Choccolocco valley has been completed for a distance of eighteen miles.

"Another good highway connects Anniston with Talledega.

"These four main highways connect Anniston with every section of Calhoun county. Other roads are being improved, but not yet constructed as first class highways.

"The building of these highways has worked wonders in the improvement of farm conditions. It is noticeable that the building of a good road by a farmer's house does not only inspire him to introduce improved methods but he usually paints his house, repairs his fences and cleans up generally.

"This naturally leads to better sanitation and better living."

Greatest Event in Woman's Life

The patience, the fortitude, the sublime faith during the period of expectancy are second only to the mother love bestowed upon the most helpless but most marvelous creation—a baby.
Women are quick to learn from each other those helpful agencies that aid to comfort, that conserve their nervous energy and yet are perfectly safe to use and among these they recommend "Mother's Friend."
It is entirely an external application designed to lubricate the broad, flat muscles and skin that protect the abdomen. It has been in favorable use for nearly half a century and is known to mothers in almost every settled community in the United States who highly recommend it. You will find it on sale in drug stores. "Mother's Friend" is utterly harmless, contains no deadening drugs and yet its influence in the skin and muscles beneath as also upon the network of nerves beneath the skin is very beneficial, very soothing and a wonderful help. The muscles expand naturally and are not subjected to unnecessary surface strain and pain.
Get a bottle of "Mother's Friend" today at any drug store and write to us for our instructive little book to mothers. Address Bradfield Regulator Co., 413 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of "THE MAN HIGHER UP," "HIS RISE TO POWER," Etc.

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

SYNOPSIS.

He went again to the cupboard and took down a battered tin candlestick. He lighted its candle and started toward the inward door. Half-way, he stopped abruptly and turned, his mouth working strangely.

"If ye ever git rich," he dragged the words out slowly, even painfully, "come back here an' build a steel plant. There's a heap of fine coal an' iron in these hills, an' the river an' railroad'll give ye good transportation. This valley's meant fur it. I was jest a little too early—an' a little too ignorant, I reckon. But ye're smarter an' better schooled than me, an' the time's comin'. I'd like to see a Truitt build it."

Never before had Simon Truitt spoken of his dream and failure to his son.

"Yes. Keep thinkin' about it. It's—it's a big idea."

Mark started. The phrase again! Simon went to the window and peered out into the silvery night—toward the south. Then he moved heavily toward the door. He turned again; the flickering light from the candle threw the lined, patient face into sharp relief.

"Good night, Mark."

"Good night, father."

The door closed. For many minutes Mark, left alone, absently fingered the pocketbook and thought of the man who had given it to him. Then he blew out the lamp and rose from the table.

He, too, paused at the window and looked out into the night, toward the south. He tried to see the sleeping valley as his father had dreamed it, alight with the fires of many furnaces, palpitant with the rumble of many engines. He thought he saw it.

The picture faded. He saw only a vague shadowy mass in a moonlit meadow, the dismantled forge, silent witness that for those who march upon the battlefield that is called industry is no third choice. They must conquer—or be conquered!

CHAPTER III.

The Masters.

He found himself, a lonely foreign figure knowing not whither he would go, somehow in the city's heart.

Chance led him to the principal thoroughfare. The city had begun to quit its toil, and the released toilers were pouring into the street, an endless unordered horde, heedless of him as they were of one another. Never before had he seen so many people.

He had a confused sense of being sucked into a narrow, gloomy canyon through which poured a flood of humanity, a treacherous, dangerous torrent, with many cross-currents. Countless faces, wan in the unnatural twilight, streamed by him; a stranger type to him, fox-featured, restless of eye.

Full darkness fell. He paused under a fiery sign, The Seneca. Through a great plate-glass window he saw a gaudy red-and-gold interior broken by many columns that to the inexpert eye somewhat resembled marble. Uniformed pages scurried to and fro. Well-dressed men lounged in easy chairs or sauntered leisurely about. Many lights burned brilliantly. He looked within longingly.

While he debated whether or not to enter this expensive-looking hostelry, a porter swooped upon him and snatched from his hands the ancient carpetbag that held his slender wardrobe.

"This way, suh!"

He followed the porter to the desk, painfully conscious of the figure he cut, uncouth, out of place. A clerk of lofty mien placed an open register before him.

"Write your name here."

Mark wrote it.

"And your town."

Mark hesitated—and then, with a dogged lowering of his head, firmly wrote the name of that city.

In the dining room that night many smiles were cast at the raw country youth. He did not regard himself as a subject for mirth. As he attacked the strange viands the waiter set before him, a little of his self-confidence returned. The vivid sense of a cruel, overpowering entity faded. Homesickness for Bethel, the refuge, subsided.

He began to take in details of the novel scene around him.

His ears strained to catch the remarks that floated to him from the neighboring tables. It was a strange tongue he heard, lightly dismissing topics that would have busied the gossips of Bethel for a moon. There was a young man who wore diamonds and talked in a loud and impressive fashion.

". . . Elizabeth, I see, broke the record again." (Elizabeth, it developed, was not a race horse, but one of the Quinby Steel company's blast furnaces.) "Yes, sir! More'n forty thousand tons. Henley says—I think so myself—we're going to have the biggest steel year yet. —No-o, I don't just exactly know him, but I know people that do.—And Tom Henley's going to be the biggest steel man in the business—gets his fifty thousand a year already. . . . MacGregor and Quinby? Oh, they're the richest. They let the others make the steel while they make the money. See? Ha! ha! . . . Tom Henley's the brains of the Quinby crowd. And he's the d——dest speculator. . . . Worth his half-million, they say, and ain't over thirty-five. . . ."

And this was the city from another angle. Tom Henley, evidently, had the monster well in hand.

The name had a familiar ring. Mark drew from his pocket a letter Richard Courtney had given him that morning. Upon it was inscribed, "To Thomas Henley, Esquire."

"He may be willing to help you find work," Courtney had said, "if he remembers me."

Mark regarded the letter thoughtfully. He wondered what was in it. After a moment's hesitation he opened—it was unsealed—and read it.

"My Dear Henley," the letter ran, "I am sending you one who is the work of my hands. He is a young man of parts, 'good friends,' as we say up here in Bethel, 'with work.' Also he 'has a nose for money.' They are qualities for which you, perhaps, can help him find a market. . . . I say he is my handiwork; but he is an unfinished product. What, I wonder, will the new life that succeeds me as his mentor make of him? Perhaps I should let him strike out for himself and learn at once the ugly cruelty of the struggle that now seems to him so glorious. But we oldsters have the habit of helping youth to the sugar-plums of which we have learned the after-taste. . . . And this introduction is the last thing I can do for a young man who means much to me."

After many minutes' study Mark came to his decision. He would present himself and the letter to Thomas Henley. He would do it that very night. He rose from his dinner.

"Where," he inquired of the supercilious clerk, "does Thomas Henley live? I must see him tonight."

The directions brought Mark at length into the heart of a small community from which the city still kept at a humble distance. Not so the fog, which was no respecter even of gilded colonies. From a tall iron fence sloped a wide sweeping lawn dotted at exact intervals with trees and shrubbery. And in its center loomed a great shadowy mass, punctured by many windows shooting broad luminous bars into the fog. It was the castle of the tamer.

He proceeded with a boldness proper to adventurers in Eldorado, past the waiting carriages that lined the graveled driveway, to the wide veranda. There he halted. From within came the strains of music and a gay clamor of voices. He could not know that on this night the tamer gave a feast, a formal dedication of the new castle to the entertainment of his kind. But he felt the hour to be ill-suited to his purpose.

Yet it was effected.

Curiosity to look within carried him to a window. To his wondering gaze unfolded a vista of Irish point and damask satin, carved mahogany and marble figures, gilt-framed pictures and silken rugs.

"Unity," he said, "will like that."

While he stood there a troop of men, garbed in a monotony of black and white, marched into the room. At the same time voices came from another wing of the veranda.

And then he, son of the blacksmith of Bethel, became a spectator at the birth of a project that for a brief but brilliant period was to move the world to hosannas!

"Henley," said the first voice, deep, yet softly flowing as honey, "I have come to the time of life when a man of sense puts away the lusts of the flesh—"

"Is your digestion out of order?" interrupted the second, sharper, less musical and with a sardonic quality that delighted the listener. "I noticed you didn't eat much tonight."

"Ah! It is more than stomach. It is soul!" the mellow voice flowed on. "My labors and investments have been blessed with good fortune. So I am now able to turn my energies to the higher duties, to doing large things for humanity. And lately my thoughts have dwelt much on—philanthropy and paleontology."

"Mmm! Two 'p's," it came. "Quite alliterative. Go on."

"Henley, you are the first to whom I have spoken of my purpose. It is fixed. In what nobler work, what more fertile philanthropy, can a man of wealth engage than in the development of the science of paleontology? Think, Henley—to add to humanity's knowledge of the extinct life that came before our own! It is a labor to fire the imagination. And that is my purpose. I shall build and endow in this city the most complete paleontological institute in the world, and before I lay aside the project, a branch institution in each of the largest cities of the nation." The voice trembled with emotion.

There was a sound as of two hands sharply meeting. "Good! I see! Let the Scotchman look to his laurels! MacGregor may build his libraries, but Quinby shall have his paleontological institutes!"

Mark wondered at the patience of the answer. "Ah! You are pleased to jest. But the project is new to you. And," sighingly, "the young think only of wealth and power."

"My dear Mr. Quinby," the other purred, "no man in his senses could jest at paleontology. — What the devil!"

The speakers had turned the corner of the veranda and come upon the eavesdropper. Thus for the first time Mark Truitt looked upon the two men in whose legions he was to conquer.

Who has not in fancy's gallery a portrait of Jeremiah Quinby, taken from the prints of the day when his star swept so brilliant through the sky? The lofty brow seems to shelter a very ferment of noble projects. The grave eyes and mouth speak to us of a great soul anguished by the sight of suffering humanity's needs, which he is bravely, self-effacingly seeking to relieve.

Photography has been less kind to Thomas Henley. No philanthropy has claimed him as its apostle. And then he was a less promising subject for the art. His body was squat and heavy; his face was bony and ugly and arrogant, often still further marred by a cold, cynical sneer. A lesser man, thus presented, would have been repulsive. Yet from Henley radiated a tremendous vitality that made him magnetic or compelling as he chose—the dynamic quality that could galvanize a man or a regiment to the mad effort he demanded. After the first glance Mark looked no more upon Quinby; he understood why the philanthropist had so meekly swallowed the insolence.

"This," he thought, "is a man."

Henley charged upon him, gripping his arm.

"What the devil," he repeated, "are you doing here?"

"Looking into the window."

"What are you doing that for?"

"Because," Mark answered simply, "I never saw anything like it before."

"Probably," the philanthropist-to-be suggested nervously, backing away, "he is some sneak thief. Perhaps you'd better hold him while I get help."

"Oh, don't be frightened," Henley replied protectively. "I won't let him bite you."

The sardonic note was again uppermost. Mark, looking down at Henley—he had the advantage of his captor by half a head—grinned involuntarily, and was himself led into impudence.

"No, I won't bite you, Mr. Quinby."

Quinby took another step backward, his nervousness becoming more manifest. "He knows my name! He may be some crank who—"

"My dear sir!" This time there was a touch of impatience in the words. "Gentlemen of your importance must expect their names to become household words. If you'll feel easier, step inside while I attend to this Peeping Tom."

"If That's All You Want, What Are You Good For?"

The philanthropist, still insensible—it seemed—to the thinly veiled insolence, accepted the suggestion.

"Now then," Henley demanded sharply, "what do you want here? You don't look like a sneak thief."

"I brought a letter to you."

"Who from?"

"Dr. Richard Courtney."

"Who's he?"

"He's our preacher in Bethel."

"Bethel? Elucidate Bethel."

Mark defined the village geographically.

"Humph! Let me see the letter."

Mark gave the missive to him, and Henley, opening it, began the perusal.

"A good many, I expect."

"Dozens!" Henley snapped. "Dozens! Enough, if I gave 'em all jobs, to cover the Quinby mills three deep with incompetents in a year."

He completed the perusal of the letter.

"Well," he sneered, "you who peep through windows, I suppose you want a nice, fat job you're not fit to fill? They all want that."

Suddenly Mark felt anger, hot anger, at this arrogant young man, not so many years his senior, who baited philanthropists with as faint scrupling as he rough-handled the seeker of work. Henley saw him stiffen.

"No, I don't," Mark cried hotly. "I only want a chance to work. A chance to show what I'm good for."

"If that's all you want—what are you good for?"

"I'm a blacksmith, but I can do anything."

"Humph! We can use fellows who can do anything—to swing pick and shovel. Do you know where we're building our new plant?"

"I can find out."

"Go to the labor boss and tell him to give you a job with the construction gang. If you're good for anything, you can work up the way I—no, not the way I did, but the way you'll have to if you want to get along where I'm running things."

"All right," Mark said shortly and turned on his heel.

CHAPTER IV.

The Service of the Strong.

To the nation had come a rare passion for building. It was tearing down its old barns, to build anew, bigger and stronger. There were cities to be raised in the deserts; and they must be made stanch and lasting. The pioneer and his harvest must be carried, not by crawling conestoga and mule train, but by the power of steam. Men would go down to the sea no longer in ships of wood, but in floating palaces that mocked the storm. Those who made war were to be sheltered behind impenetrable ramparts and, again, equipped with engines and missiles before which stoutest defenses crumbled. Toilers on land and sea must find in their hands new weapons, hard and keen and sure, to bring nature, her forces and treasures, into bondage and service.

Therefore, steel!

And, therefore, the army of steel workers.

A strong west wind had sprung up during the night and the sun shone clear on the line of that day's recruits. One by one they passed before a keen-eyed youth—only the young officered this army—who, after one glance, accepted or rejected. The enlisted were turned over to the timekeeper, who gave them numbered cards and assigned them to various waiting squads.

A big Swede, a wiry little French-Canadian and a slow-moving Pole were passed.

He nodded curtly to the next applicant. "All right! Get your card."

And this recruit was he who had accepted Thomas Henley's challenge. The latter had already forgotten the incident, but Mark was still hot with the determination to prove his mettle to the tamer.

He gave his name to the time-clerk and received his card, also the command, "Go with Houlahan's gang."

Thus, he reflected, he had taken the first step in his campaign of conquest—he was a private in Houlahan's squad.

"Git a move on!" thundered a voice in his ear. "D'ye think yez arre a prathy shtuck in th' grround? Marrch!" It was the voice of Houlahan. Mark marched.

Corporal Houlahan had no romantic conception of his duties, and his tyranny was of a sort to give his underlings the realistic point of view.

"Here, ye Oly—"

"Ay bane Johann."

"Ye're Moike, 'f Oi say ut," bellowed Houlahan. He enlarged upon Johann's dishonorable pedigree. "Dig in!"

The Swede, the best worker in the gang, began to shovel in a nervous haste that added nothing to his efficiency. Mark saw the red creep into the fair skin.

"Shtir it up, ye Frinch loafer!" the corporal addressed the next in line. "We're runnin' no barber shop here. F'r two cints Oi'd bate some worruk into yez."

It was a tired and sadly fretted gang the noon whistle relieved. Mark stretched himself out on the ground, closing his eyes on the dinner pails his comrades produced; in his eagerness to be enlisted he had not thought of his midday meal, and he was very hungry.

He felt a hand on his shoulder and opened his eyes. The Frenchman and the Swede sat beside him.

"M'sieu ees 'ongree, eh?" The Frenchman carefully broke a loaf of brown bread—all his meal—in the middle and proffered Mark one-half.

"I do," Mark responded with fervor.

Hunger overcame scruples. Mark ate the bread and drank the coffee.

"Marcel Masquelier," the Frenchman completed the sentence.

Mark identified himself.

"Dat ver' good name.—Br-r-r!" The exclamation was for the corporal, who, with the labor boss, approached. The latter glanced over the excavation.

"How many loads have you taken out?"

"Thirty-nine, sor."

"Only thirty-nine?" the boss rejoined sharply. "It ought to be fifty."

"The dom'd loafers won't worruk," Houlahan defended himself angrily.

"It's a good gang," he said shortly. "And it's your business to make 'em work." He passed on.

"We'll get it now," Mark muttered. "That Irish bully'll never know how to get work out of men. I'd like to tell the boss so."

Johann's face began to work. "Ay skoll kill Mister Houlahan," came his slow growl, "mebbe so."

"Mebbe so not." Marcel shrugged his shoulders. "One mus' leeve. An' one mus' work. Eh?"

"You 'ear, Jo'ann?" Marcel added earnestly. "I 'ave respec' for w'at my fr'en, M'sieu Mark Truitt, say."

They "got it," indeed, that afternoon. The Irishman, under the sting of his boss' reproof, raged and cursed endlessly in the effort to get more work out of his men. The gang, irritable and sullen, worked erratically, with feverish spurts that brought inevitable reaction; the men became demoralized, interfered with one another.

"Would You Mind Saying That Again?"

lade of profanity, was hard put to keep his temper in leash; he was harder put to restrain the mutinous Swede, who itched with a desire for assassination. Toward the end of the day even the philosophic Marcel grew ill-natured and snarling. Somehow Mark felt their hospitality of the noon hour had put upon him a responsibility for them, though they were his seniors by at least ten years.

"One must live, you know," he reminded Marcel. "And one must work."

"One mus' not be treat' like a dog, m'sieu." Marcel ripped out a long French oath. "Jo'ann, you 'ave my consen' to keel dat 'Oula'an."

Johann was too slow in his mental processes to be shamed into patience.

"Pick up that shovel and get to work," Mark commanded sharply.

"You our boss, hein?" Marcel sneered.

"No, Marcel, since noon—your friend," Mark responded.

Marcel, too, stared and then, with a gesture of contrition, bent himself doggedly to his task.

Mark thought he heard a chuckle. He looked up to meet the eyes of the tamer. As to the chuckle, he may have been mistaken; in the keen impersonal glance was no sign of recognition. Henley, with the labor boss, departed on his tour of inspection. Mark gave himself anew to his work, with a sudden inner expansion. Not Henley, but the submissiveness of his malcontent "friends," was the cause of that expansion.

Mark learned that there are a right method and a wrong of doing even the simple task of plying a shovel; that there is a fashion of handling even so common an animal as the day laborer which brings out his highest efficiency. He found, moreover, that he had the gift—granted as often to the false and the foolish as to the true and the wise—of popularity. Men liked him; they laughed at his jokes; on a day's acquaintance they confided to him their troubles—squalid tragedies they were, alas! only too often. Marcel always called him "m'sieu," a distinction he accorded not even to Blair, the labor boss.

One chill, foggy evening, as the whistle blew, he looked about him and realized that the excavation for the new mill was completed.

"Why, we're through!" he muttered.

Johann stared stupidly.

"Mebby dat Meestair Blair 'e geev us anudder job, you t'ink so, eh?" ventured Marcel hopefully.

"No. We're the rottenest gang on the work. It's Houlahan's fault. And I haven't had my chance. D——n him!"

"D——n!" The impending calamity was becoming clear to Johann.

"M'sieu 'as los' 'ees chance. Dat ver' bad. Jo'ann an' me, we 'ave los' a job," Marcel sighed.

But the fear was not justified. At the tool-shed they were ordered to report next morning a half hour earlier than usual. And:

"Truitt," said the time clerk, "the boss wants to see you."

Mark made his way to the rude shanty that was Blair's office.

"Truitt," the latter demanded, "what's the matter with Houlahan's gang?"

"Too much bullying," Mark answered directly.

"I thought so. Report tomorrow morning."

"Yes, sir. Of course,"

"I'm going to put your gang on the new coke oven beds. It's a rush job. I give you three weeks for it."

"Give me?"

"Yes. I'm putting you in charge of the gang."

For an instant Mark stared foolishly. Then he grinned. "Would you mind saying that again?"

Blair complied. "Look here," he added boyishly, "I'm taking a chance on you, because you look and talk intelligent. Are you?"

Mark admitted it.

"Then prove it. I want to make a record on this job and so you've got to. Houlahan," Blair added, "didn't—and he loses his job. See?"

Mark saw.

In the morning Houlahan reported, happily unaware of a new order of things.

"Houlahan," Blair announced casually, "Truitt will take your gang today."

Houlahan glared malevolently at Mark.

"And where'll Oi go?"

"You can take Truitt's old place—or quit," said Blair curtly.

"My God!"

There was no resistance. As if dazed, the Irishman shouldered his pick and shovel and with the gang followed Mark to the new job.

You have seen a sensitive horse become docile and eager when a master takes the reins. So it was with Houlahan's, now Truitt's, gang. They were, since they had survived the weeks of bullying, no mean type; and they responded gratefully to the changed leadership. Where they had been sullen and resentful, they now became willing and promptly obedient. As the day advanced, the pace, instead of slackening as under Houlahan's command, grew faster; the last hour's record was the best of all.

Often Mark went home to his lodging by way of the mills. Then he began to spend his evenings studying them, sometimes in company with Blair, who when the day's work was done sunk his rank in a frank liking for his new lieutenant.

At first Mark saw only a vast spectacular chaos; a Brobdingnagian ferment of unordered and unrelated enginery and consuming fires. No guiding hand appeared, no purpose was felt. Some awful mischance that must bring the whole fabric crashing to earth seemed always to impend. It was unbelievable that this creation had been brought forth from the mind and by the hand of man.

Gradually to his accustomed eye the chaos resolved itself into a system—rather, a marvelous system of systems that worked with a single purpose, each unit fitting precisely into the ordered whole.

"God!" he exclaimed one night, overcome by the splendor of it all. He and Blair were standing on the bridge over the blooming mill, watching the half-naked troop that with hook and tongs worked a two-ton ingot over the rolls.

"What is it? What's happened?" Blair looked around for an accident to explain the ejaculation.

"Nothing. I was just thinking how—how big it is." Mark laughed at the feebleness of his words. "What would you give to be down there?"

There is such a thing as luck. A man—himself an artist who had not yet become exploiter—who had just come unnoticed on the bridge, heard, and with a half smile, saw the eager face.

Blair shrugged his shoulders. "Yes, it's big. But it's hard work. Good pay, though."

"I suppose so," Mark answered carelessly. "I wasn't thinking of that."

The man spoke. "Good evening, Blair."

Henley looked at Mark. "I don't just place you. Where have I seen you before?"

Mark flushed at the recollection.

"I took a letter I had for you and you caught me—"

"So you're Peeping Tom, eh? Did you get a job?"

"Yes, sir. With a pick-and-shovel gang. I'm boss now."

Henley seemed not unduly impressed.

"He's the man that dug the new oven beds," Blair interposed generously. "He did it in two weeks and three days."

"Two weeks and two days," Mark corrected eagerly.

"So long?" Henley continued indifferent.

"I had a spoiled gang. It took a week for me to shape 'em up."

"Humph! That's what we pay bosses for. We gave you credit for that job, Blair."

"I took him out of the gang and put him on the job. But he did the work. He knows how to get work out of men."

And that was high praise—the very highest, Henley thought. He turned again to Mark.

"Are you satisfied with your job?"

"No," cried Mark. "I don't want to be just a Hunky-driver. I want to learn how to make steel."

"It's easier to learn how to make steel than to be a Hunky-driver," Henley said dryly. "However, I think we can find you another job."

Roundsman Emulates Naturalist.

There is a policeman in the Middlesex Falls who carries a book, a pair of opera glasses and a bundle of note paper with him on his rounds.

"I've been here a number of years," he said to a visitor, "and I got ashamed when everybody asked me about birds and flowers and I could not tell them about anything. One day I saw Mr. Packard, the naturalist, at work, and I've been imitating him since then."—Boston Traveler.

NAMUR IS NEXT POINT OF ATTACK

Kaiser's Army Has Reached Namur And Will Attack This Important Stronghold

GERMANS OCCUPY BRUSSELS

Without Resistance—War Tax of Forty Million Dollars Levied on City By the Germans

Paris.—An official statement issued says:

"Namur is partially invested. Heavy artillery fire opened on the city. The westward movement of the German columns continues on both banks of the Meuse outside the range of action at Namur.

"German cavalry forces passed through Brussels going westward. They were followed later by an army corps.

"A war tax of forty million dollars has been levied on the city of Brussels by the German general.

"The retreat of the Belgians continued without incident.

"As already announced, after reconquering the frontier, our troops advanced into Lorraine along a front extending in the Donan mountain to Chateau Salins. They drove the Germans back into the valley of the Seille river and the marshy district, and our advance guards reached Delme, Dieuze and Morhange.

"Several German army corps made a vigorous counter attack, and our advance guards fell back. The fight was fierce on both sides, and in view of the greatly superior number of Germans our troops, who had been fighting continuously for six days, retreated.

"Details received show that the reoccupation of Muelhausen was a great success. The offensive, first along the line from Thann to Dannemarie (Dammerkirch), and then on to Muelhausen, was carried out with rare dash. By a bold stroke Gen. Paul Pau, once he was master at Thann and Dennemarie, directed the troops west of Muelhausen, giving the enemy an opportunity to engage him betwee nour lines and the Swiss frontier, and then by a second move the Germans were thrown back on Muelhausen."

Soldiers Fought Like Demons

London.—A dispatch to the Reuter's News agency from Ghent, Belgium, says:

"The fight at Aerschot was extremely hot. The appearance of two German aviators was the first intimation that the Germans, who had been repulsed on the previous day, intended to renew the attack.

"Flying low, the German aviators surveyed the position and then returned to report.

"Soon afterwards the German infantry, supported by machine guns, and artillery, opened a fierce attack.

"The troops on both sides fought like demons and the battle soon became a veritable butchery.

"Two Belgian regiments which already had distinguished themselves in the forts of Liege, held the invaders in check for two hours.

"Both sides were losing heavily when the retreat was sounded.

"Major Gilsonal took charge of the Belgian rear guard, which fought so stubbornly that only seven out of his force of 288 men returned.

Retreat to Antwerp Explained

Washington.—An official explanation of the Belgian field army's backward movement toward Antwerp was given in the following cablegram from London, made public by the British embassy:

"The Belgian field army, based on Antwerp, has fallen back in that direction to cover its communication with that fortress. In anticipation that this might become necessary the seat of government already had been transferred to Antwerp.

"As Brussels is an undefended city and no longer the seat of governmnet, the fact that the Germans may have occupied it is not of great importance. Moreover, the present position of the Belgian field army is a menace to the right flank of any further German advance westward."

Japan Tells of Grievances

Washington.—Interference by German cruisers with the shipping of Japan's ally, Great Britain, the seizure of Japanese goods in German bottoms and the consequent grave dislocation of Japanese trade, are the principal reasons set forth by Japan in explanation of the ultimatum delivered to Germany. Cable dispatches have contained a brief outline of the Japanese grievances, but the full text of the Japanese official's statement on this subject was not available until later.

600,000 Are Idle in Paris

Paris.—A warning issued by the French government says that while one great struggle is in progress on the frontier, another fight must be fought in the interior of the country against the misery which follows the disorder in its economical life. The prefecture of police in Paris estimates that there are 600,000 persons out of work in the French capital and its suburbs, or nearly one-sixth of the total population of the department of the Seine.

GRAND DUKE NICOLAS

GERMANS PUSHING FORWARD

HAVE FORCED AN OPENING—ARE ON THEIR WAY TO FRANCE.

Fighting Between German and French Soldiers Is Severe In Villages.

London.—An official communication issued at Paris states that very large German forces are crossing the Meuse between Liege and Namur. The statement continues:

"The French army is making a rapid advance on the Seille river and at the end of the day had reached Delme on one side of the river and Morhange on the other."

A dispatch to The Times from Paris says that the first point at which the Germans crossed the French border was at Cirey-Sur-Vesouse. Since then there has been continued fighting in that region until a day or two ago, when it ended in the victorious advance of the French forces, who inflicted a decisive defeat on the enemy and drove them back across the frontier east of Luneville.

Desperate Struggle in Villages

The correspondent says that the laconic reports of the French minister of war give little idea of the desperate struggle that occurred around the handful of villages scattered along the French border.

Point after point was taken and retaken by one side or the other. He gives the following story of the fighting at the village of Badonviller, as told by the villagers:

German Gains Announced

Paris.—An official communication received here from Brussels says:

"The Germans have gained ground on both banks of the river Meuse and are in contact with the armies of the allies.

"The enemy finding the routes to the southward strongly held by French and Belgians, discovered an opening to the north. This might entirely change the strategy on both sides.

"East of Namur the Germans have attained the line between Dinant and Neufchatefu.

"German outposts have occupied Dyle.

"The Belgians having held the invaders in check for fifteen days, have done all that could be expected. Belgian strategy will now be merged into the general plan of the allied armies."

Mother Gave Her Four Sons

Paris. — A woman who had four sons in the French army walked slowly down the steps of one of the municipal offices where relatives are informed officially whether soldiers are dead, wounded or unreported. She was exceedingly white, but her emotion was greater than could be expressed in tears. A friend came up quickly and said: "Have you good news? I am so glad my Jean is safe." "Yes, they are all safe," was the reply. "They are safe in the arms of the Father. "I am proud to give them."

Awarded Legion of Honor

Paris. — President Poincare has signed the nomination of Joseph Benoit, mayor of Badonviller in Meutet-Mozelle for the cross of the Legion of Honor in recognition of his exhibition of energy and magnanimity. According to the official records Benoit's wife was killed by German soldiers, who burned their home. Benoit later saved the life of one of the Germans who had been arrested and was threatened by the enraged townspeople. Despite his grief Benoit continued uninterruptedly his duties.

Canadian Women Oppose War

Ottawa, Ontario.—Canadian women do not want their husbands to go to war and are wielding the veto power bestowed upon them by the government with such effect that in some instances volunteer regiments have been thinned to 50 per cent. of their membership. This far exceeds the government's estimate of vetoes. A protest against their action was made by Colonel Morrison, director of the artillery.

MOTHER OF SCHOOL GIRL

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Daughter's Health.

Plover, Iowa.—"From a small child my 13 year old daughter had female weakness. I spoke to three doctors about it and they did not help her any. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had been of great benefit to me, so I decided to have her give it a trial. She has taken five bottles of the Vegetable Compound according to directions on the bottle and she is cured of this trouble. She was all run down when she started taking the Compound and her periods did not come right. She was so poorly and weak that I often had to help her dress herself, but now she is regular and is growing strong and healthy."—Mrs. MARTIN HELVIG, Plover, Iowa.

Hundreds of such letters expressing gratitude for the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished are constantly being received, proving the reliability of this grand old remedy.

If you are ill do not drag along and continue to suffer day in and day out but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a woman's remedy for woman's ills.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

HERE IS A GOOD WAY TO GET RID OF PIMPLES

Bathe your face for several minutes with resinol soap and hot water, then apply a little resinol ointment very gently. Let this stay on ten minutes, and wash off with resinol soap and more hot water, finishing with a dash of cold water to close the pores. Do this once or twice a day, and you will be astonished to find how quickly the healing, antiseptic resinol medication soothes and cleanses the pores, removes pimples and blackheads, and leaves the complexion clear and velvety. All druggists sell resinol soap and resinol ointment.—Adv.

WITH TRAGEDY IN HIS MIND

Husband Dashed Home in Response to Telephone Call to Find His Worst Fears Were Groundless.

Smithson said a thunderstorm always reminded him of this absurd incident in his early married life. He said it happened when their first baby was only two months old, so he might be pardoned if his solicitude exceeded his sober judgment. He was at his office one afternoon when a terrific thunderstorm broke which crashed enough to frighten anyone, so when the 'phone rang and his wife's voice tremoulously asked: "George, dear, can you come home right away?" he said, "yes," quickly, nor paused to question, but frantic with misgivings, grabbed his hat and almost ran through town to his home.

Rushing up to her he said anxiously: "Why, darling, what's the matter?"

Much to his surprise came this reply: "Oh, George, dear, we have moths!"—Kansas City Star.

"I'm the head of the firm. I came in to ask you if you would accept an increase in your salary."

"No sir! I'm getting too much as it is. You could get any number of men to fill my place for half the money."

"But our profits are so great we don't know what to do with them."

"Sorry; but to encourage me in that sort of thing would only result in disaster. Besides, if I got more money my family of nine children might get enough to eat. And if the practice should spread, the whole civic fabric would be upset."

"But I really feel—"

"Go away, sir! I won't listen to you! Discharge me if you must, but raise my salary—never!"—Life.

The 'bus was rolling up Fifth avenue in a heavy groundswell, on a murky night. Perhaps it was only that the chauffeur and conductor were both sleepy, or maybe it was only the mugginess that deceived them.

On the corner at Thirty-fifth street stood, waiting to cross, a belated delivery boy, holding erect by the waist a dressmaker's dress form. The chauffeur thought he detected a fare, and slowed his craft in to the curb. The conductor looked out through the fog, shook his head, and rang the bell to go ahead.

"Room for one only," he said, and the 'bus rolled on.—New York Evening Post.

Different Meaning.

One of the principal owners of a prominent gold mine was expatiating on its merits to a capitalist and prospective investor. He described the vein in which the miners were working, showed him specimens of the ore, and backed up his statements with the written opinions of experts.

"Well," admitted the capitalist, "it looks as if it might be a good investment. As my old Uncle Hiram would say, it has 'p'ints.'"

Though scientific progress has made it possible to do a double journey between England and America in a fortnight, there remain many islands with which it takes years to communicate.

Off the Scottish coast are the groups of islands known as the Hebrides, Orkneys and Shetlands. Of these the most isolated island is St. Kilda, some three miles long and two miles broad. The inhabitants lead lives of great loneliness, for it takes a month to get to the next island, and the sea often makes any communication with St. Kilda impossible for months.

The group of eight Phoenix islands in the Pacific has a total population of only 158, while another little bit of the British empire is Fanning island. This is a landing place for the Pacific submarine cable, and usually there are about one hundred people in the place.

The loneliest of all parts of British territory is the Island of Tristan Da Cunha in the South Atlantic, which is also the smallest inhabited island in the empire. It is 1,800 miles from land, has a population of 74 Scottish Americans, and the inhabitants get news of the outer world usually once every two years.

A Good Shot.

A San Franciscan, who had been hunting in the vicinity of Lake Tahoe without bagging any game, came upon a mountaineer who was feeding a caged wildcat he had caught the day before.

"How much will you take for that beast?" he asked.

The captor said $5, and the money was paid over.

"Now," said the Nimrod, "tie one end of a strong cord to that tree and another to the cat's neck, and then open the door of the cage."

This was finally accomplished and the fierce animal stood straining at its tether.

The sportsman, who was watching the exercises from the interior of the cabin, leveled his rifle across the window sill, took careful aim and blazed away. The wildcat gave a joyful yell and disappeared in the forest. The bullet had cut the rope.

Not to Blame.

"What shall we do, John," said the farmer's wife, who had retained much of her sentiment through 25 years of married life, "what shall we do to celebrate our silver wedding?"

"Reckon up where all the silver's gone to in bringing up our family," grumbled he.

"Oh, no, John, it must be something real good and out of the ordinary. I tell you what. Let us kill the fattest pig and give a banquet."

"Maria," said the husband solemnly, "I don't see how the unfortunate animal is to blame for what happened 25 years ago."

WONDERS

The white man is a conqueror.

He has explored the bowels of the earth, the depths of the sea and the perils of the air.

He has discovered the North Pole and the South Pole; penetrated the jungles, traversed the deserts and scaled the mountains.

Men talk over wires, hear music from rubber discs, ride a thousand miles by train in 24 hours, cross the Atlantic ocean in five days, get wireless dispatches, send under-seas cables, read their daily newspapers, transmit thoughts on typewriters, ride on the subway under a river a hundred feet deep, mount office buildings 60 stories high via the elevator in a few minutes, fly in the air, send wireless messages and cruise under the sea.

A majority of these and many other things have become commonplace.

They are wonders!

They demonstrate the determination of man to conquer. They tell the story of heroic struggle, sleepless nights, concentrated effort, self-sacrifice, years of study and generations of preparation.

In spite of it all scientists tell us we are in the infancy of accomplishment. That generations yet unborn, will make even greater advances than generations that have passed.

We are told that inter-communication between the inhabited planets is a matter of not far distant occomplishment. That children now living will ride in flying machines as we now ride in buggies and automobiles.

Such accomplishments and assertions from authoritative sources should stimulate the imagination and ambition of every man and woman.

The L. & N. writes of these things because it is trying to keep step with the feverish pace of accomplishment. It needs the kindly consideration and intelligent co-operation of the people.

The territory through which the L. & N. operates is wonderfully rich in possibilities. It deserves the best to be had in railway facilities. That is what the L. & N. is supplying.

But we are not content with existing conditions. We want to accomplish in our sphere what the scientists are seeking to accomplish in theirs.

We can do it only through mutual understanding, mutual good-will, mutual effort, consisting of the people and the L. & N.

Permit yourself to think of the future and the vast possibilities it holds. Then let us pull together for "the greatest good for the greatest number."

MR. H. J. TAYLOR DIED TUESDAY.

On Tuesday about one o'clock at his home in the eastern part of the county near Providence church, Mr. H. J. Taylor, better known as "Bud" Taylor, passed from this life to the great beyond. Mr. Taylor was one of the oldest citizens in that part of the county, having lived in that community for many years. He was a good citizen, and a righteous man. He was devoted to the church and ever ready to discharge his duty to God. He had been seriously sick for many weeks prior to his death, and his demise did not come as a shock to his friends. His remains were buried at Providence cemetery Wednesday.

Most Skin Trouble Readily Overcome

The Active Principle of a Famous Remedy Works Wonders.

Many people have marveled the way S. S. S. overcomes skin troubles. The explanation is the fact that S. S. S. works in the blood and the blood is really a most intricate and extraordinary mass of arteries and veins.

When you come to realize that the skin and the flesh beneath are composed of a network of tiny blood vessels you solve the mystery.

There are wonderful medicinal properties in S. S. S. that follow the course of the blood streams just as naturally as the most nourishing food elements.

It is really a remarkable remedy. It contains one ingredient, the active purpose of which is to stimulate the tissues to the healthy selection of its own essential nutriment. And the medicinal elements of this matchless blood purifier are just as essential to well-balanced health as the nutritious elements of the meats, grains, fats and sugars of our daily food.

Not one drop of minerals or drugs is used in its preparation. Ask for S. S. S. and just insist upon having it. And if you desire skillful advice and counsel upon any matter concerning the blood and skin, write to the Medical Department, The Swift Specific Co., 529 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Do not allow some zealous clerk's eloquence over something "just as good" as S. S. S. to fool you with the same old mineral drugs. Beware of all substitutes. Insist upon S. S. S.

Chilton County Singers Convene

The Chilton County Singing Convention was held at Shiloh church near South Calera, Sept. 5 and 6.

The body was called to order by the President, Prof. J. W. Hayes. Prayer was offered by Mr. Powell of Shelby. The program committee was as follows: A. E. Teel, T. J. Jackson, J. A. Rogers, J. H. Davis and the Secretary. The music for the first day was directed by the following leaders: J. H. Williams, M. V. Lowery, J. D. Hodgens, J. W. Hayes, J.H. Davis, A. E. Teel, N. A. Dobbs, Mr. Vandiver of Montevallo, Miss Lela Davis and John Lowery.

Good reports were received from the state conventions and different socities. Three good schools were also reported. The present presiding officer, T. C. Jackson requested the convention to elect some other man in his stead. The elected officers for the ensuing year were as follows: J. W. Hayer, President; T. J. Jackson, Vice-President; Z. J. Jones, Secy.

Prof. Jackson presided during the second day. Prayer was lead by Mr. Powell. Music for the day was directed by the following: Misses Isabelle and Bettie Jackson of Birmingham; Profs. M. V. Lowery, J. W. Hayes, W. F. Armstrong, W. R. Davis of Birmingham, state convention Vice-President Drewry, of Birmingham, T. C. Jackson, Prof. Vandiver of Montevallo, John Martin, J. H. Williams, J. A. Blankenship, W. R. Holdrich, and Pres. Jefferson county convention. Just before noon a service in memory of the authors of our music books was held, directed and assisted by the following parties: A. E. Teel, A. A. Jackson, Misses Bettie Jackson and Lela Davis, J. A Blankenship, W. H. Conway, Misses Henry Lee Sanders and Sula Jones, M. V. Lowery, J. H. Williams, Misses Era Sanders and Mary Lou Jackson.

The following resolutions were adopted: Whereas, Prof. T. C. Jackson, our retiring president, at his own request has been excused for the present from the presidency of this body. Therefore resolve that we thank Prof. Jackson for his faithfulness in presiding over this body; not only do we appreciate his effort while wielding the gavel over this convention, but for his untiring labors through the entire history of this body.

Resolved that we tender our thanks to the people of Shiloh for their kindness to us during the present session. We thank the Donor for the lovely flowers placed in our midst. We also wish to thank the visiting singers for their visit, and cordially ask them to come again.

The next session will be held at Cedar Grove church near Thorsby the 1st Sunday in May and the Saturday before, 1915.

J. W. Hayes, Pres.
Z. J. Jones, Secy.

MR. LOWERY MAKES VALUABLE SUGGESTION

Editor Union-Banner: Please allow me space in your paper for a few words. I shall not take space to discuss the war question, as that is being discussed pro and con everywhere. It is not a matter, of the legality of the war, nor how long it will last, but how shall we best take care of our county while it does last? I believe we can best do it by cooperation among farmers, merchants and bankers. If the responsibility of carryiny the load is saddled on the cotton farmer, he cannot do it. So let's everyone who is interested, come to Clanton on September 15th and talk the matter over to-gether, that we may be able to act in concert for our mutual protection. Come everybody.

Respectfully,
W. P. Lowery.

RECEPTION AT THORSBY INSTITUTE.

The Ladies Guild of Thorsby have planned to give a reception to the trustees, faculty, students and their parents and contributing friends of Thorsby Institute, at Bates Hall, Friday, September 11th, from 7:30 to 10 p. m. This is following a precedent already begun last year, and is for the purpose of promoting a spirit of fellowship among the constituent elements of the school.

Miss Helen C. Jenkins, financial agent of Thorsby Institute, who has been absent from here two years, is making a visit to look over the field and note the progress that is being made. She expresses surprise and delight over the many substantial improvements that have been installed in her absence.

Athletic Meet At Clanton.

The progressiye school authorities of Clanton, with the county superintendent of education, have decided to hold a series of athletic meets during the current school year. The first of these will be held Saturday September 19th, beginning promptly at one o'clock, p. m.

There will be two classes of entries in each event. Class B will consist of all contestants weighing between 85 and 115 pounds. The events will be as follows: High jump, standing high jump, standing broad jump, running broad jump, pole vault, short put, base ball throw, potato race, tug of war, three legged race, wheel barrow race, sack race, 50 yard dash, 100 yard dash 220 yard dash, endurance race, relay race, and pick-a-back race. There will also be games of basket ball, volley ball, ball passing and tag games.

Many of of these games, races, and contests are as suitable for girls and women as for men and boys, and it is to be hoped that they will enter into the spirit of the oecasion and help make the day a success.

This is intended to be everybody's day, and people from all over the county will be present, and enter the contests.

C. W. Reynolds of Jemison was here the first of the week on business.

FIFTH SUNDAY MEETING

Saturday many good problems of our people were well discussed at Shiloh church by Revs. M. J. Parrish, F.W.C. Bice, W. H. Connell, John A. Pool, T. J. Deason, and H. G. Williams. The entire day was spent in a most profitable way.

On Sunday we enjoyed another day of good sermons and profitable speeches. A number of prominent Baptists of Clanton were present,among whom were: Prof. J. J. Pickens and Judge E. B. Deason. Rev. John A. Pool preached at 11 o'clock. In the afternoon Profs. I. L. Johnson and Howard Roper presented some good speeches on Sunday School work. Other short talks were made by different speakers.

Horace G. Williams, Secy.

HARP AND HARMONY MUSICAL CONTEST

All Harp and Harmony Singers interested in the contemplated vocal music contest at the Chilton County Fair, will please let me hear from them at once, So that I may know what steps to take toward organizing the classes etc. for the occasion.

Respectfully,
J. W. Hayes.

$1,000 Stolen At Thorsby.

On last Monday night a package containing $1,000 in currency was stolen from the express office at Thorsby. The money did not belong to the express company, but was a shipment of bills that was made by a Birmingham bank to the bank at Thorsby. A young man about 17 years old, whose name is Smith, an employee at the depot, is alleged to secured the money. He left that night for Calera in an auto. At that place he engaged another car to carry him to Birmingham. At this time nothing definite has been learned of his arrest.

MEANING OF JUDGE ADAMS IN RESOLUTION

"Whereas, all Europe is now engaged in war and bloodshed, and whereas, our own country is threatened with business stagnation, and whereas, we are confronted with no market for cotton, and cotton being the only means through which we of the south get money to do business, and whereas, the farmers and merchants, indeed all business men, depend largely on the sale of cotton, therefore, be it

"Resolved, first, that we, the business men and merchants of Chilton County, most earnestly recommend that we do what we can to promote a system of cooperation among the bankers business men and farmers, to the end that we may obtain through the warehouse system as suggested by Congress, the means to handle the cotton crop.

"Be it resolved, second, that in view of the grave and serious condition of our country on account of the war in the east, that it is the sense of this convention of business men assembled Sept. 4th, 1914, that all political strife and agitation cease, and that we turn our hearts and hands to the relief of all people of all parties."

The foregoing resolutions met with opposition at the merchants and business mens convention on the4th inst., and were withdrawn by the author. I did not intend by the resolutions, to interfere with any individual's political views, or that of any political party (and they speak for themselves). My only purpose was to suggest that all parties for the present cease firing until the question which is above all other questions at this time, to-wit: the co-operation of the people in making some disposition of their cotton crop, for I feared if the potitical battle which is now going on in this county is to continue, we can do but little in our efforts to co-operate on this all-important matter. Contending armies have been known to raise the flag of truce on the battlefield and the firing of the deadly weapons cease. I did hope that, while such a cloud of disappointment in a business way hung over our people, we could stop for a little while until better things were attended to.

That's all. Sincerely,
S. M. ADAMS.

[Note—The above article is published at the request of Judge Adams. He feels that its publication will cause him to be better understood. It is through courtesy to him that we give it spree.—Editor.]

GERMAN RIGHT IS STOPPED

Force of Cavalry and Artillery Advancing on Campeigne Repulsed and Forced to Abandon Guns—Teutons Win in Center.

"On our left the enemy appears to neglect Paris to pursue its turning movement. It has reached La Feresous-Jouarre (department of Seine and Marne, 11 miles east of Meaux), passed Rheims and descended on the west bank of the river in Argonne. This maneuver has not succeeded more than on preceding days.

"On our right, in Lorraine and in Vosges, the fighting proceeds with alternative fortunes. Maubeuge, which is being violently bombarded, resists vigorously."

London.—A dispatch to the Reuter Telegram company from Antwerp, reaching here by way of Ostend, says that it seems that the attempt of the Germans to envelop the left wing of the allies has been frustrated.

A big force of German cavalry advancing on Compiegne has been repulsed and obliged to abandon several pieces of artillery.

The correspondent says:

"It is learned on good authority that the advance movement of the German right wing has been checked for the last two days under pressure from the left wing of the allies. The enemy has been compelled to retire on St. Quentin. A big force of German cavalry that was advancing on Compeigne was vigorously repulsed and forced to abandon several pieces of artillery. It appears that the attempt to envelop the allies' left wing was frustrated."

AUSTRIAN ARMY IS ROUTED

40,000 Prisoners Taken by Russians in East Prussia—Over 200 Guns Were Captured.

Petrograd (St. Petersburg).—The following official report on the seven-day battle, in which five Austrian army corps were forced to retreat in utter rout, suffering the loss of 40,000 prisoners, besides a tremendous loss in killed and wounded, was given out by the war office here:

"Seven days of the most stubborn fighting in Eastern Galicia have resulted in complete victory for the Russian arms. Five Austrian army corps were completely routed and are retreating in disorder to the westward, abandonig their arms and baggage. Besides an enormous number of killed, the Austrians lost no fewer than 40,000 prisoners, including many generals.

"The roads of retreat of the Austrians are so incumbered with their carts, guns and impedimenta pursuing troops are unable to use the roads. Panic is spreading among the Austrian troops.

"During the seven days of fighting the Russians have taken more than 200 guns, several regimental colors and about 70,000 prisoners in all engagements.

RUSSIANS TO HELP IN FRANCE

Report Sent Out That 72,000 Men Were Landed in Scotland and Later Taken to Ostend.

New York.—A Russian army of 72,000 men, transported from Archangel, Russia, was landed at Aberdeen, on the east coast of Scotland, and conveyed on special trains to Harwich, Grimsby and Dover, where transports were waiting to take them to Ostend, in Belgium, according to officers and passengers of the Cunard liner Mauretania, which reached here from Liverpool.

Every precaution was taken by the English and Russian military authorities, persons on the Mauretania said, to keep the fact that foreign soldiers were being transported to England from becoming known, and the service on the East Coast railway lines was suspended during the 17 hours the troop trains were on their journey. Those on the Mauretania who made these statements said they believed the Russians were to be joined at Ostend by British marines waiting there to receive them and that the combined forces would co-operate with the Belgian army at Antwerp.

Lull in Fighting.

Paris.—In an official statement the war office says:

"There has been no contact with the German forces in the region of Compiegne and Senlis lately. Precautions have been taken to stop any offensive movement of the enemy."

Belfort, France.—A German aeroplane dropped several shells here. The missiles made much noise, but did no damage. The aviator, to avoid the fire of the Belfort forts, made a detour over Swiss territory.

GABRIEL SARTORI

Gabriel Sartori, a noted aviator, sailed from New York on the French liner Rochambeau to take his place in the French reservists' aviation corps.

GERMANS CAPTURE AMIENS

Mayor Surrenders to Prevent Killing of Inhabitants—City Is 70 Miles North of Paris.

London.—A dispatch from Amiens, France, to the Daily Mail declares that the Germans have taken possesion of Amiens, after three days' fighting.

Amiens is the capital of the department of Somme. It is 70 miles directly north of Paris. It is a manufacturing city, has a population of 90,000 and is on the line of the railroad to Boulogne. It is about 50 miles to the west of La Fere and other points in the department of Aisne, where there has been fighting during the past few days between the allied armies and the Germans.

"A party of uhlans entered Amiens," says the Mail. "After a brief reconnoissance they retired to the German main body at Camon. A half hour later they returned, accompanied by an envoy bearing a white flag. The latter interviewed Mayor Figuet at the town hall.

"After an hour's discussion the mayor appeared in front of the town hall with trumpeters and officially announced the surrender of the city. He urged that the citizens make no disturbance.

"Later the mayor and the municipal councillors drove out in carriages to pay a formal visit to the Grman commander, who told them that they would be held responsible with their lives for the good conduct of the citizens.

"The Germans thereupon went to the town hall, where they hauled down the French flag and hoisted the German colors. The German troops entered the city, singing as they came 'Die Wacht am Rhein' and 'Deutschland Uber Alles.'"

RUSSIANS CAPTURE LEMBERG

Austrians Cut to Pieces at Capital of Galicia—Are Practically Out of the War.

London.—A Times dispatch from Petrograd (St. Petersburg) says:

"Army headquarters reports that, thanks to their highly developed railway system, superior German forces concentrated from all parts on the front and flung themselves against about two of our army corps. These were exposed to an extremely violent fire from the big guns, which inflicted large losses.

"According to reports received here, our troops fought heroically. Gens. Samsonoff, Martos and Pestitch and several staff officers have fallen. All possible measures to amend this distressing event are being taken.

"On the Austrian front stubborn fighting continues."

VALLEY OF SOMME TAKEN

Teuton's Right Wing Pushes a Little Closer to Paris—La Fere Taken After Bloody Battle.

London.—A French dispatch to the Times says:

"The Valley of the Somme has been abandoned. La Fere has been taken, after a bloody combat. We were obliged to retire.

"The right wing of the Germans," says the correspondent, "is too far advanced, and there is a chance that it will be cut and caught between two fires if the British should be found in force. Our center is resting very well, and the right wing of our army appears to be taking the offensive."

Paris.—A dispatch to the Havas Agency from Ostend says that the Independence Belge of Brussels is authority for the statement that the Germans are fortifying the environs of Brussels and that cemeteries have been transformed into redoubts.

Ottawa.—The Canadian government, it was learned, is considering canceling German patents and copyrights held in Canada. The question is being discussed with the British board of trade.

AUSTRIANS BEATEN AGAIN BY RUSSIA

GERMANS TO THE RESCUE

Colossal Battle Extends for About 620 Miles, and Three Million Russians and Austrians Are Engaged.

London—A dispatch from Petrograd quotes an official statement as declaring that the Russians have defeated the Austrians between Lublin and Kholm.

Five thousand Austrians were taken prisoners.

A Milan dispatch to the Daily Mail says the Russians have occupied Czernowitz without resistance.

Geneva (via Paris).—Reports reaching here from Italy declare the entire Austrian army has been flung back on the Carpathians. Their retreat, the report says, is becoming a rout, with Cossacks pursuing the Austrians. According to reports from Berlin, great numbers of German troops are being withdrawn from the French and German frontiers. These soldiers, with forces from Bavaria and Wurtemberg, are going to the Vistula to meet the Russians.

London.—A Vienna dispatch, sent by indirect route to the Exchange Telegraph Company, says:

"This is the seventh day of the colossal battle, in which about 3,000,000 Russians and Austrians are engaged. The battle front extends along about 20 miles from Prussia in the north to the Dniester in the south.

"The Russians were burning for a fight in the south, and their supreme effort was directed toward annihilating the entire Austrian army in that region, and thus remove it from their flank before beginning the real attack on Germany.

ALLIES IN STUBBORN MOOD

All Northern Forts of France, With Exception of Maubeuge, Claimed by the Germans.

Paris.—An official communication was issued here announcing that three forts had fallen at Maubeuge, a fortress of the first class in Nord.

A further official statement says:

"The press bureau at Bordeaux telegraphed to the military governor of Paris:

"First—The respective situations of the German and French armies on the left wing have not undergone any interesting change. The enveloping movement of the enemy has been definitely checked.

"Second — The situation is unchanged in the center and on the right in Lorraine and the Vosges.

"At Paris, from which the enemy's armies are going farther away, the defensive works are proceeding actively.

"At Maubeuge the bombardment continues with extreme violence. The city resists despite the destruction of three forts."

"The German army continues to move farther away from Paris toward the southeast.

"According to information, the enemy's troops have evacuated the region of Compiegne and Senlis."

Military critics of most of the French papers, whose hypotheses are without official support, agree that the Germans found the entrenched camp of the allies around Paris too strong and suddenly interrupted their offensive tactics to find a weak spot.

JADAR CALLED A SHAMBLES

Austrian Dead Estimated at Between 30,000 and 32,000—Many Guns Have Been Captured.

Nish, Servia.—According to the official organ Srpski Novine, the following spoil was captured by the Servians in the battle of Jadar:

A hundred cannon, of which 92 were field guns, eight siege guns, 2,500 horses, three hospitals of 3,000 beds, 37 mitralleuses, 37,000 mauser rifles, 114 full caisons containing 500 shells for each cannon, ammunition and 4,600 prisoners, including a large number of officers and one military bank with its conductor. Three regimental cash boxes full of money and one aeroplane also was taken.

The Austrian dead are estimated to number between 30,000 and 32,000.

Gen. Yovanovitch reports that he alone had 10,000 of the enemy's bodies buried. Other Servian generals' reports of their successes have not yet been received.

Dropped Bombs on Ghent.

London.A dispatch to the Reuter telegram Compan from Ghent says:

"A Taube aeroplane passed over the town at a great height and dropped two bombs. There was no loss of life."

War Levy Imposed.

London.—A dispatch to the Reuter Telegram Company from Ostend quotes reservists from Lille as saying that a war levy of $40,000,000 has been imposed in the district by the Germans.

ADMIRAL JELLICOE

Admiral Jellicoe who has been placed in supreme command of all the British home fleets.

FRENCH CAPITAL IS MOVED

Quitting of Paris Is a War Measure. Transfer Headquarters to Bordeaux Temporarily.

Paris.—A proclamation has just been issued by the government announcing that the government departments will be transferred temporarily to Bordeaux.

The proclamation was issued by the minister of the interior, who said the decision had been taken solely upon the demand of the military authorities because the fortified places of Paris, while not necessarily likely to be attacked, would become the pivot of the field operations of the two armies.

The building of supplementary defense works is proceeding vigorously. Several of the gates of Paris were closed to traffic.

London.—The allies, still battling desperately to check the steady advance of the Germans toward Paris, held their own, with the possible exception of the extreme French left wing, according to latest information from Paris.

In East Prussia and Galicia both Russians and German claimed victory. The Austrians were overwhelmingly defeated.

The Russians claimed to hold Lemburg, the capital of Austrian Galicia, and the report was unofficially corroborated from Vienna.

Stupendous losses were reported on all sides. The Russians declare that they buried 15,000 Austrian dead on the battlefield.

The heaviest fighting was reported from Montdidier, where the German infantry in great strength is making a desperate effort to break through the allied lines. The object of the Germans apparently is to break through the enemy's center, separating the allies into two forces.

The Germans also were reported to be striving to flank the French left and turn it back on the center. The success of such a move would give a portion of the German army a road to Paris forts, while the rest held off the main army of the allies.

Peking.—The German legation has protested to the foreign office against an alleged infringement of China's neutrality by Japan. The protest followed the landing of a Japanese division at the newly opened port of Lung-Kow, 100 miles north of Tsing-Tau.

News of the Japanese landing caused no surprise here, as the Japanese legation several days ago requested the foreign office to remove the limit of the 50 kilometers (about 30 miles) radius prescribed by the Chinese as the fighting area around Tsing-Tau. The foreign office did not comply with the request, but it was understood that the Chinese troops would be instructed not to oppose the Japanese.

The Chinese officials are described as incensed, but afraid of doing anything that might afford the Japanese a cause for territorial or other exactions.

Washington.—The British embassy has been informed by a cable from London that German officers had gone to Constantinople to take charge of the Turkish army and that a declaration of war from Turkey was expected.

Washington.—The Turkish ambassador, A. Rustem Bey, expressed doubt that the Turkish army was mobilizing to fight on the side of Germany. He said the Turkish army was mobilized three weeks ago.

"While the cotton situation as it has appeared since the beginning of the European war has not been fully met, and while cotton is still without a market, it is felt that, from the earnest and united action everywhere being given to the subject, within a short while conditions will be not only considerably improved, but be very largely fashioned to their normal basis," says the weekly cotton bulletin of the Department of Agriculture. The bulletin in this issue deals altogether with the crisis which the cotton situation has met and has a touch of optimism all through it. It gives accounts of the earnest action being taken by the different states and organizations and thinks this effort can result only in a solution of the problem.

Every citizen of Alabama, say Uncle Sam's statisticians, owes $5.95 as his or her share of the state's debt—or did on June 30, 1912, which is near enough for all practical purposes, which is just $2.38 above the average per capita of all the states of the nation. According to figures just compiled, the total debt of Alabama is $12,132, 375, or 3.1 per cent of the aggregate indebtedness of all the 48 states, which runs to $422,796,525. Of the state debt, $12,644,097 is funded at interest rates running from 2 to 5 per cent, and $488,278 is of the floating variety. The debt on the Agricultural and Mechanical College, however, carries 8 per cent interest as does that of the university, according to the government report.

Too Dangerous to Overlook

Kidney trouble is too often overlooked and too often neglected. But the kidneys give early signals of distress that should not be mistaken. Backache, headaches, dizzy spells, rheumatic pains, too frequent, scanty or painful urination are plain signs of kidney weakness and should not be mistaken.

When these warnings appear, use Doan's Kidney Pills, the reliable, successful, strongly recommended kidney remedy. Help the medicine by drinking water freely, hold to good habits and a serious attack of kidney disease may be avoided. Public testimony is the best proof of merit.

Rare Minerals in Tasmania.

The number of rare minerals found to exist in Tasmania is constantly being added to, and the latest addition is molybdenite, which is used in the manufacture of "molybdenum steel," to which it gives a special hardness and toughness that makes it suitable for use in propeller shafts, guns and boilers. It is also used, to lesser extent, in the making of pottery glass and other things. The price of molybdenite is now $2,500 a ton, or nearly four times the present price of tin.

4. That if you hold your breath you can catch a mosquito and slay it.

My experience is that mosquitoes only bite once (in the same place); that they only live one day (at a time); that their bites won't itch if you don't scratch 'em (but rub 'em with sandpaper and the edge of a buzz saw instead); and that if you hold your breath you can catch a mosquito and slay it (provided you have a shotgun in each hand and are a good shot).

FOOD FACTS
What An M. D. Learned.

A prominent Georgia physician went through a food experience which he makes public.

"It was my own experience that first led me to advocate Grape-Nuts food and I also know, from having prescribed it to convalescents and other weak patients, that the food is a wonderful rebuilder and restorer of nerve and brain tissue, as well as muscle. It improves the digestion and sick patients gain very rapidly, just as I did in strength and weight.

"I was in such a low state that I had to give up my work entirely, and went to the mountains of this state, but two months there did not improve me; in fact, I was not quite as well as when I left home.

"My food did not sustain me and it became plain that I must change. Then I began to use Grape-Nuts food and in two weeks I could walk a mile without fatigue, and in five weeks returned to my home and practice, taking up hard work again. Since that time I have felt as well and strong as I ever did in my life.

"As a physician who seeks to help all sufferers, I consider it a duty to make these facts public." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Trial 10 days of Grape-Nuts, when regular food does not seem to sustain the body, works wonders. "There's a Reason."

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

KAISER'S DAUGHTER POPULAR

Duke Ernest August of Brunswick and his duchess, born Princess Victoria Louise of Prussia, were the chief topics of conversation throughout Germany just before the breaking out of the great war. In fact, the then possibility of war was lost sight of in the exhaustive discussions of the daily doings of the kaiser's only daughter and her husband, their comings and goings, their method of living and their plans for the future. Although the youngest of the sovereigns of the minor German states they have become the most interesting and prominent.

Duchess Victoria Louise is an untiring reformer, changer, meddler and molder. Immediately after she and her husband were installed as sovereigns of Brunswick the court and palace life, as conducted since 1907 by the Regent Duke Johann Albrecht of Mecklenburg—was radically changed in a direction opposite to local expectations. Brunswick awaited a reversion to the ceremonial court etiquette which flourished before 1884, when the last duke of Brunswick died. Venerable schloss butlers and maitres d'hotel, who remembered the duke, rejoiced at the impending revival of the famous Brunswick "dinner etiquette," the limit of old German tedium and solemnity. "Wait," was the refrain, "till the young duke comes into his own." Instead, the new sovereigns set to living in the simple way observed by Prussia's court on all except ceremonial occasions.

BRITAIN'S WAR SECRETARY

Many have been the attempts to interview Lord Kitchener. Among these the best story is that of the Yankee who handed his card to the general when he returned from South Africa, with the remark, "Sir, I represent that paper."

Another story comes from Aberdeen. Lord Kitchener was discovered one morning at Aberdeen station, having arrived there on his way to Balmoral by the night express. The youngest reporter of the evening paper was on the platform, and approached the great man, explaining that he represented a local journal. "Glad to meet you," said his lordship. "Now tell me, do you know Aberdeen well?" "Yes," said the youth, delighted to find his victim so complaisant. "Excellent," said Lord Kitchener. "Then you can tell me where I can find a good barber, one who really shaves well." "Oh, yes," replied the newspaper man, and he led his lordship to a barber shop. His lordship thanked him much, but the youth interposed with a request that he might state he had spoken to Lord Kitchener. He hoped for more of an interview.

"Certainly," responded the field marshal heartily, "and you can add that you are the most obliging and intelligent inhabitant of Aberdeen I have ever met!" The lad went back to his editor rather shamefacedly with his tale, but the expert was enthusiastic. "Write every word," he commanded, and himself supplied a string of headings, in which "Lord Kitchener in Aberdeen —Interview With Our Representative This Morning" were the least.

"I look forward with intense pleasure to the trip to France," said Mrs. Sharp, wife of William Graves Sharp, whom President Wilson recently appointed as ambassador to the French republic. "I personally deem the post at Paris to be the choice of the entire diplomatic list, because the interests and tastes of the country find great sympathy with those of myself and my husband. The artistic and scientific tendencies of my own nature will rejoice in the congenial surroundings that we shall find in France, and I can say that we are delighted with the prospect of the experience."

JOAQUIN BERNARDO CALVO

The retirement recently of Don Joaquin Bernardo Calvo as Costa Rican minister to the United States marked the culmination of one of the most remarkable careers in the annals of diplomacy. Senor Calvo was for 23 years the representative of Costa Rica in Washington and for many years dean of the diplomatic corps. He first presented credentials to President Harrison in 1891, and has survived six changes of administration in his own country.

Among his literary works is a history of Costa Rica. He is especially well known, however, for his advocacy of closer relations of the Americas by means of better understanding between the republics. He was active in the establishment of the Bureau of American Republics, since changed to the Pan-American Union; was a large factor in the Central American peace conference in Washington in 1907, at which the Central American court of justice was established at Cartago, Costa Rica, and has actively advocated the establishment of a trans-American railroad to link the continents, and expects to see its completion in the near future.

BENEDICT XV

ARCHBISHOP OF BOLOGNA ELECTED TO SUCCEED PIUS

New Pope Assumes Title of Benedict XV.

CHOSEN ON NINTH BALLOT

Cardinal Giacomo Della Chiesa, Only Recently Given Red Hat, Is Chosen Supreme Head of Roman Church.

Rome, Italy.—Cardinal Giacomo Della Chiesa, archbishop of Bologna, Italy, on Thursday was elected supreme pontiff of the Catholic hierarchy in succession to Pope Pius X, who died August 20. He will reign under the name of Benedict XV.

The conclave of the sacred college, whose duty it is to elect the pope, went into session the evening of Monday, August 31. The announcement of the outcome of its deliberations was made Thursday morning shortly after eleven o'clock. Nine ballots were taken.

The pontiff pronounced the apostolic benediction to the kneeling crowd.

Prelates Who Name the Pope.

The full membership of the sacred college of cardinals, which elected the pope, was more international in its representation than at any time in the history of the church.

With the creation of thirteen new cardinals in May, Pope Pius X brought the college up to 66, only four fewer than the maximum number allowed under the laws of the church and three more than participated in his own election in 1903, when there was a record attendance of 63 cardinals.

Nearly All Nations Represented.

While the sacred college is not a representative body in a strict sense of the word, this year nearly all the countries were represented. South America, the United States, Canada, England, Ireland, Holland, Belgium, Portugal, Germany, Austria-Hungary, Italy, France and Spain—14 nations in all. The Orient has no cardinal, neither has Russia, Africa, Australasia or Switzerland.

Twenty of the present cardinals are from five of the warring nations of Europe: Austria-Hungary having six and Germany two, as against a total of twelve, which might be said to represent the "allies" in the European war.

Facts About the New Pope.

Cardinal Giacomo Della Chiesa, who succeeds Pope Pius X, who died August 20, was created a cardinal May 25, 1914. He is the archbishop of Bologna, Italy.

Cardinal Chiesa was born in Pegli, in the diocese of Genes, November 21, 1854, and was ordained a priest December 21, 1878. He served as secretary of the nunciature in Spain from 1883 to 1887, in which year he was appointed secretary to the late Cardinal Rampolla. He was appointed substitute secretary of state in 1901 and in 1907 he was elected to the post of adviser to the holy office.

Officially Condemns Tango.

In 1907 he was appointed papal nuncio of Madrid, succeeding Mgr. Rianaldini, but this appointment was canceled three days later. This incident had occurred just before he was made archbishop of Bologna. When Mgr. Della Chiesa was given this post it was declared in Rome that it was mainly with the object of combating modern religious ideas, Bologna being the headquarters of the National Democratic league, whose members advocated what is known as "modernism" in religion.

In January, 1914, while still at Bologna, the present pope issued a pastoral letter strongly condemning the tango.

Takes Title of Benedict.

It has been 174 years since the time of the last Pope Bendict, On his election to the papacy in 1740 Cardinal Prospero Lambertini assumed that title. It is an interesting fact that the new pope was archbishop of Bologna, while Pope Benedict XIV was born in Bologna.

It was at the age of twenty-four that the new pope was ordained in the priesthood. He soon attracted the attention of Cardinal Rampolla, later secretary of state for Pope Leo XIII. When Cardinal Rampolla was made nuncio to Madrid he took Mgr. Della Chiesa with him as secretary of nunciature.

On Cardinal Rampolla's return to Rome to become secretary of state for the Vatican, Mgr. Della Chiesa entered the secretariat of state as one of the "minutamti" or minor officials, until 1901, when he was appointed substitute of the secretariat and also secretary of the cypher.

Made Bologna Archbishop.

As secreary to the secretary of state, Cardinal Della Chiesa was brought into notable prominence throughout the Catholic hierarchy, but his position was not at that time of cardinalist rank. On the accession of Pope Pius X, Mgr. Della Chiesa continued in the secretariat until December 16, 1907, when Pius X gave him a noted promotion to the position of archbishop of the important see of Bologna.

For seven years he administered the see of Bologna with notable success, until on last May Pope Pius X named him as one of the 13 members of the hierarchy to receive the red hat. Archbishop Begin of Quebec was among the other cardinals named at that time, the others being prelates of Spain, France, Austria, Germany and Italy.

The full title of the new pope, in addition to Benedict XV, will be Pope Bishop of Rome and Successor of St. Peter, Supreme Pontiff of the Universal Church, Patriarch of the West, Primate of Italy, Archbishop and Metropolitan of the Roman Province, Sovereign of the Temporal Dominion of the Holy Roman Church.

The pope held his first consistory on Tuesday, when he conferred the red hat on Cardinal Anthony Mendes Bello, patriarch of Lisbon, and Cardinal Guisasolay Menendez, archbishop of Toledo, Spain. Both were created cardinals by Pope Pius X at the consistory last May.

The first appointment made by the pope was that of Monsignor Parolin, nephew of Pius X, to be canon of St. Peter's.

It is officially announced that Cardinal Dominic Ferrata has been appointed papal secretary of state under the new pope, Benedict XV. Cardinal Ferrata was born in 1847 at Montefiascone, Italy. His work as papal nuncio at Paris and as prefect of the congregation of bishops in Rome stamped him as a finished diplomat. He presided over the eucharistic congress last year at Malta.

RANKS ARE FILLED UP AS ENEMIES ARE MOWED DOWN

By R. M. TOMLINSON.

Gournay, Near Rouen.—I talked with a noncommissioned officer belonging to a regiment named after an eastern county of England which has been in the front of the fighting almost continuously night and day. And very hard fighting, too.

"Our only rest was when we were on the march retiring," he said. "This German attack is certainly extraordinary. You can throw them down and mow them down, but still they come on, and directly the gaps are made in their ranks fresh men fill them up. There seems to be an inexhaustible supply of fresh troops. It is impossible to oppose successfully such a mass of men."

Allies in Good Spirits.

Still, from my observation and my talks with men and officers, there need be no concern in England about the enthusiasm and confidence and good spirits of both the British and French forces. They do not minimize in any way the power of the enemy, but it is strange that the rapid and irresistible rush of the Germans, which in England may appear intensely alarming, does not worry the French or the British soldier.

They believe themselves well placed and are surprisingly quiet and confident, and are patiently working away and watching and waiting for their day, which is to come. Nothing that has yet happened in the campaign has made any of them in the least despondent.

Success for General Pau.

Let us see what seems to have happened since my dispatch from Amiens last Monday. On that day the staff of the famous general commanding the extreme left wing of the allies (Sir John French) was at ——.

From the north the Germans seemed to be advancing in great force. On the other wing General Pau had had a fine success near Guise, where he handled severely the Tenth Prussian army corps and the Imperial guard in a fight lasting throughout Saturday and Sunday last. I was informed that he circled them and smashed them into the Oise.

On Monday the Germans were forced to retreat with heavy losses, but in the center and left center of the allied forces the British were not so successful. The concentration of Germans was against these points and there was great fighting last Sunday.

Regardless of Human Life.

But knowing this and more than this, I am not any more alarmed than are the French and British officers and men I spoke with in the course of my unpleasant journey close to the fighting line. They know they are only beginning, but they are still intact and the men who have been working hard and skillfully to stem the German torrent are quite confident that success will ultimately be theirs.

Huge masses of obedient men are flung by the German commanders, regardless of the loss of life, in a fierce and desperate effort to burst through to Paris quickly, and though such enormous masses must necessarily force back all opposition, the allies' opposition meets them resolutely and calmly and with intelligence and military science.

When the history of this war is written it will be seen that, wonderful as the German advance has been, the retirement of the allied forces has been equally magnificent. It is hardly possible to understand why such reckless masses of men and guns (and it is believed that nearly all the German army is in France), continually pushing along, should not overwhelm everything human, however well armed and skillfully handled, which stands before it.

Still it has not overwhelmed the allies. It is almost incredible, but it is true.

Town Is Deserted Suddenly.

When I arrived at this little railroad junction at noon, after a trip to Paris and back, I was told that, on Monday, the French cavalry were seen on the hills to the south and southwest, and that fighting had been going on to the east, 12 miles away. From what I had heard of the progress of the German advance up till last Saturday, I judged it would be useful to visit the little town of ——, down the road.

I found as peaceful a countryside as if it had never heard of war. The sight of a strangely beautiful cathedral standing apart from the town was restful enough, but there was something uncanny about the shut and silent houses. Not an inhabitant was to be seen, and then the cold truth struck us that the town had been evacuated.

Crossing a bridge by the railway station, a French dragoon laughed when he saw our startled looks at what rested below and against the bridge supports.

They were waiting for the Germans.

The streets were strewn with broken glass bottles and barbed wire was coiled everywhere. The little place is in a hollow and one needed but slight imagination to see the flaming hell it could become at any moment.

It was growing dark, and I suppose I have never before felt such an urgent desire to leave a town.

The railway was still intact, but two officials differed widely as to our prospects of getting away. While they argued we heard a mine blow up and then the sound of guns. A friendly engine driver, who merely "thought he could get through," at length got us away about eighteen miles southeast of the railway junction, which is about thirty miles to the north of Paris, and we got into Paris by train after midnight. We passed Creil, which was then alive with English soldiers.

Defense of Amiens Useless.

The Paris correspondent of the London Mail says:

The capture of Amiens, which is the capital of the department of the Somme, 70 miles directly north of Paris, was made possible by the success of the Germans at Mereuil. The entry was not contested. The mayor, after receiving a German envoy, announced the surrender of the city and urged the citizens to make no disturbance.

"The Germans went to the town hall, where they hauled down the French flag and hoisted the German colors. The German troops began entering the city about midday Monday, singing as they came: 'Die Wacht am Rhine' and 'Deutschland Uber Alles.'

"No time was wasted, however, as the orders were to move swiftly out on the high road to Paris. Only a few men were left to guard the city.

"'When the Germans entered Amiens the French retired to Picquigny (eight miles northwest of Amiens). They are reported to have blown up the railway tunnel and to have destroyed a large space along the highway to the south with dynamite."

Praise for British Charge.

The Daily Mail's correspondent behind the British lines describes the charge of the Ninth lancers, which occurred at an unnamed spot during the recent series of tactical retreats, as a second Balaklava. He says:

"Terrible havoc has been caused in our ranks by shells from a battery of 11 German guns posted inside a fortress near the Belgian frontier.

"It seemed impossible to silence their fire until the Ninth lancers made their attempt, riding straight at the guns after debouching into the open and charging under a hail of melinite and lyddite.

"I have not been able to get reliable figures as to the distance they rode, but they reached their goal. Nothing could stop them. They reached the guns, killed the gunners, and put the guns out of action. Then, like their prototypes of Balaklava, they rode back.

Many Slain on Return.

"On the return they fell in greater numbers still from the attack of other German batteries posted at vantage points around the valley.

"Notable bayonet charges were made at (name deleted) on Wednesday last. Several British infantry regiments occupied an exposed position around which the Germans gradually circled, drawing the noose closer and closer.

"The Britishers decided to cut their way through the cordon. So the men went at it, yelling and shouting, and got through, although the German artillery mowed them down frightfully.

"The German machine guns have been tremendously effective in all engagements thus far. Men who saw the South African war say the hottest firing there was childish compared with what the British troops have undergone since their arrival in France. So far as I can learn thus far the Germans have lost 26 of these guns."

Tells of Bapaume Fight.

"I have just returned from Compiegne. The English have left the town. The bridges over the Oise were blown up this (Monday) morning. The Germans were expected hourly.

"One important section of the battle which drove back the allies' left was fought at Bapaume Thursday and Friday. On Friday morning the Germans brought up many machine guns in a dense fog, and, in a six hours' engagement the French suffered severly.

"A British force unexpectedly arrived and occupied the French position and allowed the weary French to retire. Then, though hard pressed, the British continued to fight a magnificent rear guard action."

MINES IN AIR TO DESTROY DIRIGIBLES

Washington.—It is entirely feasible to "mine" the air against dirigibles and aeroplanes which seek to drop bombs in fortifications or besieged cities, according to a member of the army general staff. A large number of small captive gas balloons, each provided with a sufficient amount of explosive to destroy any aeroplane or dirigible with which it came in contact, would be sent up each evening, together with a number of box kites, each provided with a tail of malleable wire or other material nicely designed to foul propellers. The suction of propellers would draw balloon "mines" from a considerable distance.

Kaiser Selling English Orders.

London.—The German emperor and several high German officers are selling their Russian and English orders and turning the proceeds over to the Red Cross fund.

THE UNION-BANNER

Published Every Thursday at Clanton, Chilton County, Alabama.

UNION PUBLISHING CO.

W. M. WYATT, Editor.

Subscription price, in advance, per year, $1.00.

Will the Clanton Press tell the people of this county which one of their candidates for Commissioner wrote a letter in that paper on April 17th, 1913, advocating a bond issue and time warrants? We feel that the people should know his name and mode of canvassing.

One writer in the Clanton Press in 1913, said: "It appears that all the writers who oppose bonds forget that we have no other way to work our roads." But how does this same writer stand on the bond issue since he has become a candidate on the Democratic ticket?

In the Clanton Press of February 23rd, 1911, appeared the headline, "Who Said Nigger?" Now, we want to repeat this same expression, "Who Said Nigger?" We also wish to ask who appointed the nigger Judge in Washington, D. C. this year?

In an article headed, "The Issue is Joined," in the Clanton Press of July 13th, 1911, the following is the first sentence: "The Press wishes to come out boldly for a bond issue for good roads in Chilton County." We want to ask that paper how their candidates stand on the bond issue question now? Is it not a fact that one of your candidates was for bonds in 1913, and since his candidacy is against them, so he says?

We call the attention of the voters of this county to a letter in the Clanton Press of July 20th 1911, which is in part as follws: "I am in favor of a bond issue. If you are not a tax payer, you have no right to object to a bond issue; if you are, then you should be proud of the opportunity to issue bonds and build good roads. Respectfully, L. R. Sawyer." We want to know how Mr. Sawyer stands on the bond question since he has become a candidate. We ask him to give the people his views on the matter.

As to L. H. Reynolds being the first President of the Birmingham-Montgomery Highway Association, we would like to ask the Press if they recall where he, as President, or in any other connection with the above named association, ever advocated the issuance of county warrants by a county already in debt to construct its part of the road? Did he get up before that Association and say let's build this thing whether the people want it done or not, and whether it will help them or not, but at the same time force them to bear their part of the expenses?

Judge Reynolds favors good roads and progress in any way. That is why he favored the building of the Birmingham and Montgomery Highway. That is why he was always ready to aidin such work while he was Probate Judge. But what you Democrats don't like about him is the fact that he will not listen to anything that sounds like smothering the voice of the people on questions where they are directly concerned. When he reaches that point of the game, something is going to get exposed right then, and if the proposition is made to turn against the people, it is his policy to abandon it.

Last week the editor of this paper expressed his opinion regarding the alleged "dead rat" the Clanton Press has recently discovered to have died about the court house away back in 1906. We said what we meant, and meant what we said—no more and no less. We did say we didn't care a flip of our finger what happened in 1906, which is only natural, as the editor was in school at that time, and not concerned in politics, more than as an interested observer. But the Press goes further to say, "Neither does he care for the interests of the people now." We wish to call on our friend, the Press, to please give us its evidence for making the latter statement. To say such a thing without some proof to back it is going rather far, Mr. Press man, and if you don't show up the goods now, you are liable to have to go back and "lick your calf over" regarding this statements.

Ever since the fateful day that gave the Clanton Press its first view of the things of this turbulent existence, its ever recurring cry has been, "Consistency, thou art a jewel." In the memorable days when the buggy whip was being used as a factor (such an effective one) in Democratic politics, that same exclamation was being hurled forth by that paper. And even to this date it has been handed down to the present leaders who seem to cherish it as a family heirloom, and is still being echoed emptily over the hills and valleys when they think they have discovered something "out of fix."

They say they do not understand how The Union-Banner, in the face of its statement of June 4th, can take its present stand on road matters. As the vision and understanding of the Press is so limited on this question anyway, we shall be delighted to show how these matters are reconciled.

Our statement of June 4th was, as they quoted last week: "Let us be on the lookout for any movement that will help to make our highways better, and at the first chance fall in behind it with all the force we are able to give."

It seems that the Press, from the way it emphasizes the word "any" in the above quotation, would have us mean to jump on any kind of scheme that bobs up, and try to carry it out. We have clearly proven that we did not mean any such thing as this by the stand we have taken, and any one with any sense at all can readily see that. The trouble is they took the wrong road—emphasized the wrong word.

In the first place we said, any movement that would make our "highways" better. By this we meant the various roads of our county, and not one special road through our borders.

Second, we said "fall in behind it with all the force that we are ABLE to give." By this we did not mean the placing of debts on the county, contrary to the wishes of the people. We did not mean the placing of this county in debt without first giving the voters a chance to approve or disapprove of the question. We mean to give all the aid we were ABLE to give, just as we said. Therefore we have opposed the whole proposition from start to finish, because it did not agree with our road policy in any particular whatever. It did not apply to the roads of the whole county, but to one certain road from the north to the south. It involved debt and burden on the county, which in the first place we do not believe, from an economical standpoint, the county is able to undertake, and secondly was proposed without the least consultation of the tax payers who would have the direct burden to bear.

Now, we would like to know if any fair minded man would say that these statements are not congruent. If anyone believes they are not consistent, let him say so. And at the same time let him say whether or not they are right or just, regarding the rights and liberties of the common people.

We hope the Clanton Press can understand this detailed explanation, and see the point we were trying to bring out most clearly. Maybe this time their ideas will not get so mixed that they cannot see the important things, that we are trying to say, and ramble off into some simple delusion that will terminate by their falling into another "trap."

You are right Mr. Press, some of the political howlers of this age are sooner or later going to be forced to make that jaunt up "Salt River." And we would not be surprised if you and the rest of your gang have to lead the squadron.

We wish to remind our readers again that this paper is not going to sidetrack from the main issue of this campaign to indulge in a personal controversey with the editor of the Clanton Press. They may get around the argument by calling us "small potatoes" and other simple things, but we are going to try to hold their feet to the fire. This is hard to do, because they display such clever tactics at dodging the issue; but we think it is what the people demand, and we shall do our part towards making them take their medicine.

It appears to us that the editor of the Clanton Press was present personally at the mass meeting of the Progressive Party at the court house not long ago, at which meeting Col. M. W. Howard spoke, and made a full explanation of the initiative, refrendum and recall. But we notice last week the Press says it is at a loss to know what we mean when we mention these terms.

Now we are not surprised to hear the Press making such a pretense at ignorance. Every man and every party that is not in favor of giving the people the power of self government is making the same squeal. The initiative, referendum and recall, when applied to government practice and legal procedure, mean ultimately the triumph of peoples rights. It means abolition of the classes and enfranchisement of the masses. The reason the Press, as well as all other Democrats, do not know what it means is because THEY DON'T WANT TO KNOW. Do you think a criminal would seek the enforcement of a law that means his immediate execution? That is what the initiative, referendum and recall means to modern democratic practices as they have been being perpetrated against the people of late years. Then is it any wonder they are trying to smother and prevent its coming into popularity?

We wish every man who reads this would be honestly interested enough to make full investigation of the initiative, retrendum and recall, and then think what it means when a political party sets its foot down on such principles of goveanment. How long do you suppose some of Alabama's officials would last under the recall provision? Like the Mayor of the city of Seattle a few years ago, they would see their own doom staring them in the face and resign before even coming to trial. But of course so long as they have the shield of a corrupt party organization to hide behind, they will continue to thrust the insults of neglect aed disregard at the interests of the people.

Voters, the initiative, referendum and recall are the backbone of our Progressive party. They are the fundamentals of our platform. Study what they mean, and compare them with the platform of the Democratic party—if you can find where they have any; we cannot—and then say for yourselves who is championing the peoples' rights, YOUR rights. Surely then you will be honest enough to cast your vote the way you think is to your own interest, and the welfare of your fellow citzen at the same time.

In the year 1911, when the great fight was raging around the proposed speedway through Chilton county, the editor of the Clantod Press, who will be remembered as the most active opponent of the proposition, made investigations that proved that the road from north to south through Chilton county did not accommodate as great a number of people as the road from east to west; and also found that the road from east to west was much more in need of improvement than the one from north to south. These facts proved that if any one road in the county was to receive special attention, it should for several reasons, not be the road from north to south. Do not the same conditions exist today? Then we would ask the Press where is its much revered "consistency" which it is so often appealing to.

The question of putting the county in debt to build a certain road, and the bond issue as well as many others are important questions to the people of this county. We believe that every news paper in the county and every candidate that is asking the people to vote for them in the November election should let the people know how they stand on these questions. Why does the Clanton Press and the democratic nominees dodge these questions?

The following is an editorial which appeared in the Clanton Press of July 6th 1911. "It has been stated that the proposed Speedway will accomodate more people than any other road in the County. We have investigated this and find that it is not true. The road from Adam's Ferry (or better from Hoffman's Bridge) to Maplesville will accomodate more people by a large number than any other road—and they need the road too, for they are in a deplorable condition, while the road which is proposed to be turned into a SPEEDWAY for the accomodation of the Birmingham and Montgomery Automobilists and a few others, is in first grade condition."

The above is what the Clanton Press said in 1911. We wish to ask them how they and their Democratic Party stands on this question. Has any one heard the Clanton Press say how they stand on this, or any other question, since the Campaign began? Who is leading the fight to keep the County in debt over the wishes of the people to build this road? Is it not the Democratic Officers and a few Democrats in Clanton? Talk about consistency; how about the Clanton Press?

Lambasted.

A new trainer was engaged for the circus and was told to put a lion and a lamb through an act. He seemed nervous, and the next his boss asked him how he got along with the savage lion. "Sure, the lion didn't bother me much," he said, "but that durned lamb butted the daylights out of me!"

Qualities to Cultivate.

Guard within yourself one treasure, kindness. Know how to give without hesitation, know how to lose without regret, how to acquire without meanness. Know how to replace in your heart the happiness that may be wanted in yourself.—F. W. Faber

Bill of Rights.

The bill of rights is a declaration of fundamental principles deemed basic to the Constitution itself and borrowed from the English bill of rights of 1689. When the Constitution of the United States was framed and submitted to the people it did not have a bill of rights and it was so harshly criticized on this account that its friends promised to incorporate or add such a declaration, and the first ten amendments to the Constitution, made after the main instrument was adopted, were in fulfillment of this promise. All the State Constitutions now have bills of rights, practically identical with one another.

You Are Not Wanted

Do you know that your efficiency is probably not much above the average—35%? And do you realize that no employer wants a man who is not efficient, even if his services are given free?

Do You Want to Acquire Efficiency for the Job of Life?

Do you want to be wanted by all men? Do you want to know that you cannot be replaced by a better man? Do you want to know just how and just where you can make a bigger profit on your time and effort?

Your Job for the Day, your Job of Life, and your Success for All Time demand that you make yourself efficient.

The Institute of Efficiency

Ours is the only school in existence where you can learn PERSONAL Efficiency. In twenty-four fascinating lessons, in your home, at your leisure, you learn of these wonder working truths that have saved railroads, industrial plants, and factories millions of dollars each year, and which have raised salaries, in many cases, one-hundred fold.

Harrington Emerson

the man who founded this school, and who wrote these twenty-four vital lessons, has spent his life in the study and practice of Efficiency. During the past twenty years, this world famous expert, has been advising the leading industrial plants of the country. This vast experience he has put into this course of study so that you can reap the benefit.

What This Means For You

This course is for everybody who wants to make the most of his life—the professional man, business man, the young man hoping to achieve—everyone who wishes to go as far as he can, do as much as he can, achieve the best that is in him—with the least effort. WASHINGTON TO ACT PEOPLE TO LOOK EWHERE ELSE.

In the face of the temporary closing of foreign cotton markets the South is facing the greatest crisis since the civil war. This is not a call of pessimism, but it equally is not an invitation to apathy or futile mouthing on part of the responsible leaders of today.

Apropos— Since the closing of the ocean lines to merchant marine, congress, and especially the southern contingent having to do with the cotton states, has pyramided promise upon promise to the southern farmer and business man. We have been told that there was more than $150,000,000 currency available under the Vreeland-Aldrich act for the protection of distress cotton, for the prevention of anything approaching a collapse of financial structure in the South which still depends so largely upon cotton as its mainstay. Right and left, the objurgation from congress to the farmer has been: Dont worry! Keep cool! We will take care of you! Don't sacrifice your cotton! It is only a question of a few days! And plans are now being rapidly perfected!"

The cry has become stale. Weeks have elapsed. Cotton is crowding into the buying centers. Buying is irregular, freakish or non-existent. The worst of all is Uncertainty. The southern farmer and business man who are so largely dependent upon the farmer do not know what to expect from congress. They have been given hypodemic after hypodemic of hope and reassurance from those who sit in the seats of the mighty. But so far as anything tangible is concerned, the farmer and the business man are no better off than when European and American exchanges closed summarily and they were thrown back on their own resources.

This is unfair. This is bad faith. It is bad politics for those concerned in it. The farmers and business men of the South have long memories. They will not forget the men who made promises in a desperate emergency and then apparently sat down and twiddled their thumbs in impotency or indifference.

There will be a substantial margin of the incoming crop that American mills, conceding even an abnormal increase in demands upon their products, will not be able to absorb. That margin must in some manner be protected until matters readjust themselves. In the meantime, with markets closed, cotton is stagnant! The innumerable factors nearly and remotely affected by cotton are making time.

Christmas is approaching! The need of the South is money, actual currency, with which to meet the obligations of the most imperative kind, with which to subsist if you want the plain truth! And with this shadow brooding over the entire South, congress promises and promises; caucus after caucus is held first by senate and then by house democrats; honeyed and stimulating phrases are handed out by the yard and by the minute—all without definite action! There seems to be plenty of government money available for other purposes not half so urgent as that of the nation's leading export crop in distress. Southern Senators and representatives, as shown by a Constitution correspondent are quick enough to valorize silver. They are ready enough to vote huge sums to bring back refugees from Europe, to take care of interned Mexicans, to get panicky Americans out of Europe. But when it comes to extending vital life-blood aid to a crop upon which millions of Americans and their business fabric depends, there is either inability or outright deception. There is no alternative between these two viewpoints. Either congress is able to and intends to aid Southern cottan growers or it is unable to do so and does not intend to make an earnest effort. The situation offers no other interpretation. Either the professions of undying devotion to their farmer constituents on part of Southern congressmen are buncombe for home consumption—or the statesmanship of our day is unequal to an epochal emergency.

To which of these counts is congress, especially the Southern congressmen, going to plead?

The plan of evangelizing individuals into valorizing cotton is well enough as far as it goes—but it cannot go far enough. But it merits the help of every man who is able to buy a bale of cotton—for every little counts. Aid, to be effectual, must came from a central source and must be general.

Among other soothsaying-gossip prescriptions, we have been told that New York and Washington will co-operate in financing cotton. If they will co-operate, all right; but in the name of heaven, let something be done. Let us know where we stand; let us know if we are to expect a life-rope of indifference while the man in the water works out his own salvation.

If cotton is to be made collateral for loans from the banks, let us know that, and quickly, and let the currency that has been so volubly promised be forwarded to the banks. That is the most practical solution. Cotton is not a cold storage product; age does not affect it. Cotton stored today is better for spinning when a year old than now.

The world, eventually is going to want and demand every pound of cotton the South this year produces, and at a good price. But the world is now in no position to buy or spin cotton until these abnormal obstacles are removed, it is incumbent upon either the statesmanship of the nation or the resourcefullness of the southern people to rise to an emergency that is not likely to recur in world history.

If a government, rich and powerful, is helpless at times like this, in the name of common sense, what is this government really for? If it runs along smooth enough when the channel ss smooth, then ships water and flounders when the channel is a trifle rough, what sort of statesmanship is driving it? If it can find relief from the treasury for a dozen sources—for all save the crop that is the dependence of the people; if it can find money for philanthropic or pork barrel projects, and reject what is merely an emergency loan amply recured—what are its people to think of it? Congress must in a few days find an answer to these questions. Time presses! The situation grows worse by the hour.

The South is entitled to know whether the promises of Congress are empty and demagogic pretext or whether they are genuine. The South is entitled to know whether it can depend upon the government for temporary aid or must it make other arrangements.

It comes down to this—Congress is on trial, not only before the South but before the nation. Its opportunity for service is unique. If it does not grasp that opportunity, the confession of weakness will be unique in all American history.

There has been enough talk from Washington—it is now time to act!—Atlanta Constitution.

A MISTAKEN IDEA

There are some people who still resort to drugged pills or alcoholic syrups to overcome colds, nervousness or general debility, and who know that the pure, unadulterated nourishment in Scott's Emulsion is eminently better, but refrain from taking it because they fear it may lead to excessive fat or obesity.

This is a mistaken idea, because Scott's Emulsion first strengthens the body before making flesh. Its blood-forming properties aid nature to throw off sickness by building health from its very source, and flesh is formed only by its continued use. Avoid alcoholic substitutes for SCOTT'S.

Planning for the Stork's Arrival

Among those things which all women should know of, and many of them do, is a splendid external application sold in most drug stores under the name of "Mother's Friend." It is a penetrating liquid and many and many a mother tells how it so wonderfully aided them through the period of expectancy. Its chief purpose is to render the tendons, ligaments and muscles so pliant that nature's expansion may be accomplished without the intense strain so often characteristic of the period of expectancy.

"Mother's Friend" may therefore be considered as indirectly having a splendid influence upon the early disposition of the future generation.

Whatever induces to the ease and comfort of the mother should leave its impress upon the nervous system of the baby.

At any rate it is reasonable to believe that since "Mother's Friend" has been a companion to motherhood for more than half a century it must be a remedy that women have learned the great value of.

Ask at any drug store for "Mother's Friend," a penetrating, external liquid of great help and value. And write to Bradfield Regulator Co., 402 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for their book of useful and timely information.

STOMACH SUFFERERS

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy Is Recommended and Praised by Thousands Who Have Been Restored

"I was a sick man for about three months caused from Gall Stones of the Liver and was told by three of our most prominent physicians that I would have to submit to an operation to get relief, but heard of your Wonderful Stomach Remedy and secured a full treatment and took it according to directions and passed hundreds of Gall Stones. Since taking your medicine I work regularly and don't feel any ill effects. I am praising your Remedy to all my friends. I think it's worthy of the highest praise. B. L. DOOLEY, Roanoke, Va."

Sufferers of Stomach, Liver and Intestinal Ailments are not asked to take Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy for weeks and months before they feel benefited. The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of "THE MAN HIGHER UP," "HIS RISE TO POWER," Etc.

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

SYNOPSIS.

Mark Truitt, encouraged by his sweetheart, Unity Martin, leaves Bethel, his native town, to seek his fortune. Simon Truitt tells Mark that it long has been his dream to see a steel plant at Bethel and asks the son to return and build one if he ever gets rich. Mark applies to Thomas Henley, head of the Quinby Iron works, for a job and is sent to the construction gang. His success in that work wins him a place as helper to Roman Andzrejzski, open-hearth furnaceman. He becomes a boarder in Roman's home and assists Piotr, Roman's son, in his studies. Kazia, an adopted daughter, shows her gratitude in such a manner as to arouse Mark's interest in her.

"Yes, you would, Kazia. But I guess it's more than just the money. You see, in Bethel there's no chance, nothing to do; except grow old and nose into your neighbor's business and—and want the things you can't have."

"Yes," she said slowly, "I know."

"You know? Do you want things, too?"

"Want things!" She drew a long wondering breath, as she measured desire. She did not wait for his question. "To be different."

They sat a little above the carriage road, along which rolled the Sunday afternoon procession of pleasure-takers. He pointed to an open landau in which two women sat, primly upright, hands folded in laps and faces set straight ahead, the very picture of well-dressed, self-conscious respectability—as "different" from Kazia as anything he could conceive.

"Like that?"

"Yes, like that. Sometimes." She looked wistfully after the departing respectabilities. "But mostly, just to belong to somebody."

"But Roman and the Matka and Piotr—"

"They're ashamed of me and afraid other people'll find out about me. When I went to school the other boys and girls said things—and did things. I didn't care." Her head went up and her voice told how passionately she had cared. "But Piotr told them at home and they wouldn't let me go any more. They'd be glad if I were gone. And some day—I will go."

"But where, Kazia?"

"I don't know," she said wearily. "If I knew, I'd go now. Some place where they won't know about me. Here nobody, when they find out, treats me like other people. Except," she added, "Jim Whiting."

"And me," he said gently.

"And you." She turned to look searchingly into his eyes. "Don't it really make any difference to you?"

"I settled that question once for all last Sunday."

She saw, but did not understand. She pointed to the sinking sun.

"See! It's getting late. I must go home and get your supper."

He took her hand and helped her to rise. But he did not release the hand.

"Have you liked it today? And will you come again?" He smiled down upon her.

In her eyes was still the look of gratitude, of trust. "If you want to," she answered simply.

And in the weeks that followed they did repeat that holiday more than once.

Mark did not try to analyze his pleasure in those weeks. His heart said: "I am young and life should be bright. But this existence—toil, eat, sleep and toil again—is eating my youth away. I have a right to this little pleasure." The only real shadow was that cast by Jim Whiting.

The weekly bulletins to Unity contained important omissions.

One night he was in his room, sleepless. There had been no little chat with Kazia after supper. She had had just time to make her simple toilet before Jim Whiting came to carry her away. Mark lay there, tossing restlessly, visioning the two in some secluded spot where Whiting could make love to her undisturbed. The thought was not a sedative. He wished they would come home; he did not like to think of her out in the languorous night with Whiting.

In time they did return. The murmur of their voices on the little front porch came to him through his open window. Whiting seemed in no haste to leave. Mark wondered impatiently what they found to talk so long about.

At length, sleep as far away as ever, he arose, dressed and went quietly down stairs—with what intent he hardly knew. On the bottom stair he stopped, facing the door. Whiting was on the point of leaving. Mark saw him coolly put an arm around Kazia; she suffered it. Hot anger—and something far sharper—boiled within the eavesdropper. Nor was it perceptibly cooled when he saw her deftly avoid the kiss Whiting would have taken; she laughed as she broke away. Whiting went down the steps, whistling gaily.

Mark was still standing on the stair when she went in. She started.

"Oh! Is that you?"

"I think it is."

"That's a funny thing to say," she laughed. "Your voice sounds funny, too."

He had just been condemning Whiting for the indecent length of his stay. Now he said: "Let's go out on the porch a while."

They went out into the moonlight. He sat upon the railing and stared grimly in the direction of Whiting's departure. It was past midnight; the street slept. From the valley below them came the rumble of the mills that were teaching him fear and self-control. He was silent for a few minutes, while he tried to master the ugly thing within him.

"What is it?" she asked wonderingly.

"Kazia," he blurted out, "you shouldn't let him do that."

"Oh! You saw?"

"I didn't mean to."

"Why do you say I shouldn't?"

"He—he's not fit to touch you."

"He's very jolly and nice to me," she said quietly. "And—and he wants to take me away."

"But you're not going, are you?" he cried.

She sighed. "I don't know—yet."

"Kazia!" He did not know how his voice was shaking. "Promise me you won't go away with him."

"Why not?" She turned to him. "Why not?"

"Because," he began unsteadily, "because I want the best for you. Because—because this!" With a sudden rough reckless movement he caught her close to him. She suffered him as she had Jim Whiting. "Don't you know I want only the best for you?"

"I think I do." She put a hand to his cheek and turned his face out of the shadow, looking long and searchingly into his eyes.

Then she gave a little sigh. "I promise—now." Her lips waited for his kiss.

Gradually his senses cleared. He began to see the ugly treachery of what he had done. His strong clasp slackened.

She seemed to feel, with the sixth sense that was hers, the change in him.

"What is it?" She looked up in quick alarm.

"Nothing." To avoid her eyes he caught her close again, burying his face in her hair, and yielded to the intoxication of her. "Oh! Kazia, Kazia!" . . .

CHAPTER VIII.

Afire.

July came, such a month as the city could not remember, humid and sickeningly hot. Children played languidly, always in the shade, and flocked around ice wagons, quarreling over the division of the fast melting, cool fragments.

In the mills the men toiled on, "speeding up" as always to feed a world hunger for steel. They drank vast quantities of water; they salted it that they might drink the more, believing that in much sweating alone lay safety. There were giants in those days. But sometimes they fell. A sudden drying up of sweat, a violent nausea, a sharp blinding pressure upon the brain—in a few minutes or fewer hours they were dead; their names did not always appear in the daily lists. Some that did not die found their strength forever broken.

The fierce heat blistered Mark's naked sweating skin. The water he drank carried out through his pores the food that should have nourished him. The heavy labor put upon him a weariness sleep could not dispel. The incessant roar, tearing at quivering nerves, impeding thought, became in his overwrought state exquisite torture. Hate, for the mills, for those above who drove so pitilessly, even for the men beside him, filled him; and fear. Once, when Henley, passing, gave his careless nod, he was answered only with a venomous glare that summoned the master's sardonic grin. Mark could have killed him then.

He envied Roman, often almost bitterly. The big Pole felt and showed the effects of the intense heat, but he was the same unflurried philosophical workman as ever, always with a cheerful word; no fear of collapse disturbed him.

Through watching him Mark was beset by a new temptation. When their turns were ended Roman and the men invariably flocked to the nearest saloon and there drank repeatedly—whisky and brandy mostly—until vigor returned to their wornout bodies. It was a false vigor, Mark knew, and short-lived. But there were times when the thought of the hour of surcease from fatigue, of spirited outlook, lured him almost irresistibly.

And one evening he followed Roman and his companions to the bar.

"Whisky," he ordered.

Roman put out a restraining hand. "You better not drink," he counseled gravely. "Or only beer."

Mark laughed recklessly and repeated his order. Thrice he drank. The weight dragging at his limbs lifted, the misery rankling in his heart dissolved. He was cheerful, talkative, soon maudlin. Before he reached home the whisky had possessed his unaccustomed brain; he was staggering, drunk. Roman undressed him and put him to bed without supper. But he had had his period of forgetfulness.

The next day he paid—and the craving gnawed more sharply. That evening Roman, understanding, avoided the saloon and led Mark by a straight course homeward. Thereafter it was his custom, until Mark saw the care and forbade.

"You needn't be afraid. It costs too much. Everything," he added with a bitterness for which Roman had not the key, "costs too much."

"Zo? But you are tiredt. Unt you are not strong. Vy do you not leaf the vork?"

"Give up now, after holding on this far! I guess you don't mean that. But some day I'll get where I want—I'll have life by the throat." It did not seem melodramatic to him. "Then I'll make it pay for this—on its knees."

"You shouldt not say zo. Alvays life iss the master. But you are tiredt."

And in the midst of the ordeal by fire he fought his first battle. At times he was almost grateful for the physical weariness that distracted him from the inner struggle.

He learned then how insensibly Unity had receded into the background. She had become vague, of little substance; she was a story he had read a long time ago. But she was real, too, in that she was a habit.

There was a memory that accused—a girl, for once warm and yielding, in the last glory of the sunset, clinging to him with the tremulous cry: "You won't forget me out there?" He had made a vow. . . . Within a twelvemonth he had clasped another.

That other was both real, intensely real—and near. He tried to avoid her; it was not easy.

Kazia went about, quieter than ever, what she felt too deep for words, too solemn for laughter. She did not again break into song. But no one seeing her eyes could have doubted what had come into her heart. And she gave to her lover with both hands, knowing no thrift in love.

Her happiness awed, sometimes almost frightened her, but she would not question it. When her sixth sense stirred, she shamed it into silence. She saw in her lover's eyes a trouble that deepened as the days went by, heard it in his voice, felt it when he clasped her.

One evening—the last before the hot wave broke; but he did not know that—he dragged himself homeward, believing he had come to the end of his endurance.

"But I suppose I haven't," he sighed. "Probably I'll just go on and on—but some day I'll drop. I wonder why I do it! I wish the end would come soon—now." He thought he meant that.

Even the bath brought no relief. He sat down to a supper against the very thought of which his stomach revolted. After a few mouthfuls he left the table and went to his room. He threw himself, still dressed, on the bed, tossing restlessly in the vain search for an easy position. His body was one dull ache. The overheated blood pounded through his veins, each throb a knife that hacked his brain. His skin was hot and dry, his mouth parched; fever rose.

The late darkness fell, dispelled a little by the faint glow from a nearby street lamp; it found him lying inert but awake. His mind was beginning to behave queerly, seeing strange shadowy objects that moved stealthily about. He caught himself muttering to them. He wondered if he were growing delirious, but he could not summon energy to call out or arise.

It must have been 10 o'clock when he thought he heard a light tap on the door. He made an effort to speak.

"Come."

The door opened. Some one tiptoed softly to the bedside and leaned over him.

"Are you sick?" came the broken anxious whisper. "You looked so tired—and you came up without—speaking to me. They said, let you sleep. But I've been—so afraid."

He caught her hand and clung to it.

"Would you mind staying a while?" he whispered back. "My head does funny tricks in the dark."

She put her free hand to his hot forehead. Then she gave a low pitying cry. "You are sick!—Wait!"

She left the room quietly. Soon she returned with towels and a basin of water in which ice tinkled. She lighted the gas jet and turned it very low.

"Close your eyes now," she said softly, "and try to sleep. I didn't tell any one, because I wanted to help you myself."

He lay passive, while she placed cold wet towels over his eyes, bathed his hands and wrists in the icy water and stroked his throbbing temples. He wondered dully that hands which worked so hard could be so gentle. For many minutes they did not speak. . . . The stealthy shapes were laid. The sharp pounding in his brain began to subside. Drowsiness was stealing over him.

"Hush!" she said.

"It's such a pretty name," he murmured sleepily.

He felt her lips on his forehead. After that he slept.

When he awoke the room was dark. A cool moist wind swept strongly in upon him. He heard the rumble of far away retreating thunder. And with the heat the headache and overpowering fatigue had gone. He drew a long sighing breath. Something stirred in his hand.

Then in the faint reflection of the street lamp he saw the figure crouching on the floor at the bedside, her cheek pillowed in his outstretched hand. It took him a moment to realize what had brought her there.

"Are you awake?" she whispered.

"Yes."

"And better?"

"All right now, thanks to you.—Why, you're all wet!"

"Yes." She rose stiffly to her knees. "It's been storming and it rained in on me a little. But it's cooler now."

"And you—What time is it?"

"A clock just struck four."

"And you've been here all the time?"

"I was afraid you'd wake up and need some one. And—I wanted to."

"Kazia, why do you do these things for me?"

"It is my place."

Her place! What place, then, had he given her? "Kazia—" he began.

But more than cowardice sealed his lips. She might have been consciously fighting for her love. She bent over and kissed him.

"Hush! You need to sleep."

CHAPTER IX.

Liquid Iron.

The hot spell was over.

For fifty-seven years Roman had toiled as few men can toil—on the tiny farm that had been his father's, to satisfy the greedy tax gatherer; in Essen, learning another craft under the master Krupp; in the new land whose promise had lured him. Not once had his superb strength and endurance failed him; therefore he had never known fear, had not believed that the fate that overtook others must some day be his. He had been very prodigal of that strength.

But one day—such a one as in that season the steel-workers called cool—he staggered and fell. It was three days before he could go back to his job. During that time Mark Truitt was in charge of the furnace.

He who returned was not the careful, precise, unflurried workman. He knew fear. He tired easily and was uncertain of temper. The heat fretted him and he worried over his work. He lost in efficiency; several times he tapped the furnace either too soon or too late and was sharply reprimanded. To keep up and to forget the new weakness he drank more whisky than ever. Within two weeks he collapsed again.

It was during Roman's third lay-off that Gracey, the foreman, said to Mark: "It looks like Roman's done for."

"It looks that way," Mark assented.

"It's come pretty sudden with him. It does that sometimes."

"Yes." Mark stared sadly through the furnace mouth at the boiling flame-swept slag. The drama had become a tragedy. There was an element in steel of which chemists took no account—the lives and souls of men.

"He can't expect to keep his job," he heard the foreman continue, "away half the time like this. And last week he spoiled two heats. I'm afraid we'll have to let him go."

"Yes!" Mark's mouth twisted in an ugly sneer. "He's given you the best he had. And now he's breaking down. So—scrap him, of course!"

"That's funny talk," grunted the foreman. "Especially since the superintendent and I've been talking it over and we think of you for the job. That makes it look different, don't it?" he laughed.

"No, it doesn't. Do you suppose I haven't been thinking of that—counting on it—ever since he broke first?" Mark turned hot eyes on the foreman. "Why, that's the worst of you. You drive us to the limit and when we break you kick us off like an old shoe. And that isn't enough. You've got to make beasts of us, every man dogging the fellow ahead, glad when he drops and lets go his job. Damn you all, anyhow!"

"Then I'm to tell the superintendent you don't want the job?"

Mark looked again into the boiling furnace, felt its consuming breath, listened to the mills' strident voice. Through every sense he caught their menace; his spirit cowered before it. But he who had come so near to failing could know the bitterness of him through whose fall advancement would come.

"No!" he snarled in savage contempt for himself and his hollow high indignation. "You can tell him I'm a beast like all the rest."

He was on the night turn then. In the morning he went reluctantly to Roman's house. At breakfast he was alone with Kazia. But there was no love-making that morning. Nor did he explain that he was to supersede her uncle at the furnace.

"How's Roman?" he asked with an added inward twinge.

"He's not much better," she sighed. "We're worried about him. He frets because he thinks he might lose his job."

He said nothing.

"Do you think he will?"

"Yes." He made shift to raise his eyes to hers. "I think he will."

"Just because he's sick. Oh, surely not!"

"Because he's used up. And when you're used up, you've got to get out to make room for better—for those that can still be useful."

"Oh, that would break his heart. How I hate those mills!" she cried. "But don't tell him you think that."

Roman did not go back to work until his shift was on day turn again. Some presentiment of the impending calamity must have come to him, for as he and Mark set out for the mills that morning the irritability that had marked him since his first collapse gave way to a deep dejection.

It was not until they were entering the mill shed that Mark said: "Roman, I think Gracey wants to see you." He tried to make it very gentle.

"Zo?" Roman halted, looked intently at Mark. He drew a long whistling breath. "Zo!" He understood. But his presentiment had not told him how deep the hurt would be.

He tried to look the man he had been. But his tired lack-luster eyes belied the stiffly martial shoulders and firm step. He went straight to the foreman.

"Mine chop?" he asked steadily. "You vill take it avay?"

"I'm afraid we'll have to let you go, Roman."

"Unt vy?" There was no complaint.

"You're laying off too much," the foreman answered bluntly. "And you're getting careless in your work. You've lost your grip."

"I haf been zick. Meppy," Roman made an effort to speak the confidence he did not feel, "meppy I'll get better."

"I hope so. You've been a good man in your time. But I don't think so. You're getting too old for the work." Gracey was still young; he could speak carelessly of growing old.

"In my time! Oldt," Roman repeated slowly. "I haf not beliefedt zo."

He did not wince. But the shoulders he had been holding so bravely erect sagged.

"Oldt! It iss zo."

He started to move away, but the foreman called him back.

"See here, Roman," he said with rough kindness. "You've always drawn good pay. And you've quite a bit laid by, I hear. Why don't you go back to your own country and take it easy the rest of your life?"

Roman eyed him listlessly. "Here iss mine country. But I do not vant to take it easy. Alvays haf I vorkedt—the vork of strong men."

He left the foreman and walked slowly, heavily before the furnaces until he came to his old station. There he stopped, watching the crew at work; in particular watching the figure—so slight for that labor—of the young man who had endured where stronger men fell. How neatly he fitted into his new niche!

"Unt he iss not oldt. Oldt!" Roman shivered.

Mark Truitt ate—or pretended to eat—his supper in the saloon that night. He could not bring himself to face the ordeal of sitting at table with Roman's family.

There was no sense of triumph in his promotion, honestly earned though it was as his world measured such things.

He walked to Roman's house, with a firm tread that was the outward expression of his mood. He knew just what was coming. He dreaded it, the moment when he must again face the man by whose fall he profited, must again break the sweet ties this life formed only to sever. Yet he did not flinch. He might rail against the issues presented to him, but at least he had always the courage of his choice.

There was none of the trappings of tragedy in the moment he had dreaded. The family was gathered as usual in the dining room. Roman had himself in hand once more.

Mark stopped in the doorway. For the life of him he could not speak the commonplace salutation on his lips. He saw Kazia steal quietly from the room. But he knew that she stayed within hearing.

It was Roman who broke the silence.

"You haf eaten?"

"At the saloon."

"Zo? You shouldt haf come. Ve vaited."

"Piotr," Roman reproved him quietly, "it iss not for you."

"Of course," Mark addressed Roman, "you want me to go. I sup[pose] blame me. I blame myself so[metimes] I don't know why. It—it isn't [my] isn't my fault you've been fir[ed] ought to see that. And I'd b[e] not to take your job, now that you can't have it any more."

"Huh!" sneered Piotr. "You're glad enough of the chance, too."

"Piotr!" The boy subsided. Roman went on: "It iss not your fault I am oldt, no. But—it iss better you go. You haf mine chop. It iss not goot for me to see unt hear of the vork of strong men ven I am not strong."

"I will go tonight."

"I haf not zaidt tonight. Ven you haf another goot place to go."

"I will go tonight."

"Well—good-by, then," said Piotr promptly.

Mark waited a moment longer. But there was really nothing more to be said. He went upstairs.

His carpetbag packed—a brief task—he waited. And this was hard—hard! Now there was at least the semblance of a struggle.

"Huh!" Sneered Piotr, "You're Glad Enough of the Chance."

It almost shook him because with that went—Kazia. Instinct, brushing aside the mist of false teachings, interpreted anew and aright the passion he had thought ignoble, warned him to take this whole love while yet there was time.

"Almost thou persuadest me. . . ."

But not altogether. His desire—to survive, to win his place among the masters—still held the whip, kept him facing doggedly his straight road ahead. And, as if jealous of any rival for supremacy over him, it claimed the pale lesser love. He could not see the unlettered Hunky girl sharing that conquest.

When she came, she stood for a moment at the door, a question and a great fear in her eyes.

"I—I was waiting for you," he said.

"I knew. But I couldn't come any sooner."

Her glance fell to the bag, rose again. She walked slowly toward him. He rose. Scarcely an arm's length away, she halted. Suddenly tears stood in her eyes. She put out both hands in a quick pleading gesture.

"Don't go!"

"They don't want me to stay, Kazia."

"That's because you've taken his job. Don't take it!"

He shook his head. "You don't understand. There's no reason why I shouldn't take it."

"He's your friend."

"You don't understand," he repeated wearily. "If I could give him back his job by not taking it, I'd not take it." He believed that then! He began again the old reasoning. "But I couldn't. Some one else would get it—that's all. Isn't it better for me to have it than a stranger? Roman," he concluded bitterly, "ought to see it that way."

"I know there isn't any good reason. But—I couldn't go with you, if you took it."

She couldn't go with him! His eyes fell miserably.

"Oh, no!" With one swift step she bridged the space between them, throwing her arms around his neck. "Oh, no! I didn't mean that. I'd go with you, whatever you did. I'd have to. I couldn't stay here, when you're gone—go back to the way it was before you came. I couldn't stand that." A little shudder passed over her.

"You can't understand," he cried again. "I've tried—"

"I know. I've seen it troubling you, though I didn't know what it was. But—can't you see? I'm the reason. You'll never find any one that can love you like I can. It's all I know—to love—to love you. I don't ask much. But I can give—everything."

With a force that must have hurt her he freed himself from her clasp and sank shaking into the chair, covering his face with his hands. For a breath the scales quivered. Then:

"Kazia," he whispered, "I haven't been square with you. There's—there's another girl—"

"There is—And you—"

After what seemed like a long silence he dared to glance up to see how she had taken it. By then she had crept to the threshold and was looking back at him. About her lips a dazed, foolish little smile was playing. And her eyes were the eyes of one who had just seen a great horror.

When he looked up again, she was gone.

An hour later—how he could not have told—he found himself wandering in the streets, carrying his ancient carpetbag.

BE PREPARED

States Cannot Afford to Ignore Possibilities.

Firm Determination to Uphold the Monroe Doctrine Means That Country Has to Keep in Position to Make Itself Respected.

While Colonel Roosevelt has been preaching the necessity of living up to the Monroe Doctrine, not agreeing to sweeping peace treaties which might never be carried out, and building a navy sufficient to make this nation respected, people have listened to him, but with a feeling that his discussions were more or less academic. Such preachments, men have thought, would have carried more weight a century ago, when there was really danger of world-wide war. The present age is too civilized. Why be so exercised over the possibility of nations fighting when the age of peace has come?

But recent events in Europe have given an impression of right stern reality to his words on these subjects.

Consider, for instance, the effect of the Monroe Doctrine at this time. As Colonel Roosevelt points out, if the American continent had become the field of European colonization it would be difficult if not impossible to keep it free from the great struggle now going on in Europe. Certainly such a condition would involve the United States in the necessity for the huge armaments that have been impoverishing the continent.

If the United States is to maintain the Monroe Doctrine, then the matter of the arbitration treaties becomes of the greatest importance. The Monroe Doctrine is not recognized in the courts of the nations. It is maintained only by the United States. Suppose, as Colonel Roosevelt says, Denmark or Holland, both of which own islands in the West Indies, should be drawn into the war and be compelled to cede their West Indian possessions to a great European military power. Then, during the year of investigation provided for by the pending treaties, the power could convert the island into a Gibraltar and the United States would be left the alternatives of submission or of beginning war at a disadvantage.

Or take the case of the Panama canal, which a few years ago many persons felt should be neutralized and left without fortification. That proposition would be fine in a world from which war had been banished. But its adoption would have left America helpless today if any great power had desired to violate the neutrality.

"I am not taking sides one way or the other as concerns the violation or disregard of treaties," Colonel Roosevelt says. "When giants are engaged in a death wrestle as they reel to and fro they are certain to trample on whoever gets in the way of either of the huge, straining combatants, unless it is dangerous to do so."

At the present stage of civilization the United States cannot afford to commit itself to any policy which will not make it dangerous for any of the struggling military nations of Europe to trample on it.

Day of Individualism Gone.

Nothing is more certain than that the day of individualism has passed. Capital, having become itself collective, must adjust itself to deal with the collectivism of labor. That labor should be made responsible in its collective form may be argued justly. The employer who protests against the irresponsibility of the union with which he is asked to enter into contractual relations has much to say for the reasonableness of his contention. This, however, involves possibilities that demand serious consideration. It would mean, probably, the passing of the craft union and the curse of the jurisdictional strike. But the employers would have to face the strength of a big industrial union and the prospect of a general strike in case of disagreement. In the Socialist belief the coming of the industrial union is a step toward the economic revolution they predict.

Methods Must Be Reformed.

As regards the tariff, remember that the Payne-Aldrich bill was a vicious bill on the one side, just as the present bill is a vicious bill on the other side, said Colonel Roosevelt in a recent speech. The two bills were made under exactly the same methods and just so long as these methods are continued, just so long violent reaction one way will be followed by violent reaction the other way. If you put in power the Republican organization, under the lead of Messrs. Penrose, Barnes, Gallinger and the others whose hold upon it is as yet unshaken, you will insure another violent revulsion, the swing of the pendulum alternating from one unhealthy extreme to the other unhealthy extreme.

Good Business Proposition.

The one chance of accomplishing results worth having is to adopt the Progressive platform as regards the tariff, the trusts, and as regards both business and labor. A tariff commission of non-partisan experts, if as efficiently handled as the German tariff commission, will do for this country what the German tariff commission through decades has done for Germany. We are not asking you to try experiments, we are asking you to go into a plain business proposition which has proved its excellence.—Theodore Roosevelt.

RIGHT MEN MUST BE CHOSEN

Members of Interstate Trade Commission Will Have Most Serious Duties to Perform.

No simple task will confront the executive who is called upon to appoint the members of the proposed interstate trade commission. So many prerogatives have been given to this commission that great harm may be done to the business world unless the right kind of men are appointed.

There are but two real bankers on the federal reserve board, but the other members are familiar with banking and financial methods. It will be far more difficult to obtain the right kind of men for the interstate trade commission. The only way to be absolutely certain that the business world will not be made the victim of false theories and radical notions is to appoint business men on the commission.

Even the appointment of business men will not make the business world feel wholly safe in view of the extraordinary scope that has been given to the commissioners to harass corporations. The proposed board will have the right to set up shop in any corporation's office, asking for all books and papers and requesting the testimony of each employe. If the commissioners desired to do so, they might interrupt the business of a firm for months.

Every conceivable sort of business problem will come before the commission. The members will have to know all about the steel, woolen, silk, pottery, lumber, and every other business. They will have to know all about freight rates and financial matters. Delving into every business, they will have to understand it in detail in order to do it justice.

It is hard enough to obtain the services of a man to head one corporation and give satisfaction to all the stockholders. Such a man must understand his business thoroughly, and he commands a high salary. The trade commissioners, however, will have to understand every business, and yet will receive the salary that is usually paid to a superintendent who understands only one branch of one business.

Indiana Progressive Party.

"There is nothing more significant of the breaking of party lines than the open avowal of Democrats, by the scores and hundreds, that they are done with the old organization and henceforth will be found in the Progressive column," said Bernard B. Shively the other day. "I have spoken in dozens of places in this state since April, and at each place I have been approached by former Democrats, never fewer than three, and sometimes as many as a dozen, who come out squarely and say they are for the Progressives and will vote and work for the party's ticket this year. I should say that the first reason for their stand is their admiration of Beveridge. He has always had a strong independent following, and it grows each hour. More than that, the program of tariff legislation which Beveridge originated gains new converts. Then add to this fact their thorough disgust with machine domination of the Democratic party, and it is easy to see why they will be Progressives in this campaign and hereafter."—Indianapolis Star.

Progressive Party's Aims.

"We members of the Progressive party, are committed to the development of a homogeneous and balanced economic social program. Mr. Murdock and other members of the house of representatives and senate who in congress have so ably represented the Progressive party and the people, have shown an enlightened understanding of the need for this rounded and balanced program. They have introduced the Murdock trust bills, the tariff commission bill, and the bill for the creation of a federal employment bureau, as well as a bill for the abolition of child labor. The unwisdom of the opponents of the Progressives who dominate affairs in Washington has blocked these reforms, and thereby has emphasized the need of our demand for a reform of political machinery, notably the reform of the presidential nominating system."—Theodore Roosevelt in his speech at Hartford, Conn.

Is a Political Administration.

The purposes of the administration are purely political. There is no man in it, least of all the president, who has had any serious experience on the constructive side of business. But they know something of the game of politics. They realize that there is abroad in the country a sentiment against the trusts. They have formulated measures intended to cajole this sentiment and are pushing them through a reluctant congress simply as a movement in the general scheme of popular politics, with little or no regard to effects as they relate to constitutional rights or to the business life of the country.

Evils to Be Eliminated.

It is natural that the employer should resent what he calls an attempt to "run his business," whether by the edict of a labor union or the regulation of government. He too, is forced to socialize his interests by organization, and out of the social unrest springs social friction. There are oppressive and unjust employers, and there are venal and criminal agents of the working class. These are evils incident to the situation that must be met with impartial severity in order that they may be eliminated.

PSYCHOLOGY OF THE KISS

Learned English Authority Has Divided Osculation Into Two Distinct Types.

In a learned disquisition on kisses Sir Ray Lankester divides them into two classes. "One class takes the form of nose-rubbing—each kiss giver rubbing his nose against that of the other. The second kind, which is that familiar to us, consists in pressing the lips against the lips, skin or hair of another individual and making a short, quick inspiration, resulting in a more or less audible sound. Both kinds are really of the nature of 'sniffing,' the active effort to smell or explore by the olfactory sense. The kissing of one another by grown-up men was abandoned in this country in the eighteenth century; but we have most of us witnessed it abroad, and perhaps been unexpectedly subjected to the process, as I once was by an affectionate scientific colleague. The Russians are the most profuse and indiscriminate of European peoples in their kissing. I have seen a Russian about to go on a journey devoured by the kisses of his relations and household retainers, male and female."

RASH ON CHILD'S HEAD

2127 Division St., Baltimore, Md.—"The trouble on my child's face and head appeared as a rash and then it got so that the skin looked drawn and water and blood would run out. That would cause a scab and her head and face were a mass of sores. They would crack and bleed and then her head began to get scaly and I thought it was dandruff. I started to take the scab off and found her head was a mass of them. When she would cry it seemed worse because the water would stream down her face and itch and she would dig and scratch. Her little head was bald as it was so sore that all the hair came out. My baby used to cry at night and I could not sleep.

"Then I decided to get Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I would make a lather of the Cuticura Soap but her face and head were so sore I hated to touch them so I would take a soft cloth and wash her head. After I dried it with a soft towel I would gently apply the Cuticura Ointment. With the first treatment I could see a change in my baby and before I used the whole treatment she was completely healed and her skin is beautiful." (Signed) Mrs. Lillie Owens, Jan. 31, 1914.

An Optimist.

"It has especially been good since Mayor Gaynor's day," Mr. Waldo said, and then, in response to an objection:

"Oh, that's nothing. Be an optimist. Don't mind trifles. Look, like the henpecked husband, on the bright side of things.

"'By gosh,' a henpecked husband said, 'I hear some chaps kicking because their wives always have the last word. Now, for my part, to give my wife the last word never bothers me a bit.'

"'It don't!'

"'No, on the contrary, I always feel thankful when she gets to it.'"

TO TAKE ELABORATE CENSUS

Statistics of the Prevalence and Possible Spread of Tuberculosis Will Be Ascertained.

A tuberculosis census of thousands of churches in various parts of the country will be taken in September, under the direction of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. The census will be part of the preparation for the fifth annual Tuberculosis day, to be observed during the week of November 29. The ministers of several thousand churches will be asked to report on the number of deaths from tuberculosis in the last year, the number of living cases in their parishes on September 1, the number of deaths from all causes, and the number of members or communicants. These figures will be made the basis of an educational campaign, which will culminate in the Tuberculosis day movement, for which occasion sermons and lecture outlines and other forms of tuberculosis literature will be distributed free to ministers.

Last year nearly 75,000 churches, schools and other bodies took part in the Tuberculosis day observance. The movement had the indorsement of leading church officials of every denomination. More than 1,200 anti-tuberculosis societies, scattered all over the country, will work this year to make Tuberculosis day a success.

NO EXCUSE FOR EARLY RISING

The arrogance of the man who arises to the minor heroism of a cold bath has been complained of by less heroic folk who arise to a tepid or warm one. To be set apart by the ability to stand the shock of cold water has seemed to less vigorous folk an unsubstantial claim to immortality. It lacks moral sufficiency and is too much made of by the cold bathers.

Another arrogance is given consideration by the Rev. Walter Dwight, S. J., in America. It is the arrogance of early risers. Father Dwight denies them heroism and enters into doubt as to their intelligence. As a rule he finds them a "notably arrogant set," appearing to believe that they move on a "higher ethical plane."

Every normal human being, not given ordinarily to early rising, but being on occasion tempted or forced into it, has felt the strange spiritual afflatus, the moral patting on the back in consequence thereof. The feeling that a good deed has been done for a naughty world is inexplicable, but supreme.

GOODYEAR TIRES AT ANTE-BELLUM PRICES

"We advanced Goodyear prices, as others did theirs, when the rubber panic came. Almost in a day crude rubber rose in New York from 55 cents per pound to much over a dollar.

"The New York supply was too small to consider. We cabled our London people to buy up the pick of the rubber there. By acting quickly and paying cash they obtained 1,500,000 pounds of the finest rubber.

"That big supply of rubber is now nearly all on the way to the Goodyear factory in Akron. It constitutes the best of the London supply.

"We are using the same grade of rubber and the same amount of it as we always have used in these tires.

"We are running our factory with three shifts of men, twenty-four hours a day. So long as we remain in this fortunate position on rubber, we shall supply the users at before-war prices to the limit of our capacity."

Prudent.

"Sire, if you will show yourself along the line of battle your soldiers will be inspired to perform prodigies of valor."

"Perhaps so, my dear general, but the enemy's gunners might also be inspired to shoot as they have never shot before."

PUBLIC FAVOR

Public approval is absolutely essential to the successful operation of a public utility corporation.

The business can not be conducted without the public consent, called a "franchise." Franchises must from time to time be granted, extended, and renewed.

A franchise having been granted, the public must regard the enterprise with sufficient favor to invest its money, because there is no individual, or small group of individuals, sufficiently wealthy to finance the construction and equipment of a great railroad.

Once the franchise is granted and the construction and equipment is financed, a group of people—in many instances a very great many people—must regard the enterprise with sufficient favor to undertake its operation. These individuals constitute officials and employees.

Put into operation, the enterprise must be regarded with sufficient public favor to gain public patronage, for without patronage the enterprise is destined to failure.

Having gained public patronage, the enterprise must render a specific service for which the public is favorably disposed to pay a fair price.

The enterprise itself must be favorably disposed, not only towards the individuals who constitute its patrons, but towards the virgin, or undeveloped, territory through which its lines operate.

The L. & N. writes of these things because public favor, or approval, is the keynote of success. The L. & N. calls attention to the fact, to advise the people that the L. & N. places a proper, a profound, value on public approval. We are striving in every possible way to merit public favor.

Our service is second to no railroad in the country. Our equipment is all that could be demanded by a critical people. Our rates are fair and just. Our disposition is one of mutual interest with the people for co-operative development of the territory through which our lines operate.

We solicit your freight and passenger patronage, and through the service rendered hope to merit and maintain your favorable opinion.

DON'T HURT YOUR LIVER WITH CALOMEL

When your liver becomes torpid and sluggish, you can take calomel and whip it into action, but the calomel will leave your body weaker and sicker than ever. Calomel is a very powerful drug, a form of mercury, and need never be used because there is a perfect remedy to take the place of calomel, that has all of calomel's good medicinal effects with none of its dangerous and uncertain follow-ups. Its name is Dodson's Liver Tone.

Alred Drug Company sell Dodson's Liver Tone with the guarantee that if you don't find that it treats you much better than calomel, they will give you your money back with a smile. Dodson's Liver Tone is a true tonic for the liver, purely vegetable, and with such a pleasant taste that it is no trouble to get children to take it. It is absolutely impossible for it to do anyone any harm.

The Attraction.

A rather eccentric man, calling on a family blessed by an observant little son, wore kid gloves that had been cleaned. The little boy, seeming to be much attracted by the visitor, stayed close at his side. "You like to stand by Mr. Blank and hear his funny stories, don't you, Jimmie?" presently asked Jimmie's father. "I don't care about his stories," replied the honest youngster, "but his hands smell just like our automobile."

Purifies Blood With Telling Effect

Gives Conscious Evidence of Its Direct Action.

S. S. S., the famous blood purifier, almost talks as it sweeps its way through the circulation. Its action is so direct that very often in some forms of skin affliction the appearance of the eruptions changes over night, the itch and redness are gone and recovery begins immediately.

As a matter of fact, there is one ingredient in S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating each cellular part of the body to the healthy and judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. That is why it regenerates the blood supply; why it has such a tremendous influence in overcoming eczema, rash, pimples, and all skin afflictions.

And in regenerating the tissues S. S. S. has a rapid and positive antidotal effect upon all those irritating influences that cause rheumatism, sore throat, weak eyes, loss of weight, thin, pale cheeks, and that weariness of muscle and nerve that is generally experienced as spring fever. Get a bottle of S. S. S. at any drug store, and in a few days you will not only feel bright and energetic, but you will be the picture of new life. S. S. S. is prepared only in the laboratory of The Swift Specific Co., 534 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., who maintain a very efficient Medical Department, where all who have any blood disorder of a stubborn nature may write freely for advice and a special book of instruction. S. S. S. is sold everywhere by drug stores, department and general stores, but beware of all substitutes. Do not accept them.

MR. HOWISON ON FARMERS SITUATION

Randolph, Ala., Sept. 15, 1914

Mr Editor:—Suggestions seem to be in order as to what the southern farmers shall do in the year 1915 to save themselves from starvation.

My suggestions are as follows: The use of commercial fertilizer is the cause of the over production of cotton. This being true, the farmers should not use a pound on their 1915 crop. By not using any commercial fertilizer they will not only reduce the production, (which seems to be necessary) but they will save themselves millions of dollars that they spend for fertilizer.

Let them put their cotton seed back on their cotton and corn crop if they can not get a fair price for them, or can not exchange them at one ton of seed for one ton of 8 and 1-2 per cent meal.

Let each one sow at least one acre of their best land in wheat per mule, five acres of oats or barley per mule,and plant cow peas in every acre of corn that they plant.

They should buy as little as possible from the stores and have good gardens and eat vegetables and less meat; buy no CocaCola and less whiskey. If they will do this, take my word, at the end of 1915 they will be in better condition than they have been in for years.

This is not written to hurt the fertilizer people, but they can stand this better than farmers can stand the over production of cotton, and they will be saved the trouble of hustling for a substitute for potash.

Thorsby boy held On Theft Charge

Knoxville, Tenn., Sept. 15.

Fred C. Smith, of Thorsby, Ala., a boy of 17 years, was arrested by Knoxville detectives today for the theft of $1,000 from the Southern Express Company's office at Thorsby, Sept. 7, having been left temporarily in charge of the office.

He made his way to Atlanta, where he paid $550 of the money for a cheap automobile, in which he made his way by easy stages to Knoxville. He arrived here Monday morning and was just preparing to leave the city, having driven half way across the Tennessee River bridge leading out of the city when detectives, who had just located him, overhauled him in another car.

The officers say he confessed, and turned the car, a watch, diamond pin and $300 dollars over to the officers, who will take him to Birmingham tomorrow to deliver him to Thorsby officers.

Public Speakings

A BUSINESS LEAGUE IS ORGANIZED IN CHILTON

A Business Men's League has been organized in this county which includes as members nearly every banker, professional man and merchant in the county The intention is to afford relief from the stringency that will probably occur owing to the war. The movement meets with much favor.

The meeting of the citizens of Chilton county appointed a committe of three,—Judge L. H. Reynolds, Chairman, that immediately lodged a complaint to T. J.Samford, United States District Attorney, with the view to bring federal prosecution against cotton oil mills of Alabama for entering into a conspiracy to depress the market value of cotton seed.

Judge L. H. Reynolds is to select the two other men and will leave here immediately to press this matter.

County Health Officer's Report

To the Honerable Probate Judge and Commissioners of Chilton county.

Gentlemen:—

I beg to submit my report for the month of August. As required by law, I inspected the county jail and poor-house and found both to be in good condition.

All the doctors have reported births and deaths except the following: Dr. A. M. Wooley, Jemison, Ala., Dr. W. A. Mason, Riderville, Ala. and Dr. J. J. DuBose, Stanton, Ala.

All midwives have reported.

The vital statistics are as follows:

Births, white 55; colored 4; Total 59.

Deaths, white 14; colored 5; Total 19.

The following cases of infectious diseases were reported and have been carefully looked after: Tuberculosis, 1; diphtheria, 4; scarlet fever, 12; typhoid fever, 10; pellagra, 18.

The greatest number of Typhoid Fever cases seems to now be at Maplesville. I visited that place on the 6th, Inst., and found very unsanitary conditions which I think the people of Maplesville will correct in the near future.

I also beg leave to call the attention of your honorable body to the prevalence of malaria in the northeastern portion of our county, the conditions being so severe that some people in that section are deserting their homes. The county nurse and myself have both visited this section and found conditions very unsatisfactory.

Respectfully submited

CHILTON COUNTY MEET

The members of the Chilton County Business League, composed of farmers, merchants and business men of the county, met at the court house Friday for the purpose of discussing ways and means for aiding the farmers in the disposition of the cotton crop. A large and representative number of citizens from all over the county were present and showed a universal interest in the meeting.

Numbers of men present made speeches along various lines relating to the emergency. County demonstrator W. H. Conway, made a thorough explanation of the value of clover growing to the farmer, showing the great saving that would thereby be made in the cost of fertilizer.

Reports of committees who had made various investigations were made. Direct information was given the farmers regarding the hope of aid from the banks, which indicated that not only the cotton grower, but all other business men, are under the same handicap at the present time.

Possibly the most urging point to be considered by the meeting was the methods of extending aid to the farmer who is under obligations to merchants, and is depending on his cotton to carry him over. To meet this necessity a resolution was passed, stating that the merchant would allow the farmer 8 cents per pound for his cotton on debts, with the provision that the merchant hold the cotton four months in the hope of better price; but with the farmer's privilige to order the cotton sold within that time if he should so desire. If the cotton were to be sold for more than the stated eight cents, the farmer would get the benefit of the difference; if for less than eight cents, the farmer to be required to make up the difference.

It was expressed by some members of the meeting that their belief was that the oil mills of the state were combined against the farmer to hold the price of cotton seed down and keep the price of cotton seed products up. A committee was appointed to carry these charges before the U. S. district court for investigation.

Dr. Higgins Suddenly Disappears

The sudden disappearance of Doctor J. V. Higgins, the well known jeweler and doctor of optics; from Clanton last Friday is wrapped in a mantle of the deepest mystery. For several years Dr. Higgins has been a prominent and progressive business man here, and the way he has so suddenly closed his doors and disappeared, leaving his family and business, is very unique. The various opinions that one may hear expressed regarding the matter compose many different theories of the affair; but they all come together in agreement upon one thing—that he has gone from Clanton.

Along with the disappearance of Dr. Higgins is also the fact that a young lady living near here who has been for some time enployed in his store, has also taken her leave of these parts, and has not been seen in several days. Whether the two incidents are in any way connected, no one here is able to affirm.

Nothing definite is known about the condition in which Dr. Higgins' business is left, but it is the general talk that he leaves his affairs in good shape.

Cotton at Ten Cents a Pound

Thorsby Institute to help set the price.

The trustees of Thorsby Institute believe that cotton is worth at least ten cents per pound. They believe that every one who can should "buy a bale" at ten cents. The school is not in a position to invest any money in cotton at present, but it will do what may be even bettet for the farmer.

Thorsby Institute will accept properly certified cotton warehouse receipts for cotton upon a basis of not less than ten cents per pound, middling cotton, in advance payment of board and tuition for the present school year, which began Sept. 8, 1914.

This cotton will be held until January 15, 1915, and if at that time it can be sold for more than ten cents per pound, the original owner will receive the increase, less the cost of holding. If the cotton cannot be sold for as much as ten cents per pound at that time the school will bear the loss.

We hope that this plan will make it possible for a number of young men and women who want to enter school, but have not seen how they counld under present conditions, to enter at once. Any one interested in the proposition is invited to correspond with the Principal, S. H. Herbert, Thorsby, Ala.

Politics As Seen By J. M. Mims.

Editor Union-Banner: Please allow me space in your paper to say a few words on the political issue. As I see things today it seems to me that every man in this county and state should get to work and use every effort in his power to elect the Progressive ticket this year. I do not see how the democrats can defend their administration in this county, in the state or in the nation. I wish to say that I was at Collins Chapel Monday night at the speaking and there was one of the largest and most enthusiastic crowds that I have ever seen at a political meeting in my life. It seems that the people are wide awake to their interest and I believe that they will show this very plain on election day.

It is right amusing to see how the Clanton Press dodges the real issue and tries to convert the people's minds to personal things instead of the issue. I cannot understand why they do not discuss the issues that are before the people, which the people are so interested in, instead of making such statements as appeared in that paper about the county not owing anything and again about the speaking at Cane Creek. I would like to ask the people, who is responsible for such statements, and who is backing up that paper and enabling it to mis represent the facts and work against the interest of the farmers of this county. Who is the President of the Clanton Press Company, and what business is he engaged in in Clanton? Who is the Chairman of the Democratic committee of this county, and what business is he engaged in? I believe that the people should think of these things and trade with the men that are using their efforts to aid the farmers, and not trade with and help those people in Clanton who are doing everything in their power against the farmers.

How many of the merchants in Clanton are there who are backing up the Clanton Press and enabling them to do as they are doing? How many of them are stockholders in the Press Company? I will ask the Clanton Press to kindly print a list of their officers and stockholders in order that the people of this county may know just who they are who are fighting them and their interest.

In conclusion I wish to say that I believe the people of the county are awake and will do their full duty on November 3rd and will elect the Progressive ticket by the largest majority that any ticket has been elected in this county for the last twenty years.

I wish to urge upon the voters in the county the importance of doing their duty, work for the ticket, and on election day go to the poll and vote. By doing this we will again return the government of the county back into the hands of the people; and then a few men in Clanton cannot dictate the policies of the county.

J. M. Mims.

ALABAMA COTTON CONFERENCE TO BE HELD

Realizing that immediate action must be taken to prevent a serious loss to the cotton growers, and other interests of the Southern states, the Chamber of Commerce of Birmingham has issued a call for a mass meeting to be held on Friday, Sept. 18th, 1914, at 12 o'clock, in the Chamber of Commerce Auditorium.

It is important that each cotton growing county in Alabama be represented at the conference. By consultation and concerned action, the situation may be allevated, and aid given to the effort to establish a price on cotton commensurate with the cost of production. It is also hoped that clubs for the purpose of buying cotton will be organized in every city, town and hamlet in the state.

It is requested that those who will attend by various organizations shall send their names to William Blanks Everett, assistant Secretary, Chamber of Commerce of Birmingham. We shall also be pleased to receive copies of newspapers containing articles on this issue.

Chilton County Farmers Union

The Chilton County division of the Farmer's Union will be held with the Evergreen Local No. 417, three miles east of Verbena, Oct 1-2, 1914, (Thursday and Friday.)

Those coming by rail to Verbena will write S. S. Scott, R. 1. for conveyances.

Business of much importance will come before the convention and all Locals are requested to send a large delegation also as many visitors as is possible.

Forenoon of first day will be public.

We want the co-operation of every one in trying to better agricultural conditions in our county.

Neighbors - Moon

A beautiful wedding was solemnized at the residence of Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Moon on Tuesday evening,Sept. 8,at six o'clock when their daughter, Nell plighted her troth to Mr. Thomas Herbert Neighbors in the presence of a large crowd of friends and relatives.

In the entrance hall Mrs. Samuel Henry Pope served punch from a bowl buried in a mass of pink roses and pond lilies.

Ivy, ferns and pink and white carnations made a lovely setting for the ceremony. Rev. J. Henry Bush pronounced the words that made them man and wife.

The scheme in the dining room where the wedding gifts were displayed was charmingly worked out in southern smilax and brown eyed susans.

The bride and groom, unattended, entered the room to the strains of Mendelssohns wedding march played by Miss Mattie Neighbors, sister of the groom. Humoreske was softly played during the ceremony.

After the wedding trip which will be to points on the Atlantic coast unknown to their friends, Mr. and Mrs Neighbors will be at home at Clanton, Ala. Goodwater Enterprise.

NEW RULES FOR TRUSTIES

Convicts Must Serve Certain Proportion of Sentence Before Being Given Any Privileges.

NEWS LETTER FROM CAPITAL

Happenings in and About Alabama's State House Interestingly Told.

—Montgomery.

New rules for trusties at the State prison and convict camps have been adopted by the State Convict Board, and have been published in cardboard form. These cardboards will be posted at the various camps and prisons. The rules were adopted at a meeting of the board which was attended by Hartwell Douglass, President, Dr. J. M. Mastin and Len F. Greer, associate members, and Governor O'Neal.

Hereafter no convicts will be made "trusties" until they have served a certain length of time in proportion to the length of the sentence. Convicts sentenced to terms longer than ten years must serve two years before being allowed the privileges accorded trusties. Convicts under sentence from five to ten years must serve one year, and convicts under sentence from one to five years must serve six months before they are permitted to me made trusties.

Wardens who desire to have any convicts made trusties must forward to the State convict board certain information concerning the convict's offense, his conduct, character and a short biographical sketch. Uniforms must be worn by trusties, the description of which appear in the new rules.

Convicts who are leased out and who become trusties will not be permitted to go at large during their sentence.

May Build Flour Mill.

Farmers of Central Alabama are evincing much interest in the proposition made by Richard Hobbie, of Montgomery, to build a flour mill in this city with a capacity of 50,000 bushels of wheat, according to Captain Reuben F. Kolb, commissioner of agriculture. In Mr. Hobbie's proposition he agrees to install the flour mill provided the farmers in this section of the State will agree to raise 50,000 bushels of wheat to supply the mill. The proposition was published during the week by Captain Kolb, and he has already received several replies from prominent farmers in which they stated that the 50,000 bushels can be raised in Central Alabama.

Captain Kolb seeks to interest five hundred farmers located within a radius of 50 miles of Montgomery in the proposition, these farmers to agree to plant ten acres of land in wheat. This plan would enable the farmers to plant 5,000 acres in wheat which would yield the 50,000 bushels necessary to supply the mill.

"Alabama's land is adaptable to growing wheat," said Captain Kolb. "A farmer near Tallassee in Elmore county last fall planted three acres in wheat and threshed out 155 bushels. At the present price of wheat this would net an income from the three acres of $162.

Other instances of successful wheat growing in Alabama were cited by Captain Kolb. He has received letters from many farmers in which they state that Alabama's soil will grow fine wheat. In Montgomery county W. H. Lawson, M. B. Houghton, T. L. Head and C. E. Crenshaw have agreed to plant from ten to fifty acres in wheat.

The wheat that must be planted in this section must be of the rust proof variety of soft winter and must be planted late in October or early in November according to Captain Kolb. Any persons interested in the matter can obtain information concerning the growing of wheat from the department of agriculture.

Mr. Hobbie has assured Captain Kolb that the proposed mill can easily grind 100,000 bushels of wheat. This would approximate 25,000 barrels of flour, and would mean that $125,000, the value of this flour would be kept at home instead of being sent to the Middle West never to return, according to Captain Kolb.

Protest Against Raise.

Protests against the raise in coal rates from Birmingham to the Anniston-Gadsden-Talladega districts, as requested by the Louisville and Nashville, Southern and other railroads, were made before the State railroad commission by delegations from several cities of North Alabama at the regular monthly meeting of the commission. Delegations came from Birmingham, Gadsden, Anniston, Talladega and Sylacauga. A large number of cases were on the docket for consideration.

Covington Cases Up.

The State tax commission began the hearing of about 125 tax assessment cases in Covington county on November 18. Covington is the third county in which the tax commission will hear cases by reason of the refusal of the county board of revenue to docket them. Marengo county was the first to refuse to docket a large number of cases and Montgomery county followed the same plan. In Montgomery county the board of revenue was asked to docket something like 1000 cases.

State Cotton Mill Resumes Work.

The State cotton mill at Speigners, which is operated by convict labor, has resumed operations, after a shut down of three weeks. The mill was closed in order that the usual annual repairs might be made.

It was announced at the office of Hartwell Douglass, president of the State convict department, that an ample supply of cotton is on hand at the mill.

Replies Are Discouraging.

Apparently the conference of Southern governors, as suggested for Montgomery on Septmeber 24-25, by Governor O'Neal, will not be held. Messages from five of the twelve executives show it unlikely that they will be able to attend at that time for various reasons.

Governor Slaton of Georgia, wires that he has written a letter to the Southern governors suggesting a conference to be held in Atlanta and is awaiting the answers to these communications before he can answer Governor O'Neal.

Governor Brewer, of Mississippi, suggests that the conference be held in New Orleans during the month and Governor Colquitt asks that it take place in Texas, where the Legislature is now in session.

Percentage of Potash Reduced.

Commercial fertilizer men from all parts of Alabama held a conference at the capitol discussing the shortage of potash as a result of the war in Europe, and decided on the manufacture of a complete fertilizer by increasing the per centage of phosphoric acid and nitrogen. The conference was called by Capt. Reuben F. Kolb, commissioner of agriculture, and was attended by many fertilizer manufacturers and dealers.

Under the fertilizer laws of the State it has been necessary in the past for the manufacturers to put 2 per cent of potash in commercial fertilizer, but in view of the shortage caused by the war, it is claimed that it will be practically impossible for the manufacturers to continue with this per centage of potash; hence a substitute was sought by which a complete fertilizer could be made with a smaller quantity of the imported ingredient.

It was decided that during the progress of the war the manufacturers should use one-half of 1 per cent of potash instead of 2 per cent and a sufficient quantity of phosphoric acid and nitrogen to make a fertilizer containing 14 per cent plant food. Two per cent ammonia is also necessary to make a complete fertilizer.

Delegates Named By Capt. Kolb.

Twenty-two delegates to represent Alabama at the Southeastern Food Corps Conference to be held in Atlanta October 5 and 6, were named by Capt. R. F. Kolb, commissioner of agriculture. There will be four delegates from the state-at-large and two from each congressional district.

The following were selected:

From the State-at-Large: R. F. Kolb, Montgomery; J. A. Wade, Alexander City; J. T. Watt, Auburn; R. R. Poole, Uniontown.

First—Sam R. Bethea, Faunsdale; E. P. Chapman, Grove Hill.

Second—C. P. Deming, Evergreen; C. G. Abercrombie, Montgomery.

Sixth—John A. Rodgers, Gainesville; Judge W. W. Brandon, Tuscaloosa.

Seventh—Frank V. Tilford, Cullman; Judge L. L. Herzberg, Gadsden.

Ninth—W. W. Lavender, Centerville; M. C. Allgood, Chapultapec.

Plans for Good Roads Meet.

Plans looking to the entertainment of at least 3000 delegates to the annual session of the Alabama Good Roads Association, which meets in Montgomery on October 21-23, are being made by the Montgomery Chamber of Commerce, which has joined the association in an effort to make the coming meeting the greatest convention of its kind ever held in Alabama.

Tax Settlements Made.

Final tax settlements with the state auditor have been made by every county in Alabama, according to an announcement made by State Auditor Brooks Smith. The latest settlement with the auditor was made by Tax Collector J. F. Moseley of Madison county, whose final report was delayed pending the settlement of several legal complications. The law requires that final reports shall be made by July 1, but several tax colectors were given additional time because of unavoidable delays.

Cowart to Mobile September 20.

Lee Cowart, commissioner of immigration, and head of the Alabama Panama-Pacific Exposition commission will go to Mobile on September 20 to appeal to the citizens of that city to aid in the movement to erect an Alabama building at the San Francisco exposition. Mr. Cowart is now in San Francisco, but will return to Alabama in time to go to Mobile for the conference. Mobile has pledged her support to the movement, but no organized effort has been started.

GOVERNMENT LOAN ON COTTON ASKED

COMMITTEE BEING ORGANIZED TO FORWARD MOVEMENT. GROWERS INDORSE PLANS.

WOULD DISPOSE OF SURPLUS

Government Should Take Over Surplus Cotton Crop, Says Henry, and Hold It Until War Is Over and Markets Open.

Washington—A committee of Southern congressmen and representatives of farmers' unions in the South is being organized by Representative Henry of Texas to work for an issue of treasury notes on cotton that must be held over until next season on account of the demoralization of foreign markets. Mr. Henry announced that the personnel of the committee, to be made up of twenty-one members, probably would be completed next week. He said he was acting at the request of many of his colleagues from the South and that the movement had been indorsed by several organizations of cotton growers.

"The committee," said Mr. Henry, will present the situation to the secretary of the treasury, the Federal Reserve Board and President Wilson, and will have frequent meetings. It will ask the government to take over the surplus cotton, to be held by it through these loans until war conditions in Europe pass and the market reopens. Nothing less will protect many of the people of the South from absolute ruin."

Mr. Henry estimated that the surplus crop would amount to six or seven million bales and said an issue of three or four hundred millions in notes would be requested.

DIVERTED TO NEW ORLEANS

Mississippi River May Be Largely Used by Chicago Concern—Result of European War.

Chicago.—Mississippi Valley commerce with Latin-American nations, which heretofore has gone through the port of New York, is to be diverted to the more direct route through the port of New Orleans, if the plans of some of Chicago's biggest capitalists and financiers are carried out.

A huge trading corporation, with not less than $5,000,000 capitalization, doing an export and import business and owning its own line of ocean freight steamships, is in process of organization in Chicago, and it is expected that within another week final plans and details will be completed.

The corporation is the direct commercial outgrowth of conditions which have developed out of the European war, together with the opening of the Panama canal.

SOUTHERN OFFICIAL DEAD

L. S. Brown Passes Away—Had Been General Agent of Southern Railroad Since 1886.

Washington.—L. S. Brown, general agent of the Southern railway in Washington and well known throughout the south, died here. He was born at Covington, Ga., in 1849 and began railroad work as an express messenger. He became general agent of the Southern here in 1886. A widow survives.

Mr. Brown's first work as express messenger was at Montgomery, Ala., in 1869. In 1871 he became general agent of the Western of Alabama at Opelika, Ala. He afterward was connected with the Baltimore & Ohio, Virginia Midland and Georgia Pacific, being general freight agent and passenger agent of the Southern here in 1886.

PLAN ELEVEN-CENT COTTON

One-Fourth of the Crop to Be Bought by the States—Would Levy a Purchase Tax.

Washington.—If a program partly outlined and tentatively agreed to by a number of southern senators and representatives obtains, cotton will sell for 11 cents a pound. Senator Simmons of North Carolina has taken the initiative in the movement, to which a number of southern senators have subscribed. His proposition provides for the purchase of one-fourth of the cotton raised this year by the state. A purchase tax is to be levied on all cotton sold in the open market. A production tax on the cotton produced in 1915 is a part of the scheme.

Three Are Murdered.

Grand Bend, Kas.—Lee Morgan, a farmer, 50 years old; Mrs. Mayme McQuillan, his housekeeper, aged 40, and Clarence McGuin, a farm hand, were found murdered on Morgan's farm near Heiser, Barton county.

James P. Considine Dead.

New York.—James P. Considine, 52, one of three brothers who figured prominently in the sporting life of New York, was found dead of heart trouble in his room at the Hotel Normandie.

CONFER WITH THE BOARD

Federal Reserve Board in Session—Improved Conditions in Country Reported—No Cause for Concern.

Washington.—Although the problem of readjusting the foreign exchange market has not been solved, reports to the federal reserve board from prominent New York banks indicate there is little cause for concern.

J. P. Morgan, Jacob H. Schiff and Benjamin Strong, Jr., New York bankers, conferred with the board for two hours. Their visits had to do with the part New York City banks are expected to play in relieving the foreign exchange market. It was said they also stated conditions throughout the country showed marked improvement.

The bankers told the board that New York banks stand prepared to underwrite the $80,000,000 obligations of New York in the hands of European creditors which come due within the next few months. In return members of the board thought New York banks should not be requested to contribute to the proposed general fund of $150,000,000 to take care of the total of American obligations to Europe. New York's $80,000,000 was included in the $150,000,000 suggested by the recent bankers' conference here as the sum necessary to care for all such obligations.

The board has not acted formally upon the plan for creating the $150,000,000 pool, but has passed from consideration of the principle involved to details. One point which has caused discussion is the suggestion that the board indicate the amounts of gold to be contributed by each bank. The board so far has felt reluctant to make a suggestion of this sort, which might look like an order, coming from such a source.

No report has reached the board so far from all the clearing-house associations of the country showing the gold possessed by all banks. Such reports will precede any action to carry out the plan.

Comptroller of the Currency Williams reported that $256,170,000 of the Aldrich-Vreeland currency has been taken out by banks up to the close of business Sept. 8, 1914. Of this the eastern states, including New York, took $154,253,000; $18,649,000 went to New England; $25,163,000 to the southern states; $50,465,000 to the middle states, including Chicago; $1,652,000 to the western states and $5,688,000 to the Pacific states.

ROGER SULLIVAN IS VICTOR

Wins Over L. B. Stringer in Primary in Illinois—Uncle Joe Cannon Ahead.

Chicago.—Roger C. Sullivan, former national democratic committeeman; Senator Lawrence Y. Sherman, republican, and Raymond Robins, progressive, will oppose each other for election as United States senator from Illinois at the November election. Returns from the primary indicate the nomination of Sullivan and Sherman by large majorities. Robins was unopposed.

Votes on the congressional nominations came in slowly, but it is certain three democratic congressmen had been renominated, and that former Speaker Joseph G. Cannon had received the republican nomination in the Eighteenth district.

For the republican senatorial nomination, Senator Lawrence Y. Sherman apparently has a safe lead over William E. Mason, former United States senator.

Interest in Sullivan's candidacy was increased a few days ago through the receipt by Cook county democrats of a letter from Secretary Bryan urging his defeat.

MRS. CARMAN IS INDICTED

Murder in First Degree Is Charged Against Her in Freeport Murder Case.

Mineola, N. Y.—A superseding indictment charging murder in the first degree was found against Mrs. Florence Carman by the grand jury investigating the murder of Mrs. Louise Bailey, shot down by an unseen assailant in the office of Dr. Edward Carman at Freeport on June 30 last.

Mrs. Carman had previously been indicted for manslaughter.

Mrs. Carman, who had been at liberty under bail, was brought to Mineola from Freeport by her counsel in anticipation that such an indictment would be returned. She was arraigned immediately and committed to the Nassau county jail without bail for trial, which probably will be in December.

Ameliorate War Horrors.

New York.—A plea for amelioration of the horrors of war was issued from this city. It was made by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

Pope Sees Diplomats.

Paris.—A dispatch to the Havas agency from Rome says that the pope received the members of the diplomatic corps here.

Ready to Ballot.

New York.—The international committee of the New York cotton exchange, which is meeting here daily to facilitate the liquidation of the New York-Liverpool straddle interests, announced that they are ready to ballot for orders.

Washington.—President Wilson has joined the "buy-a-bale-of-cotton" club by ordering from the head of the organization in Georgia $50 worth of cotton.

In a report on the corn crop in Alabama, the bureau of crop estimates gave the condition on September 1 as 76 as against 69 on August 1, and a 10-year average of 86. The forecast, based on conditions in September, was 42,600,000 bushels as against a 5-year average of 49.107. The price per bushel, September 1, is given as $1.01, or 5 cents more than in September, 1913, and an average price of 93 cents for five years.

Necessity of planting an abundant oat and winter clover crop is pointed out in the latest weekly bulletin of the State department of agriculture and industries. Owing to the shortage of last year's corn crop, together with the depressing condition of the cotton market, the planting of a large acreage in grasses and grains is considered by the department to be of prime importance. Alabama is particularly adapted to the growing of oats and crimson clover, according to the department's bulletin, and the coming year will show great advance in these farm products in all parts of the State. The hope and promise of our farming future in Alabama depends upon this diversification of crops that our experience with cotton this year has made an inevitable necessity," concludes the report.

Announcement was made by E. B. Wallace of Cullman that he has purchased property in Jackson county on which there is a cave containing nearly 2,000,000 tons of saltpetre.

All Alabama is interested in Mobile's efforts to keep bubonic plague infection from the State's only seaport. Work is well under way toward ratproofing the harbor front and ultimately all buildings in the city that might foster rodents. Mayor P. J. PIMPLES ON SCALP ITCHED

Lewisburg, Tenn.—"Four years past I had a very bad scalp trouble that commenced with itching. Later my hair got thin and my scalp sore and I could not sleep for scratching at times. I did not get the sleep that was restful and refreshing. I was losing my hair fast. I had pimples on my scalp which itched and burned so that I scratched and irritated them. I had dandruff which scaled off and showed on my clothes.

"I tried almost every noted scalp remedy and hair tonic without success. Then I commenced using Cuticura Soap and Ointment and was relieved of the itching and sore scalp after three shampoos and applications of the Ointment. After using both the Cuticura Soap and Ointment for three months I was completely cured." (Signed) F. B. Lewis, Jan. 1, 1914.

In Spain titles of nobility are taxed in the same way as houses or land. Moreover, each separate title is taxed, and for this reason certain members of ancient families in which a number of titles have accumulated drop some in order to save money. Owing to the system long prevalent in Spain by which women of noble birth transmit their title not only to their children but to their husbands—so that a plebeian marrying a duchess becomes a duke, Spanish titles rarely become extinct unless the holders deliberately discard them.

Delays.

"Do you prefer an automobile to a horse?"

"Yes," replied Mr. Chuggins.

"Because it goes faster?"

"Not exactly that. But somehow I enjoy hanging around a repair shop more than loafing and looking on in a livery stable."

Encouraging.

"Did you catch any fish?" asked the woman who is always encouraging.

"Not one," replied her husband. "We got a couple of nibbles and then there was nothing doing all day."

"Well, even if you didn't catch any I'll bet you gave them an awful scare."

The man who marries a pretty girl is apt to get the short end of it if he takes her at her face value.

LEARNING THINGS
We Are All in the Apprentice Class.

When a simple change of diet brings back health and happiness the story is briefly told. A lady of Springfield, Ill., says:

"After being afflicted for years with nervousness and heart trouble, I received a shock four years ago that left me in such a condition that my life was despaired of.

"I got no relief from doctors nor from the numberless heart and nerve remedies I tried, because I didn't know that coffee was daily putting me back more than the doctors could put me ahead.

"Finally at the suggestion of a friend I left off coffee and began the use of Postum, and against my expectations I gradually improved in health until for the past 6 or 8 months I have been entirely free from nervousness and those terrible sinking, weakening spells of heart trouble.

"My troubles all came from the use of coffee which I had drunk from childhood and yet they disappeared when I quit coffee and took up the use of Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Many people marvel at the effects of leaving off coffee and drinking Postum, but there is nothing marvelous about it—only common sense.

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

BRITISH CAPTURE GUNS, PRISONERS—LORRAINE-VOSGES SITUATION UNCHANGED.

HEAVY STORM INTERFERES

German Right and Center Retiring. Germans Handicapped in Their Retreat by Heavy Storm—Allies Claim Success.

Bordeaux.—An official communication from the war office says:

"After five days' fighting the battle of the Marne has turned in favor of the French, and the German right and center are now retreating.

"On the left wing our success becomes more marked. Our progress continues north of the Marne and in the direction of Saissons and Compiegne.

"The Germans have abandoned a considerable quantity of munitions with wounded and prisoners. We have taken another flag.

"The British army has captured 11 guns with other important war material, and has made from 1,200 to 1,500 prisoners.

"At the center the enemy has given way along the whole front between Sezanne and Revigny. He has not yet recoiled in the Argonne.

"In spite of the heroic efforts of our troops throughout these five days of battle, they still have energy to follow the enemy.

Furious onslaughts, sometimes by the French and again by the Germans, occurred about the center of an extensive line in the vicinity of Vitry-le-Francois.

The great German armies commanded by Gen. von Kluck, the Crown Prince Frederick William and the duke of Wurtemberg effected a junction and repeatedly hurled themselves against the French positions with the greatest vigor, but they were unable to achieve their seeming object of breaking the allies' center and thus dividing the Anglo-French armies.

A rain storm caused great difficulties in the marshy districts, but did not stop the operations. The fusillades of the troops and the artillery duel proceeded all day. It is believed the retiring Germans suffered more than the allies from the storm, as their withdrawing columns were incumbered with baggage and ammunition wagons.

AUSTRIANS LEAVE CRACOW

Petrograd.—Cracow, the strongest Austrian post in Galicia and one which obstructed the advance of the huge Russian center army upon Breslau, its next objective, is reported as being evacuated by the Austrians before a furious attack of Russian cavalry and infantry under cover of the destructive fire of the heavy siege guns. The forts to the east and north of the city were shelled incessantly until finally the Austrian guns were silenced.

Cracow is the capital of Austrian Poland, and lies on a broad plain on the left bank of the Vistula. It is only 30 miles from the German border, and between it and Breslau little fortified resistance is offered.

With Przemyl and Jaroslav invested by the Russians and the way for the advance toward Breslau practically cleared, the investment of the latter city, which is only 190 miles from Berlin, is imminent.

GERMANS ADMIT REVERSES

First Official Admission of Success of Allies Is Made by Berlin War Office.

London.—"The first official admission on the German side of success by the allies," says a Central News dispatch from Amsterdam, "appears in official communications issued in Berlin. Gen. von Stein announces that the German army, which had advanced across the Marne to the east of Paris, was heavily attacked by the enemy between Paris, Meaux and Montmirail.

"The fighting lasted two days. The German army had checked the enemy, but stronger hostile columns came to the assistance of the allies and the enemy won the battle, compelling the German troops to retire. Fifty guns were captured by the allies and some thousands of men made prisoners.

"To the west of Verdun fighting continues. The situation in Lorraine and the Vosges is unchanged. The battle in Eastern Prussia has been resumed."

Krupp Experts Taken.

Amsterdam.—A large German aeroplane has been shot at and brought down by Belgians at Stypen, East Flanders. Three officers who were in the machine proved to be well known experts from Krupps.

ABROGATE ANCIENT TREATY

Action Removes Privileges Enjoyed by Powers—United States Notified—Powers Peeved.

Washington.—Turkey formally notified the United States and other nations that she had abrogated the series of conventions, treaties and privileges originating as early as the eleventh century, whereby foreigners in the Ottoman empire have been exempt from local jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases. Foreign subjects no longer will enjoy what is known as extra-territorial rights, through which they have been tried by their own judges, diplomatic representatives or consuls.

This practice, abolished by Japan several years ago, through new treaties, Turkey has removed by a stroke of the pen. Her purpose, it is declared, is to assert her independence and free herself from the domination of the great powers.

Upon the rights revoked has rested the legal status of American missionaries in Turkey, permitting them to maintain churches, hospitals and schools in religious freedom.

RUSSIANS AT RAWA-RUSKA

Petrograd.—A final appalling defeat was administered the Austrian army by the Russians at Rawa-Ruska, 32 miles northwest of Lemberg, with the result that the last obstacles to the Russian advance toward Berlin, now that Przysmsl and Jaroslow are completely invested, has been removed.

What is probably most important is the demoralization of the Austrian army, which is now in a desperate situation. Disheartened by constant defeats and suffering from defection of the various nationalities of which it is composed, mutiny now has added its destructive influence and the desertions are many. Pestilence is spreading through the ranks and numerous deaths from diseases are reported.

In the big battles at Lemberg, Halicz and Rawa-Ruska the Austrians have lost countless thousands in dead and wounded and more than 30,000 prisoners, besides suffering the loss of a major portion of their artillery and equipment.

Russia is now concentrating 3,500,000 men for the invasion of German Poland and East Prussia, and the czar has given orders that Berlin must be taken at all costs.

ALLIES ADVANCE 37 MILES

Germans Are Falling Back—British Loss Is Officially Placed at 19,000. Armies Reinforced.

London.—While the latest official statements give few details of the great battle being waged in France, in which 3,000,000 men are engaged, it seems apparent that the German forces are still falling back, from the announcement that the allies have gained about 37 miles of territory in their advance.

Both British and French troops have crossed the River Marne, the British capturing men and guns. The action of greatest severity is being fought between Mailly and Vitry-le-Francois.

Additional British casualties have been made public, covering the period up to Sept. 7, and bringing the total for the campaign close to 19,000 killed, wounded and missing.

Many German Prisoners.

Washington.—The British embassy received the following dispatch from its foreign office: "The Anglo-French forces have taken many prisoners, including a battalion of infantry, a mitrailleuse company and many caissons."

Bordeaux.—The health department of the war office has reported that this war is not resulting in a very heavy loss of life. It asserts that of every hundred men placed hors de combat only two are killed.

GERMAN RETREAT IS CALLED A ROUT

FRENCH STATEMENT DESCRIBING RETIREMENT OF GERMANS. LUNEVILLE RETAKEN.

ALLIES CROSS THE AISNE

German Prisoners Give Impression of Utter Destitution, Overdriving and Discouragement — Germans Have Abandoned Nancy.

Paris.—An official communication tonight says:

"First—On our left wing the general retreat of the Germans continues before the French and British forces, who have reached the lower course of the Aisne.

"Second—Likewise in the center the German armies are retreating. We have crossed the Marne between Epernay and Vitry-le-Francois. On our right wing the enemy in like manner has begun a retiring movement, abandoning the region around Nancy. We have reoccupied Luneville.

"The German retreat is so rapid that it may be described as a flight. Everywhere they have left not only guns and ammunition, but even their personal belongings, showing their precipitious haste.

"The prisoners give a marked impression of utter destitution, overdriving and discouragement. The horses particularly are exhausted.

"'At the moment when a battle is being engaged, on the result of which the welfare of the country depends, it is important to remind all that it is no longer time to look behind. All efforts must be employed to attack and drive back the enemy.

"'A force which cannot advance any farther shall, no matter at what cost, retain the conquered ground and be killed on the spot rather than fall back. Under the present circumstances no weakness can be tolerated.'"

BELGIANS TAKE OFFENSIVE

Legation at London Says Malines and Aerschot Retaken—Force Germans to Retire.

London.—An Ostend dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company says:

"The Belgian troops have just gained an important success at Oortenberg between Louvain and Brussels, cutting up a German corps and taking a number of prisoners. The line toward Liege has been occupied by the Belgians."

The Belgian legation announced that the Belgian army again had taken the offensive, which was being pushed satisfactorily. An extended sortie was made and the Germans everywhere were forced to retire. Malines and Aerschot were retaken.

A dispatch to the Central News from Amsterdam says:

"According to a Ghent dispatch the Belgian government, having opposed the delivery of army necessaries requisitioned by the Germans, a Belgian force has again occupied Ghent. The necessaries which had already been prepared were not delivered."

"Fierce fighting continued southeast of Antwerp. To the left our division was obliged to give way before the enemy's progress.

TRAP AUSTRO-GERMAN ARMY

London.—Mme. O. P. Sturk telegraphs from Petrograd to the Daily News:

"By a daring stroke the Russians have cut off the Austro-German army, which has been advancing eastward to aid the battered Austrian forces between Rawa Ruska and Godorek. This Austro-German army evacuated a strongly fortified position near Krasnik and were retreating along the Vistula when cut off. They are now in a trap between the Vistula and San. Between it and the Austro-German eastern force near Godorek is a strong Russian army of infantry, well supported by artillery and cavalry."

A Central News dispatch from Rome says:

"A telegram received here by the Messagero from Petrograd states that the second battle in Galicia resulted even more satisfactorily to the Russians than the first. The losses of the Austrians are estimated at 130,000 of whom 90,000 are prisoners."

Sienkiewicz A Prisoner.

London.—A dispatch to the Evening News from Petrograd says that Henryk Sienkiewicz, the Polish writer and author of "Quo Vadis," who recently appealed to the Poles to support Russia in the war, has been taken prisoner by the Austrians and sent to Cracow.

London.—A dispatch to the Reuter Telegram company from Paris says the French have occupied Soissons, Department of Aisne.

GENERAL KUROKI

General Kuroki is one of the leading men in the Japanese army and is a hero of the war with Russia.

MAUBEUGE FORTS TAKEN

Germans Claim to Have Taken 40,000 Prisoners and 400 Guns at French Fortress.

London.—Latest official reports from the French government indicate that the offensive tactics undertaken in the last day or two by the allied armies have forced the Germans back at various points in the battle line, which extends from a few miles east of Paris to Verdun, a distance of about 200 miles.

Bordeaux reports officially that the British army has crossed the River Marne, and that the Germans have fallen back 25 miles. Efforts of the Germans to break the French lines on the Ourcq river are officially reported to have failed.

Seemingly the Germans are short of ammunition at the front and are having difficulties in provisioning, and the French war department officially announces that "on the whole the Germans appear to be beginning a movement of retreat."

The battlefield in France is that over which Napoleon fought in 1814, with entrenched camps on both wings and center. Paris covers the left wing, Chalons the center and Verdun the right, while mobile columns of troops are ready to join in the fighting wherever the line is threatened.

Vitry-le-Francois and Montmirail seem to be the points of the chief engagements, and there the carnage has been the heaviest. The allies aim at preventing the German turning movement, with a mass of troops composed of many army corps.

King George has addressed a message to the British dominions and colonies, in which he protests that war was not of Great Britain's seeking, and expresses his warmest thanks for the assistance rendered by them.

Maubeuge, a French fortress, has fallen into the hands of the Germans, and according to the report the Germans took 40,000 prisoners and 400 guns.

FIERCE ATTACK IN CENTER

London Official Statement Says One German Army Has Been Driven Back.

London.—The British official press bureau issued the following announcement:

"The general position continues satisfactory. The allies are gaining ground on their left all along the line of the Ourcq and Petit Morin rivers. The British have driven the enemy back ten miles.

"Fighting has been in progress farther to the right along the line, which includes Montmirail and Sompuis, neither side gaining advantage.

"Farther to the right again, from Vitry-le-Francois to Sermaize-Les-Bains, the enemy has been pressed back in the direction of Rheims.

"At Luneville an attempt by the Germans to advance has been repulsed.

"The fifth French army has advanced with equal success, and reports many captured.

Protest to Porte.

Constantinople.—The ambassadors of some of the great powers have presented an identical note to the Turkish grand vizier protesting against the decree issued by the porte recently, under the terms of which the treatly rights accorded foreigners in the past are abolished.

London.—A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company from Athens declares the Turks, in order to be prepared to oppose a possible landing of Russians, have concentrated about 80,000 men at Tchatalja, 35 miles west of Constantinople.

New York.—The German steamship Magdeburg, a witness of the naval engagement between the British cruiser Highflyer and the German converted cruiser Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, off the African west coast, Aug. 26, steamed into this port.

THIRST AND LEAD FAIL TO STOP DASH OF RUSSIANS ON LEMBERG

Petrograd.—The Rech prints the following details of the fall of Lemberg:

"The commencement of the fighting which resulted in the capture of Lemberg began August 29, when the Russians drove the enemy from Zisczow (45 miles east of Lemberg) and moved on to Golaya Gorka—a name which means 'the naked hill.'

"We spent the night on Naked hill, and the actual storming of the town was begun at 2:30 o'clock in the morning. Then followed a four-days' battle. A virtually continuous cannonade continued from dawn to darkness without cessation.

"Even in the darkness the weary fighters got little sleep. Whenever a single shot was heard the men dashed for their places and the battle boiled again with renewed fury.

Russian Advance Impeded.

"The enemy's counter attacks were delivered with great energy and a dense hail of lead and iron was poured over our ranks. The Russian advance was greatly impeded by the hilly nature of the ground and the great number of extinct craters, which formed splendid natural fortifications for the enemy, which held them doggedly. Out of these, however, the enemy was driven in succession.

"We suffered much from thirst, for the stony country was devoid of springs. The days were oppressively hot and the nights bitterly cold.

"Both sides fought with great obstinacy, but the nearer we approached Lemberg the harder the struggle became. However, it soon was evident that we were superior in artillery.

"At length the enemy was driven from all sides beneath the protection of the Lemberg forts. Our troops were very weary, but in high spirits.

"For two days the fight raged around the forts, but we were always confident of the prowess of our artillery. The big guns of both sides rained a terrific hail down on the armies, which suffered terrific losses.

"At last we noticed that the resistance of the forts was growing weaker. A charge at double quick was ordered, and we carried the first line of works.

"It was evident from that point that many of the enemy's guns had been destroyed. Not enough of them had been left to continue an effective defense, but the enemy was undiscouraged and tried to make up with rifle fire what it lacked in artillery.

Losses Become Heavier.

"Between the first and second lines our losses were heavier than before, but under bayonet charges the enemy broke and fled in panic.

"Our troops entered the town at the enemy's heels. We ran into the town, despite our fatigue, with thunderous cheering.

"An episode which had much to do with ending the enemy's dogged resistance occurred during the fighting between the first and second lines. The Austrians, in the hope of checking the Russian effort to encircle the town, had thrown out a heavy screen of Slav troops with a backing of Magyars, who had been ordered to shoot down the Slavs from behind if they showed any hesitation.

"This circumstance became known to the Russian commander, who ordered a terrific artillery fire over the heads of the Slavs and into the ranks of the Magyars. This well-directed fire set the whole line in panic."

Fall of Lemberg.

"Lemberg, anciently, and now to be called Lvov, was captured by the Russians Thursday morning, together with another important center of administration sixty miles southeast of Lvov, on Dniester, Halicz, Galich.

"The fighting which terminated in such a great victory lasted over a fortnight, of which the last eight days has been uninterrupted action extending over a front of nearly 300 miles.

"I shall attempt to describe the progress of this titanic struggle, according to the data at hand, but in the meantime it is well to consider the meaning of this victory. Lemberg or Lvov is the capital of Galicia and commands all roads and railways leading into Hungary.

Lemberg Strongly Fortified.

"It was defended by ancient fortifications, modern intrenchments and gun emplacements, being already in a naturally strong position. As the administrative end and military center of a vast region it has provided rich booty of military stores to the victors, thus correspondingly crippling the enemy.

"When the Russian commanders entered Lvov they found it possible to communicate by telephone the news of their arrival to Vienna and Cracow. The city has over 200,000 inhabitants. The houses were filled to overflowing with Austrian sick and wounded, who had been abandoned to the Russians.

"The Russian attack was so swiftly pushed home that everything in the capital of Galicia was found intact.

"While the Russians were carrying on their victorious campaign on Lvov it would appear that the Austrian main armies, which had been encouraged to concentrate in the Polish provinces with their front towards Lublin and Kholm, were unable to accomplish anything beyond a single forward march on the extreme left flank, while the right flank still rested on Belz, in their own territory southwest of Sokal.

"The left flank moved to Opoland. The line runs thence to Zamostje and Belz. How much of this Austrian right flank suffered defeat during the combined operations has not seemed clear, but the forces of Austria, which inundated the province of Poland, are still referred to in official reports as the Austrian main force.

"Russia has certainly got enough men in position across the front of this main Austrian army to restrain it, and victories in other parts of the battlefield, which extends over 150 miles, have brought large Russian armies hardened by three weeks' fighting and marching, into the rear of the Austrian main forces.

"Russia has been conducting in perfect secrecy its combined operations against Austria in two regions over 400 miles apart, keeping well in touch with the enemy throughout this enormous distance and further executing a swift dash into East Prussia, another 200 miles away. The actual space covered by Russia's lines is considerably over a thousand miles.

Russians' Strategy Seen.

"Over this vast extent the attack and defense, cavalry raids and reconnoissances on the part of all arms, with temporary successes and occasional mishaps, have been alternating with one another for weeks past. Only now it is possible to penetrate to some extent the strategic plans of the commander-in-chief, and that only as regards the operations which have ended in the victory of Lvov.

"Russia, confident in its strength, took the risk of operating with two separate armies—one entering Galicia from the extreme east and pushing vigorously westward, while the other kept the Austrians employed along 500 or 600 miles of the frontier.

"Precisely by what tactical movements the situation was brought about I have not sufficient data to judge, but it may be safely assumed that the Austrians were increasingly favored in their attacks and incursions into Poland until their commanders were satisfied they had discovered an opening to the main positions, when they concentrated hostility on the Russian right flank.

Russians Foil Germans.

"The Austrians would be more readily disposed toward this direction, as it brought their main forces nearer to the armies of Germany, which ought at the same time to have been pushing vigorously toward Warsaw. The Germans, however, were prevented from performing this part of their plans by the Russians' invasion of East Prussia, which laid the German left flank open in any attempts to penetrate far into Poland from the west.

"The Austrians in the meantime continued victorious in their progress into undefended portions of Poland from the south. Early in the war the Austrians had a line about one march into Poland and extending over the whole western portion. As this territory was undefended, it was or should have been sufficiently obvious that Russia attached little military importance to it.

"The Austrians having secured their flank, proceeded to drive in strongly toward Kielce, but not encouraged in that direction, finally found a line of least resistance in the direction toward Lublin and Kholm, and proceeded to make repeated attacks in force with sufficient success to warrant their generals in making this the main objective of their forces.

Keep From Alarming Austrians.

"While these tactical operations were in progress Russia was pushing quietly, and not in too great force to alarm the Austrian general staff, into Galicia from Podolia and Bessarabia. In this region the Austrians trusted to their defense, also strong bodies of troops resting on fortified camps at every river crossing of this well-watered district.

"The Russians carried these in turn, capturing the valleys of the Rivers Sereth or Gmelden and the Luga without apparently exciting any particular alarm at Austrian headquarters. When they reached the third river, moving westward of Foulipa, the Austrians had evidently taken alarm and desperate efforts were made to arrest the westward progress of this army and even turn the flank at Halicz or Galicia, at the confluence of the Foulipa with the Dniester.

"By this time it was too late and the Russians, after weeks of marching and fighting, occupied a semi-circle of positions around the east side of Lvov and about one march from that place."

Paris.—M. Brieux, the dramatist, who witnessed the arrival of a train full of fugitives at Chartres the other day, describes his experience for the Figaro.

"Children weep or gaze wide eyed, wondering what is the matter. Old folks sit in gloomy silence. Women with haggard cheeks and disheveled hair seem to belong to another age.

"They tell of invaders who scattered powder around or threw petroleum into their houses and then set them afire."

One of the fugitives explained to M. Brieux why after the first hour of their flight she had to carry her elder child as well as her baby. She showed him a pair of boots.

"I felt the inside with my fingers," says Brieux. "Nails had come through the soles. I looked at the child's feet. They were dirty with red brown clots. It was blood."

An article appeared in the Montgomery Journal of Sept. 14, under the following heading: "U. S. officials silent as to cotton seed investigation." This is another indication that the farmer of the south need not look to the government lor any relief at all. They must have forgotten the pledge they made to the farmers two years ago, and adopted the policy of watchful waiting instead of the relief-and-do-something policy they advocated.

In determining what a thing is, it is always a great help to, at the same time, observe what it IS NOT. Therefore, as an aid to the Clanton Press in finding out what is meant by the initiative, referendum and recall, we beg to state that it DOES NOT mean the issuing of county warrants and the placing of th e county in debt over and in defiance of the voice of the people who compose the county. Therefore it is readily to be seen that the initiative, referendum and recall are really and truly enough something unknown in the recent management of the affairs of this county.

In his speech at New Orleans last week Col. Roosevelt said: "It is out of the question that the old Republican Paty can ever secure the confidence of the South. It is out of the question that the old Democratic party, wedded to outworn principles of government, and dead and buried economic theories, can ever do real good in North or South. A new party is needed to meet the new needs of the new day. The national Progressive platform is in very deed, a national platform as emphatically in the interest of the south as of the north; in the interest of the west as of the east; a platform upon which all far-sighted and upright citizens in every state and every section can stand without mental reservation." These are truths beyond dispute, and if this nation would but accept them, mean the glorious triumph of an era of universal confidence from one side of our county to the other.

In the Age-Herald of last Sunday under the headlines, "Cotton seed men violating the law says D.H. Riddle; says officials should prosecute the flagrant outrages against statutes of the state," the following was the first paragraph: "Charging that the most flagrant violation of the anti-trust statutes of the state and nation is daily occuring in Alabama, D. H. Riddle a wellknown lawyer of Talladega, while in Birmingham last night, called upon the state government to prosecute the buyers and crushers of cotton seed."

Why is it that the Democratic officers of the south are sitting idly by and seeing the farmers robbed in such a way? Why don't they do their duty and prosecute such trusts as are referred to above, and enable the farmers to get what is coming to them? Two years ago they went all over this county telling the people what great friends they were to the farmers; but where are they to day when the farmer needs them? Why don't they do something? They promised to.

We call attention to an article which appeared the Toledo Blade which is in part as follows:

"It has not occurred to the house committee on ways and means, it would appear, to put in force the democratic promise of economy. Possibly these good intentions have been thrown overboard altogether. There is reason to believe this, because the present congress has created a great number of new jobs, voted itself an extravagant mileage allowance and attempted to pass the greediest "Pork Barrel" bill ever framed. The treasury report shows that congress has spent $38.000 more on itself in August up to the 20th of the month, then it spent in all of August last year. The executive offices had spent more than three times as much, the state department not far from twice as much, the department of justice seven times as much, and the interior department twice as much as was spent on these officers and departments a year ago."

The above article shows the people how the democrats live up to thei promises. Why have they gone back on almost every promise they made the people two years ago? Do you wonder why the democratic speakers of this county will not meet the Progressive speakers in joint debate? Can they or anyone else defend such administration as this? Possibly this is the reason that the Clanton Press and the democratic candidates of this county have not seem fit to go out and try to make a canvass as they thought they would have to try and defend the present administration. We would like to see the man that can, or would ever try, to defend the democratic administration, in this state or in the nation, or almost any where else that they are in power.

Is the Democratic administration at Washington the friend of the southern farmer? We have only to look for an answer to this question in the action they have taken on questions that concern the farmer of the south. The first thing that confronts us then is the message that was sent out from Washington last week, after the Democratic Congress had spent days of investigation in the present cotton crisis. They said to the South that we need not expect any aid from the government in moving the cotton crop.

It looks rather provoking to us that Congress should send such a message to the stricken southland, when it had at its disposal under the provision of the Vreeland-Aldrich bill, $150,000,000 with which to relieve an emergency in the cotton trade. What are our southern Senators and Representatives doing anyhow? When such a pressing emergency faces their contingents, are they really so helpless to extend us aid through the power of their offices? Can we but infer from the treatment of this situation that the Democratic party is not the party for giving the people relief that it proposed to be. Have they not failed in this vital point? One of the strongest Democatic journals in the south made the statement that Congress was at its supreme criterion in dealing with this emergency in cotton. Now they have refused to extend any aid at all, can this democratic organ but come out and say boldly that the demacratic rule has failed in its boasted service to the people? Will they continue to preach to the people the great good and beneficial service that comes from a democratic administration?

PAVED HIGHWAYS REUNION TRAVELS

Jacksonville Has Many High Class Roads to Points of Interest

Trips to Be Taken Over Them in Automobiles During the Reunion of Confederates May 6, 7, 8.

Jacksonville, Fla., April.—It is safe to say that hundreds, and possibly thousands, of visitors to Jacksonville during the week of the great Reunion of Confederate Veterans and Sons of Veterans, will make the trip from their homes in automobiles. Numerous inquiries have been received from all parts of the country concerning road conditions, and especially in regard to the practicability of reaching other points in Florida by automobile trips from Jacksonville.

For the information of auto owners, desirous of bringing their cars to Jacksonville at the time of the Reunion, attention is called to the fact that the city license books show that there are over 2,000 licensed automobiles in the city of Jacksonville alone, and during the past winter season more than 2,500 motor-driven vehicles have passed through Jacksonville en route to various places on the Florida peninsula. Unless there were fairly good roads, leading from Jacksonville to other sections of the State, there would not have been one-tenth as many cars in Florida this season, and the home people of Jacksonville would not have invested so heavily in motor vehicles.

Duval county, of which Jacksonville is the county seat, was among the first of the Florida counties to issue road improvement bonds and to begin the paving of its highways with vitrified paving brick and concrete. With a population of only 75,000 in 1909, this county issued road improvement bonds that year to the amount of $1,000,000, and it was provided that not more than $250,000 was to be expended in road construction each year for four years. The bonds were sold at a handsome premium and the money has all been expended on the roads of the county, with a result that this county now has some of the very best in the South, and these roads are a joy to the joyrider and to all persons who use them.

But this is not all; for the Board of County Commissioners is at the present time working up interest in a proposition to issue from $2,000,000 to $5,000,000 additional road improvement bonds and construct a system of paved roads and highways throughout the county of Duval that will be a model for all sections of the country.

Jacksonville is only seventeen miles in a direct line from the Atlantic Ocean, where there is one of the finest beaches in the world, affording a speedway four hundred feet in width and twenty miles in length. Here is the ideal automobile course and it is visited by thousands of cars every year.

From the city to the seashore the county has constructed a magnificent boulevard, paved with vitrified brick and with concrete for the entire distance. Hundreds of cars traverse this Atlantic Boulevard, as it is known, daily, and during the Reunion many thousands of visitors will make the trip by auto to the beach. Once on the seashore they will find much to interest them. Surf bathing will be at its best during the Reunion week and many visitors from interior points, who have never before had the opportunity to plunge into the big breakers of Old Ocean, will find the experience a novel and delightful one.

From Jacksonville to St. Augustine the distance by auto is 38 miles and the trip is easily made in two hours. In fact, the record for the trip is one hour and nine minutes, but that is almost too fast for a trip to the oldest city in the United States.

The road from South Jacksonville, on the opposite side of the majestic St. Johns river from the Reunion city, is paved with shell for nine miles and the going is good. Then comes six miles of brick paving over which the cars fairly skim along. The next four miles, to the Duval county line, have not yet been paved, but a temporary surface of shavings has been provided. From the county line to St. Augustine, a distance of 18 miles, the road is not yet paved but shell has been placed in the wheel ruts and good time can be made by the average car.

Still another attractive trip, on the south side of the St. Johns river, is that to Mandarin, a pretty little village on the banks of the river, about fifteen miles from the city. This road is well paved with shell for the entire distance and passes through some very pretty orange groves, which in themselves are an attraction to all. At Mandarin there are a number of attractive homes, surrounded by pretty gardens, groves and farms. This village is the site of the former home of the late Mrs. Harriett Beecher Stowe, the author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

The city of Jacksonville has sixty miles of paved streets and contracts are now outstanding for several additional miles, work on which will start immediately after the reunion, as it is the desire of the city authorities not to have the streets torn up while the visitors are here.

Sight-seeing automobiles are numerous in Jacksonville every winter and this year several of the large cars will remain over until after the reunion.

ASTHMA AND HAY FEVER A GUARANTEED RELIEF

"I have arranged with Alred Drug Company so that every sufferer from Asthma, Hay Fever or Bronchial Asthma in Clanton can try my treatment entirely at my risk," Dr. Rudolph Schiffmann announces. He says: "Buy a 50-cent package of my Asthmador, try it, and if it does not afford you immediate relief, or if you do not find it the best remedy you have ever used, take it back to Alred Drug Company and they will return your money, cheerfully and without any question whatever. After seeing the grateful relief it has afforded in hundrers of cases, which had been considered incurable, and which had been given up in despair, I know what it will do. I am so sure that it will do the same with others that I am not afraid to guarantee it will relieve instantaneously. The druggists handling Asthmador will return your money if you say so. You are to be the sole judge and under this positive guarantee, absolutely no risk is run in buying Asthmador."

Persons living elsewhare will be supplied under the same guarantee by their local druggist or direct by Dr. R. Schiffmann, St. Paul, Minn.

The Attraction.

A rather eccentric man, calling on a family blessed by an observant little son, wore kid gloves that had been cleaned. The little boy, seeming to be much attracted by the visitor, stayed close at his side. "You like to stand by Mr. Blank and hear his funny stories, don't you, Jimmie?" presently asked Jimmie's father. "I don't care about his stories," replied the honest youngster, "but his hands smell just like our automobile."

Will Pay 10 Cents For Your Cotton.

In view of the present financial condition of the country, and realizing that from the sale of cotton is the only way the people of this section have to get money, we hereby agree to accept cotton at 10c per pound from all who are indebted to us on former transactions, and as payment in any transaction we may make while these present conditions exist.

Farmers,

We understand that a number of our customers are under the impression that we no longer credit them for Ginning and Bagging and Ties, but demand the cash when the cotton is ginned. THIS IS NOT TRUE.

We have our same old rules for ginning; but only observe them closer. We will gin your cotton as cheap as anyone in town, and allow you till the cotton is sold or you are ready to haul it away from the warehouse, to pay for the ginning.

Having had our machinery put into first class condition, and being operated by experienced men, we can assure you perfect satisfaction.

We also pay the highest cash price for seed.

REYNOLDS-MORGAN

A brilliant social event of the season was the marriage of Miss Estella Morgan and Mr. Grady Reynolds, which was solemnized at the Methodist church last Thursday night. The church was beautifully decorated for the occosion with palms and chrysanthemums.

Before the bridal party entered, a delightful musical program was rendered by Mr. Percy Pitts and Mrs. A. M. Gowan, Miss Emmette Matthews and Mrs. J. H. Middleton.

The bridal party, led by the ushers, Messrs. J. P. VanDerveer and J. Hance Alred entered to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march. The brides maids, Misses Lurline Harper, Bessie VanDerveer, Willie and Winnie Reynolds, wore white crepe de chine trimmed with duchess lace and pearls. The maid of honor, Miss L. E. Morgan, sister of the bride, and the matron of honor, Mrs. Whitfield of Montgomery, wore yellow crepe meteor. The bride attired in a tailored suit of dark green, with hat to match and bronze slippers, entered on the arm of her brother, John T Morgan by whom she was given in marriage.

The groom entered with the best man, Mr. Brown Gaston, of Montgomery. The groomsmen were Messrs. Claude Reynolds, John F. Dillard, Sam A. Latham and Dr. Sam Hopkins.

Miss Elizabeth Powe acted as ring bearer, and the flower girls were Misses Ann Whitfield and Frances Hopkins.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Chappelle, assisted by Rev. Fancher.

Mr. R. I. Perkins, postmaster of Dollar, and a prominent citizen of Coosa county, was in the city Wednesday on business.

The New Baby is World's Wonder

Every tiny infant makes life's perspective wider and brighter. And whatever there is to enhance its arrival and to ease and comfort the expectant mother should be given attention. Among the real helpful things is an external abdominal application known as "Mother's Friend." There is scarcely a community but what has its enthusiastic admirer of this splendid embrocation. It is so well thought of by women who know that most drug stores throughout the United States carry "Mother's Friend" as one of their staple and reliable remedies. It is applied to the abdominal muscles to relieve the strain on ligaments and tendons.

Those who have used it refer to the ease and comfort experienced during the period of expectancy; they particularly refer to the absence of nausea, often so prevalent as a result of the natural expansion. In a little book are described more fully the many reasons why "Mother's Friend" has been a friend indeed to women with timely hints, suggestions and helps for ready reference. It should be in all homes. "Mother's Friend" may be had of almost any druggist, but if you fail to find it write us direct and also write for book to Bradfield Regulator Co., 403 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Interesting Items From Thorsby.

Thorsby Institute opened on Tuesday, Sept. 8th, with chapel service at ten a.m. Addresses were made by Miss Helen C. Jenkins, A. K. Horn, and Principal, S. H. Herbert. Special music was furnished by a quartette of young ladies.

The enrollment the first day was 41. Others have come in since, so that the enrollment now is as large as the entire enrollment of last year. The dormitories are busy places with the largest number of boarding students the school has ever had at the opening of the term. These students come from ten different counties.

The reception given by the Ladies Guild to the students, teachers, and trustees of Thorsby Institute last Friday night was a delightful affair. Over a hundred people were present, and all seemed to enjoy themselves. Speeches were made by Mrs. Hattie Gerald, John Patton, Miss Jenkins, Rev. E. W. Butler, and Principal S. H. Herbert. Miss Lassfolk and some other young ladies furnished some very pleasing music. Refreshments consisting of ice cream and cake were served to the guests of the evening by the Ladies' Guild.

W. H. Hopkins, of Atlanta Ga. preached at the Congregational church Sunday morning and evening. He spoke to the students of Thorsby Institute at the chapel service Monday morning and gave a Bible study in the book of Acts Monday afternoon. His addresses were much enjoyed, and were very helpful.

The lots formerly occupied by the Foss residence, which was destroyed in the fire last January are being thoroughly cleaned up. This is part of the work of beautifying the Institute Campus which will be carried on during the coming year under the directions of the Department of Landscape Gardning of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute. The Girls Domitory yard is already much improved in appearance as the result of work done last spring and this summer.

The waterworks pipes have been extended to the end of Chilton Avenue, and from thence to the Boys' Dormitories. Several new customers are taking water now that the supply can be depended on.

The opening meeting of the Helen Keller Literary Society will be held in Bates Hall Friday night, September 18th, at 7:30 p. m. Election of officers for the coming year will be the main business of the evening but something of the nature of a program will be presented. All former members of the society are invited to be present.

The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of "THE MAN HIGHER UP," "HIS RISE TO POWER," Etc.

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

SYNOPSIS.

Mark Truitt, encouraged by his sweetheart, Unity Martin, leaves Bethel, his native town, to seek his fortune. Simon Truitt tells Mark that it long has been his dream to see a steel plant at Bethel and asks the son to return and build one if he ever gets rich. Mark applies to Thomas Henley, head of the Quinby Iron works, for a job and is sent to the construction gang. His success in that work wins him a place as helper to Roman Andzrejzski, open-hearth furnaceman. He becomes a boarder in Roman's home and assists Piotr, Roman's son, in his studies. Kazia, an adopted daughter, shows her gratitude in such a manner as to arouse Mark's interest in her. Heavy work in the intense heat of the furnace causes Mark to collapse and Kazia cares for him. Later Roman also succumbs and Mark gets his job. Roman resents this and tells Mark to find another boarding place.

CHAPTER X.

Wounded on the Field.

The accident was one that happened often. Occasionally, after a tap, water would be turned into the cinder pit that the cooling slag might harden and be broken without delay. Not seldom the water would be conveyed under the crust, come into contact with the still molten slag and be converted suddenly into steam. Then there would be an explosion. Men might be seriously injured, or even killed, which was very sad—but one of the hazards of the employment. It happened when Mark had been following his straight road ahead for more than five years.

Five years during which he had won success, substantial if not brilliant! The lack of brilliancy might have been disputed by those few who knew that sundry labor-saving devices installed in the Quinby mills during this period were of his invention.

When Henley heard of the accident he frowned; Henley detested accidents, which spoke of inefficiency somewhere. But when the information was added that the foreman of the open-hearth battery was among the injured, he said: "Damn!" and in person at once called the hospital and his own physician by telephone and through these agencies commandeered the best surgical skill and care for that valuable workman.

The doctors gathered in solemn conclave and did various things to Mark's shattered body. They dogged his steps into the very shadow of death and would not let him die. They did that, knowing they condemned him to a life of pain, and having the security of Thomas Henley's word that their bills should each and every one of them be paid.

While Mark still lingered in the vale of mystery that leads to full knowledge, two men began their daily—and nightly—watches. One was a thin faded man who wore the rusty black of the country preacher. The other was an awkward, gray little man who would sit motionless by the hour, never taking his eyes from the still form under the white sheet.

Mark did not die. His broken body began slowly to mend. He passed out of immediate danger; he was even allowed to talk and to be talked to a little. But in the manner of the nurses, of his visitors from Bethel, even of the calloused doctors, were a grave gentleness, an absence of the exultation to be expected after triumph over death. He felt it.

He put his question to his father. "What are they keeping back from me?"

Simon's glance did not waver, nor did he try to evade with a soothing lie. "Ye'll never walk easy again. Ye'll have to use a crutch, leastways a cane, always."

"It's my hip?"

"Yes."

"Is that all?"

"Ye were hurt innardly. Ye'll have to be careful always. No more work in the mills."

Mark closed his eyes, uttering no complaint. But within was a turmoil of protest and rebellion. A cripple, a partial invalid for life! Half a man! So had ended the dreamed campaign of conquest. Tears of futile rage seeped out through his closed eyelids.

His recovery was slow and very painful; six years of driving ahead at top speed had left him but little reserve vitality for the emergency. The mood of rebellion died down from sheer exhaustion. He accepted his misfortune; but sullenly, with no swelling heroic resolve to defy untoward circumstance.

There was no conscious desire to return to the mills from which he had been banished. They were too much the object of his smoldering resentment just then. He felt toward them as the betrayed toward the traitor.

"I think," he said once to Simon and Richard Courtney, who had not yet left the city, "I'll go back to Bethel."

"It will be a good place to recuperate," said the preacher.

"But I mean to stay."

"We shall be glad to have you back."

He had had his period of tragic remorse for Kazia. He had not, however, let conscience push to the extreme of disturbing the fixed destiny just mentioned. Nor was he long in attaining a comparative peace of mind in which he could congratulate himself on having avoided a serious blunder. Not many months later he by chance met Piotr, who conveyed the news that Kazia had married Whiting. Piotr's manner of narration implied that, though Whiting was a poor refuge, Kazia had been fortunate to escape Mark. He seemed disappointed that his auditor showed no deep emotion.

Mark's letters to Unity had continued, at erratic intervals. Soon her replies, too, began to dwindle in number and in length; they had never had much to lose in the way of intensity. And then he sent a letter that she failed to answer at all, leaving their love affair suspended, so to speak, in the air. One of Simon's rare and misspelled missives informed Mark that she was, in the phrase Bethel used, keeping company with one Slocum, a prosperous young farmer of the vicinity. This may hardly be regarded as poetic retribution. It caused Mark a few days' surface indignation and a secret relief; one can not feel deeply the loss of a shadow, even though one has paid a price for her.

Kazia married; Unity, having jilted him, keeping company with plodding Bill Slocum! His tragedy had ended in sheer farce. We do well, he concluded, not to take our dramas too seriously.

* * * * * * *

An amazing thing happened one day. There was the sound of a quick unfamiliar tread in the corridor, the door was pushed briskly open and into the room stepped Thomas Henley.

"How are you, Truitt?" he inquired, shaking hands. "I was going by, had a few minutes and ran up to find out for myself."

"Good!" said Henley. "Your father, I presume?" He nodded toward Simon.

Mark made the necessary introductions. Simon said: "Pleased to meet ye," and flushed for his son, who had had to own up to the relationship.

Toward the other visitor Henley glanced uncertainly a moment, then held out a hand.

"Ah! Doctor Courtney! Do you happen to remember me?" The question, obviously, was in playful irony.

"I happen to," answered Courtney, who did not share Simon's shyness.

"I remember now, it was you who sent this young man to me. I," said Henley graciously, "am in your debt."

The preacher's shadowy smile appeared. "Is he?"

Henley laughed pleasantly. "I fancy he is. And I have a notion the debt will grow. I am finishing your job, Doctor Courtney."

"I'm Going Back—Home."

He turned to Mark. Simon and Courtney pushed their chairs back from the bedside, that the great man might hold the stage.

"When," Henley asked, "do you expect to come back to us?"

Mark winced and returned to the sullenness that was becoming his habit. "I'm going back—home."

The pause and the slight emphasis on the last word were not lost on Henley; a suspicion as to their import stirred. But:

"Exactly right!" he exclaimed heartily. "Stay as long as necessary to get your strength together. You're too valuable a man to take chances. Your job will wait for you. By the way, about that new charging machine you spoke of before the accident; I suppose the plans aren't where we can lay our hands on them?"

"An excellent place to keep 'em," Henley agreed. "Suppose then, when you're feeling up to it, I send one of our engineers after you to go over the plans with you? If there's anything in the idea, we ought to install the machines before winter."

"You can send him, if you want to. But I won't go over the plans with him." Mark discouraged the suggestion.

Henley stiffened. "I'm not in the business of stealing inventions."

"I'll see that you don't steal this," Mark responded ungraciously. "Because, when you pay for it, you've got to pay for this, too." He put a hand on the injured hip. "That is, if I ever put the idea in shape."

Henley waved a hand to intimate that allowance must be made for an invalid's humors. "Of course, we expect you to be business-like. Just what do you mean by that 'if'?"

"I mean I'm through with the mills."

"Who," Henley's glance swept Simon and Richard Courtney sharply, "who has been putting fool ideas into your head?"

"You, for one, when you come here because I'm a valuable man, not because I'm a man. Would you come to see me if I hadn't a new invention in mind?"

"Nonsense! You're sick, that's all." Henley smiled kindly but confidently. "I've seen men in your case before. You think you won't come back. But you will. Why? Because you're a valuable man—I stick to that. You've a genius for mechanics, you know how to handle men and you've got a sense of organization. Most men would think themselves lucky if they had any one of those. What does it mean? That you fit in here, of course. And when a man fits into any kind of life, he can no more keep away than molten steel can avoid the shape of the mold. And —you'll find it so—there's something about our business that gets into the bone and blood of a man." He looked at his watch and rose abruptly. "Glad you're getting along. Don't forget, your job is waiting for you."

"But you don't seem to understand," Mark cried. "I'm done for. I'll have to go on a cane, maybe a crutch, all my life. And the doctors say, no hard work at all."

Henley could be very human, when he chose. "Ah!" he said gently. "I had not heard that. I'm sorry. It makes a difference, of course."

It is possible that Henley was not thinking of Mark's commercial value, as he stood looking searchingly down at the querulous patient.

"Your brains don't need a crutch, do they? It isn't brute strength that makes you valuable—we can buy that cheap. You said something about being a man. Now's your chance to be one. What's a little thing like a crutch or a doctor's prohibition? The measure of a man is what he overcomes. Go home and rest, get your nerve together. And when you're ready, let me know. I'll find a place for you."

He was gone. And there was Mark, who had just been weakly if resentfully accepting defeat, athrill like a war-horse that has heard the bugle call.

CHAPTER XI.

The Measure of a Man.

When he met Unity again, he had been in Bethel for more than two weeks.

He had started out for the morning turn on his crutches, to test his returning strength, and before he quite realized it the village lay behind him. He swung along for some two hundred yards farther; then let himself carefully down on the roadside.

He sat there for a long time, baring his head to the summer sunshine.

"This is very good indeed!" It would have been almost flawless but for one thing—he was rather lonely; he felt the need for some one to share the day with him.

He had his wish. Down the valley road appeared a buggy drawn by a lazy heavy-footed horse of the sort distinguished as "safe for women." From within the buggy Mark caught the gleam of a white shirtwaist and a sailor hat. Even before the vehicle drew near enough for recognition, he knew the passenger for Unity.

A slight tremor passed over him. To meet the embodiment of a shadow by whom one has been jilted—or whom one has jilted?—is at least mildly exciting.

A slight tightening of the reins was sufficient to stop that horse.

"Hello, Unity!" Mark felt that this greeting fell short of the dramatic proprieties.

"Oh! How do you do?" she answered colorlessly.

There was a moment of silence during which, without seeming to do so, they inspected each other.

Mark had a twinge of disappointment. This was not the Unity he had loved so boyishly—and so briefly. She was as pretty as ever, in a way even prettier; but one could hardly have thought of her as spirituelle. Her face was fuller, its color deeper, and there was a healthy roundness in the line of shoulder and breast, of the ankle that protruded from under the dust-robe. Not that she was fat! But her daintiness was gone. In the item of dress she would have suffered from comparison with the young ladies of his boarding house. Her hair was done carelessly. And vivacity had gone the way of daintiness. She had the air of having settled into the habit of Bethel, of having accepted its narrow outlook. A faint vertical line between her eyes hinted that she might not have accepted it with complacency.

Therefore he said: "You look the same as ever, Unity."

She brightened a little. "You think so?" There was something almost pitiful to him in the way she caught at the remark. She became spiritless again. "But, of course, that isn't true."

"But, of course, it is."

She laughed unpleasantly. "You wouldn't think so, if you saw the way they treat me here now."

"The men? Surely not!"

She shrugged her shoulders. "No. The women. They're so friendly now and they don't giggle behind my back. And when they haven't anything else to gossip about, they talk about how I'm settling into an old maid."

"Isn't that what the rhetorics used to call hyperbole? It should be sparingly used. Besides I hear you have a beau."

"That's a nice way to talk about a lover! Especially," he laughed self-consciously, "since you threw me over for him."

He almost missed the acid look she flashed at him. "It broke your heart, of course!"

"I've had pleasanter experiences," he said dryly. "Why didn't you answer my last letter, Unity?"

Her indifference might have been a little too well done. "For one thing, even I have a little pride. It was easy to see you'd got tired of me. Not that I cared! Those boy-and-girl affairs always die a natural death. There was another girl, wasn't there?"

"Why, I believe so. In fact, there was. I gave her up for you."

"And I gave you up. You must have thought," again her unpleasant laugh rang, "you'd made a poor bargain all round. Or had a lucky escape!"

"I did," he answered grimly, leaving her to construe the answer as she chose.

"That's an easy conundrum." She gathered up the reins. "Well, I must be going. We're harvesting now and I have to get back in time to help get dinner. Good-by."

She drove on, as casually as if they had been neighbors in the habit of meeting daily. . . . And this was their first meeting after six years.

He leaned back on his grassy bank, having found, if not a companion, at least food for reflection.

He was still resting on his grassy bank when, an hour later, the slow-going vehicle reappeared. With difficulty—for he had not yet become expert wtih his crutches—he rose and stood in the middle of the road. The horse, without urging, stopped with its nose against him. A more skilled observer than Mark might have noticed that some villager's mirror and comb had been utilized to the advantage of Unity's hair and that her hat had been readjusted to its most becoming angle; and would have drawn certain inferences.

He laughed and waved his hand airily. "This morning the world is mine. Do you know, we haven't shaken hands?"

"Oh, haven't we?" Her tone attached no importance to the omission.

Nevertheless, when he stood aside, she drove the horse forward a length and laid a limp hand in Mark's.

"Also," he continued, "you haven't said you're sorry that I was hurt."

"Oh!" she repeated, with perfunctoriness unrelieved, "I'm sorry."

He laughed again. "You needn't mind now. You'll have plenty of chances before long."

"Meaning?"

"The road to your house is still open to the public, isn't it? I'm thinking of buying a new horse. Unity," he returned to gravity, "there isn't any reason why we shouldn't be good friends, is there?"

"People will talk."

He paraphrased a classic formula. "Unity," he said earnestly, "drat the people!"

"You can say that. You don't have to stay here."

"But I'm going to stay here."

"Not for good?"

"For good."

"Why?"

Mark laughed shortly. "When you're put out of the race, you don't want to stay where you have to watch the others still running."

She inspected him again, more closely. He thought he was sincere. But he did not know that despite the crutches and his drawn white face he had not the resigned dispirited air of the man who has accepted a permanent seat on the shelf.

"Look as long as you want to," he suggested at last. "In the meantime—will you set the dogs on me when I drive down your way?"

"Oh, well!" She tried unsuccessfully to return to indifference. "If you really want to come—! It's been a dull season. I suppose it would be a mercy to the gossips to give their tongues a chance to clack once more." She drew the reins taut.

Mark swung slowly along homeward. He smiled pityingly. He had read aright the new interest in Unity's face —that of the condemned prisoner who has heard rumor of reprieve. He was sorry for her. And pity—we have it from the poets—is love's poor relation.

Mark regained a measure of strength. He discarded one crutch and began each day to take a few steps experimentally with no support but a cane. He spent many beautiful idle hours, alone or with Richard Courtney, driving his new horse among the hills.

Sometimes—often—Unity was with him on these drives. Tongues clacked according to prophecy. But Mark did not care. And Unity did not care.

Mark fell placidly and easily in love with Unity again. At least, the while protesting, he decided that it must be love.

But the protest was half-hearted. He wanted to love.

"Are ye goin' to stay here in Bethel?" Simon broke a long silence to inquire, one rainy evening.

"I don't know," Mark answered out of a brown study, off his guard. But he added quickly: "Yes, I do know. I'm going to stay."

"Then, what are ye goin' to do?"

"I don't need to do anything. I've got twenty thousand dollars. That'll last me—in Bethel."

"And never will be."

"Would you have me go back to the city?"

"Yes."

"You don't know what you're saying," Mark began irritably. "I could never take a pen pusher's job. The mills are all I know. And that life—you don't know it. It costs too much. It takes it out of you, drives you like a slave. It—I'm not fit for it now. It—oh, let's not talk about it."

"Are ye," he went on, "goin' to marry Unity Martin?"

"I don't know. I suppose so."

"If ye don't find out purty soon," remarked Simon most surprisingly, "she'll do your knowin' fur ye. I wouldn't."

Mark stopped at a window, looking frowningly out at the sheets of rain that dashed across the square of light.

Simon must have felt deeply on the subject, for he repeated, "I wouldn't."

"No," said Mark testily, "I suppose you wouldn't. I don't know. But if I do it, it will be with my eyes open." Which seems a most unlover-like saying.

There was an evening when he was alone with Unity on Squire Martin's front porch. It was one of the soft languorous nights that sometimes come to Bethel in early September. They talked little and that in low tones.

Once he leaned toward her. He had to peer closely to make out her look of content.

"Do you know," he remarked, "you ought to be glad I came back?"

"Indeed! And why?"

"Have you looked in the mirror lately? When I first came you looked —well, cranky and as though you didn't care whether school kept or not."

"Well, of all the conceit! I suppose you take all the credit." Thus she admitted certain improvements.

"And why not?" he laughed lazily. "When you come right down to it, Unity, you never really, definitely threw me over."

"It isn't too late."

"Yes, it is too late."

She said nothing. But when he reached up to take her hand he found it a tightly clenched little ball.

"Unity, do you remember the drive we took that Sunday before I went to the city?"

"I think I do."

"She thinks she does!" he apostrophized the night. "I have a scheme. Tomorrow, right after dinner, I'm going to drive down here for you. Unity, let's have the Sunday over again—in every particular."

Again she was silent.

"You don't agree?"

"I—I'm not sure."

"That you love me?"

She shook her head. "That I want to marry you."

But when he drew her down and kissed her, she did not resist. "Wait," he whispered fatuously, "until tomorrow. Then you will be convinced." Although what virtue the morrow would hold he did not say. He probably did not guess.

Unity did not scruple to change the current of another's life; she saw no occasion for scruples. She thought she loved Mark. But she did not believe his expressed resolve to stay in Bethel was, could be, genuine; or, if genuine, that its execution would be good for him. And, principally—she knew exactly what she wanted.

Next day they drove over much the same road they had taken seven years before. They chatted in lighter vein, with intervals of eloquent silence. On a tilltop whence they could see only other hills and the sinking sun they ate the lunch put up by the thoughtful Susan. Then they waited to watch the sunset.

"Unity, what must I do to convince you?"

"Nothing," she murmured.

He considered his happiness.

And after a while she said: "Tell me about your life in the city. You've never said much about it."

Innocent demand! Not in vain is the trap set in the sight of a young man in love. He began to describe the mills to her. And as he went on, into his words crept the unconscious eloquence of a real enthusiasm. His face became eager. Before he had ended, he was on his feet declaiming to her, who was a very attentive audience. He saw what he described.

"Ah!" she breathed, as he reached a period. "What a life! And you could leave it?"

"You forget," he reminded her, "I was put out of it."

She leaned forward suddenly, resting her hand on the one that held the cane. "Mark, why don't you go back to it?"

He jerked his hand free, as if he had felt a twinge of pain. "Don't suggest that, Unity!" he cried. "There's that other side. It's hard and cruel and narrowing. It eats up all the best of you. Sometimes it kills you. It makes you a machine, not your own man. I used to feel it when I was there, sometimes terribly. Here I see it from a distance and I understand better. It's just one hellish scramble, that life—" He stopped abruptly, with an impatient gesture.

"If I go back, Unity, you won't—"

But how could he phrase his fear or interpret the hot surging that drowned it?

She sighed happily.

He was soon to learn.

A man and a woman entered into the most trying of human relations. Both were young, but both had hardened in the pursuit of selfish desire. Neither had the love that finds its chief joy in yielding.

CHAPTER XII.

A Man and His Wife.

In the down-town offices of the Quinby company and in the particular room which may be called the headquarters of the Quinby army, two men were sitting late one winter afternoon. The one was Henley himself, now chairman of the company, a bit stouter than when we first met him twelve years ago, his arrogance a little less evident in manner albeit time had not altered the fact. The other was a youngish man whose thin bony face and hands and streaks of premature gray hair spoke of physical frailty.

It was common knowledge in the Quinby company that no one was more welcome in Henley's office than the young superintendent whom the master's influence had put in command of the big new open-hearth plant. It was even suspected that Henley had taken Truitt in with him in his speculations.

At the end of a long discussion of company affairs Henley pressed a button. His secretary appeared from the adjoining office.

"Bring in the light and heat account."

The secretary returned with the account of the latest successful speculation. Henley gave it a rapid glance and handed it to Mark. The latter studied it carefully, questioned certain items, questioned the explanation and finally accepted them. Henley smiled again. He knew men who would have hesitated to question his accounts. Everything he knew of Truitt he liked.

"Make out Mr. Truitt's check," he directed the secretary, who withdrew and promptly returned.

Henley signed the check and delivered it to Mark. The latter receipted the accompanying voucher.

"I've another thing in mind," Henley suggested. "Care to go in?"

Mark hesitated, his brow suddenly wrinkling. "I think not," he said at last. The note of irritation did not escape Henley. "I've my eye on a new house."

"I thought you were pretty comfortably fixed."

"Yes? I see," Henley indicated Mark's heavy furred overcoat, "you're driving out. You can take me home —unless you're in a hurry to reach that delinquent neighborhood?"

A quarter of an hour later the two men emerged from the corridor of the Quinby building. At the door a crippled beggar accosted them. Henley ignored him. Mark slyly gave him a coin.

A beautifully matched team of blacks harnessed to a light sleigh awaited him. Evidently Mark had not forgotten his early knowledge of horse flesh. Only a man whom fortune had kissed could have afforded such horses. For Mark—with his "leg and a half"—they were hardly an extravagance, almost a necessity.

TIME FOR SANENESS

American People Must Realize World Condition.

This Country's Surplus Food Products Are to Be Sold to the Belligerents Through Open Channels of Trade.

The American press, public and lawmakers, not a little bewildered by the spectacle of a world war, are overestimating the value of legislative guidance and restriction, and underestimating the power of the ordinary agencies of commerce and of finance to rectify the economic evils of the troublous times.

President Wilson did right in discouraging the flotation of foreign loans here. This accords with the more advanced ideas of neutrality. At the same time, we should not exaggerate the importance of this prohibition. It merely obstructs that extension of credit to foreign powers which they desired in order to buy goods here. All they wanted was a credit balance on which they could draw.

On the other hand our failure to lend to them is only partly effective. Between refusing to take a mortgage on your neighbor's cottage and buying with cash his automobile there is little difference in effect. The belligerents, having to finance their own wars, will all the more return our securities to us. And we cannot help buying them. They will be at reasonable figures before the war is over—our own prices keeping step with them.

Much the same situation applies to food products. Although still one of the great food exporting nations of the world, we have no monopoly in that service. The Argentine, Australia, western Canada, South Africa are great food exporters. Our influence in depriving the belligerents of food, were we to do so, would not go far with the Argentine. Most of the other new countries, which export wheat and beef, are British possessions and under obligations, alike of business and of patriotism, to feed the empire. From all appearances the lanes of ocean travel will be kept open by Britain's navy. Insurance rates from South Africa dropped materially on the blowing up of the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse.

It is of less importance to the rest of the world what we do with our food supplies than it is to ourselves. If we fed our neutrals, of whom there are some left, the Argentine and other South American countries would graciously leave that market to us, and cater to the belligerents. The fluidity of the world's food products is not far behind that of its reservoir of wealth.

Only Safe Way.

The trusts can be handled only along the lines we championed. It is utterly hopeless to try to do away with combinations in the business world, just as it is hopeless and mischievous to try to do away with combinations in the labor world, just as we ought to encourage combination and co-operation among the farmers. There must be business combinations. The efforts to stop them all cannot be successful and can only result in mischief. What is needed is control of these corporations, thorough-going and far-reaching control, a control that can only come through the action of the national government. This control should not be attempted under the guise of lawsuits undertaken to punish people for what has already been done. It should be obtained through continuing supervisory control exercised by an administrative body. This administrative body should, in advance, tell honest business men what they cannot and what they can do. It should exercise such control over the inception of business as to put a stop at the beginning to the mischievous activities of business that is not honest.—Theodore Roosevelt.

The New Spirit in Politics.

The new spirit in American politics was splendidly illustrated in the speech made by Henry J. Allen in Kansas City, Kans. The spectacle of a party candidate for governor defending the national administration of an opposition party, as Mr. Allen generously and conscientiously defends President Wilson; the plea for a non-partisan administration of public affairs, abolishing political offices and placing the public business upon a basis of business efficiency is new and inspiring.

However much Mr. Allen's speech may have shocked the political nerves of the Bourbons of both the old parties, it was pleasing to the big audience that greeted him last night, and there is no reason to doubt that it will be approved by the people of progressive Kansas who have paid dearly in money and in the sacrifice of the public welfare for the system of politics which Mr. Allen has the courage to denounce.—Kansas City Star.

People Tired of Misrule.

Throughout the business world there is deep resentment against the Democratic administration and its supporters in congress. The halt in prosperity is directly charged against the administration policy. In the South this resentment is even more marked than in the North. Seaport cities which counted upon big commercial development following the opening of the Panama canal are now listless, feeling that the taxing of American shipping destroys the chief hope of competing with the railroads.

DUTY MUST BE FIRST ORDER

Necessary That Congressmen Be Made to Attend to the Business of the Country.

Washington dispatches tell us that the house authorities have been using drag-net methods to secure a quorum so that legislative business can be transacted.

There is a regulation having the force of law which forbids representatives to absent themselves from duty unless they are ill or there is serious illness in their families. No member is entitled to pay if he is absent without leave.

There are enough representatives in Washington at the present time to make much more than a quorum of the house, but they prefer the ball game and other things to the business of the people. The drag net is a figure of speech, and is useless. Try the patrol wagon.

The members of congress have been a long while at their work, but they are paid to do it, and they are expected to do it. If Speaker Clark would find some means to print publicly day after day the names of the absentees, he would have no trouble in keeping a quorum to consider and to pass bills.

The law which cuts off a member's salary if he is absent without legitimate excuse was enforced only once. A score or two of representatives lost their pay some days ago. They protested, but it did them no good. Later an attempt was made to pass a bill to give them the money that they did no earn, but it failed. What was done once might be done twice.

Some of the members of the house of representatives have been absent almost continuously for weeks, and not a few of them for months. There are others who are always in their seats attending to the country's business.

Every absentee, however, keeps a secretary at work answering letters from home. If the constituents of some congressmen knew the way they shirk duty, their names would disappear from the Congressional Directory.

Where Bryan Is Right.

While Secretary Bryan has given the country a great deal of unsound advice, he should freely be accorded credit for counsel that is practical and urgent. His insistence that Americans in Europe improve the first opportunity to leave the countries engaged in the present mighty struggle at the earliest possible moment and come home is a message that should be heeded. It is something that is also being urged by the British government and doubtless every other country participating in the war would be glad to have them out of it. Of course, the great mass of our countrymen there would be glad to be possessed of ways and means to get away and would not require any persuasion to make use of them, but there is a large contingent that enjoys the morbid excitement of the situation, and will hang on in spite of chances to leave, perhaps availing themselves of the relief that has been dispatched by the people and government of this country for the benefit of those who have been stranded against their own will and frequently to their serious distress. Their continued presence abroad is likely to make the maintenance of a strict neutrality on the part of this country more difficult, and, in brief, they are in the way where they are and a burden to countries that already have all they can do to take care of their own people. This call does not include such Americans as can serve the cause of humanity by remaining, but they are a comparatively small number, and the mere loafers and idlers should get out or be sent out.

Pay Heed to Roosevelt.

Colonel Roosevelt has been making a tour of Connecticut, Vermont, Maine and Massachusetts. His progress through Maine was most noteworthy in the matter of Progressive enthusiasm.

In Boston Colonel Roosevelt excited 2,000 Progressives to the highest pitch of enthusiasm when he read again the farewell promise with which he went to South America. He then vowed lifelong loyalty to the men and women who had gone in with him to fight for the new party and its principles.

There was the greatest interest in the condition of the colonel's voice and physique. After his return to Oyster Bay the World correspondent reported:

"The big result of his New England trip is the verdict it records both as to his strength and his larynx. Both stood the stress and strain of the past five days wonderfully well. To all appearances T. R. has 'come back' in first-class style."

We quote the World because its bitter personal hostility to Mr. Roosevelt lends weight to anything favorable that it can bring itself to say about him.

But There Are Many Others.

The state department is being joshed about sending an invitation to the Swiss navy to take part in the Panama display. If that was the only blunder chargeable to the state department it might be overlooked.

What Should Be Done.

A tariff bill, drawn on a conservative protection, and not on a Chinese wall, plan, put through the house in the spring of 1916 would not frighten or unsettle business of any character, or in any degree.

Work Weakens the Kidneys

Many occupations weaken the kidneys, causing aching backs, urinary disorders and a dull, drowsy, discouraged feeling. Work exposing one to chills, dampness or sudden changes; work in cramped positions; work amid the fumes of turpentine; constant riding on jolting vehicles, is especially hard on the kidneys.

Taken in time kidney trouble isn't hard to stop; neglected it is dangerous. As a kidney tonic, there is no other medicine so well recommended, so widely used and so universally successful as Doan's Kidney Pills.

HAS NO INJURIOUS EFFECT

Strong Denial That Presence of Tuberculosis Sanatoriums Is Detriment to Adjoining Property.

Convincing proof that tuberculosis sanatoriums or hospitals are not a menace to the health nor a detriment to the property of those living near such institutions is given in a pamphlet issued recently by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. In an extended study of the subject the association has not been able to find a single instance where a tuberculosis sanatorium has had an injurious effect on the health of anyone living near it, nor where it has had any lasting effect upon property values.

The pamphlet, entitled, "The Effect of Tuberculosis Institutions on the Value and Desirability of Surrounding Property," reviews all the studies made on the subject, takes up court decisions bearing on the question and contributes besides some original investigations of typical hospitals and the opinions of prominent men, life insurace companies and others. Nearly one hundred and fifty different istitutions are studied. In all these institutions not one case could be found where the assertions of opponents to their location, that a tuberculosis sanatorium would spread disease and injure property, could be substantiated. In fact, a number of instances were found where the presence of the sanatorium or hospital promoted outdoor living, tending to lower the death rate, and increase the market for produce and labor, thereby benefiting the community.

Memories of Old Luxemburg.

Luxemburg, whatever its claims to the protection of Great Britain, possesses one strange association with England that dates back 12 centuries. It is connected with the cult of St. Willibrod, the variously-spelled Saxon saint who helped to convert the Germans to Christianity—very imperfectly, as an Oxford don once dryly remarked. Every Whit Tuesday the memory of our English saint is honored at Luxemburg by a procession and religious dance which rank among the most curious survivals of medieval pageantry. Luxemburg is also a place which appeals to British naturalists, for one of the commonest birds in the public park there is the charming little black redstart, which is a rare winter visitor to England.—Daily Chronicle.

5 Women Avoid Operations

For years we have been stating in the newspapers of the country that a great many women have escaped serious operations by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it is true.

We are permitted to publish in this announcement extracts from the letters of five women. All have been recently received unsolicited. Could any evidence be more convincing?

1. Hodgdon, Me.—"I had pains in both sides and such a soreness I could scarcely straighten up at times. My back ached and I was so nervous I could not sleep, and I thought I never would be any better until I submitted to an operation, but I commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and soon felt like a new woman."—Mrs. Hayward Sowers, Hodgdon, Me.

2. Charlotte, N. C.—"I was in bad health for two years, with pains in both sides and was very nervous. I had a growth which the doctor said was a tumor, and I never would get well unless I had an operation. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I gladly say that I am now enjoying fine health."—Mrs. Rosa Sims, 16 Winona St., Charlotte, N. C.

3. Hanover, Pa.—"The doctor advised a severe operation, but my husband got me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I experienced great relief in a short time. Now I feel like a new person and can do a hard day's work and not mind it."—Mrs. Ada Wilt, 196 Stock St., Hanover, Pa.

4. Decatur, Ill.—"I was sick in bed and three of the best physicians said I would have to be taken to the hospital for an operation as I had something growing in my left side. I refused to submit to the operation and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—and it worked a miracle in my case, and I tell other women what it has done for me."—Mrs. Laura A. Griswold, 2300 Blk. East William Street, Decatur, Ill.

5. Cleveland, Ohio.—"I was very irregular and for several years my side pained me so that I expected to have to undergo an operation. Doctors said they knew of nothing that would help me. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I became regular and free from pain. I am thankful for such a good medicine and will always give it the highest praise."—Mrs. C. H. Griffith, 7305 Madison Av., Cleveland, O.

Constipation, if Neglected, Causes Serious Illness

Many cases of typhoid fever, appendicitis and other severe diseases are traceable to prolonged clogging of the bowels. Regarding the effects of constipation, C. E. Ayers, 6 Sabin St., Montpelier, Vt., says:

"I was afflicted with constipation and biliousness for years, and at times became so bad I would become unconscious. I have been found in that condition many times. Physicians did not seem to be able to do me any good. I would become weak and for days at a time could do no work. Not long ago I got a box of Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets, and after using them found I had never tried anything that acted in such a mild and effective manner. I believe I have at last found the remedy that suits my case."

Thousands of people are sufferers from habitual constipation and while possibly realizing something of the danger of this condition, yet neglect too long to employ proper curative measures until serious illness often results. The advice of all physicians is, "keep your bowels clean," and it's good advice.

THE MADAM JARLEY'S WONDERFUL WAX WORKS

This is the title of a peculiarly interesting attraction that is to be played at the auditorium of the city school tonight (Thursday) under auspices of the Methodist Ladies Aid Society.

Mrs. Beulah Martin, of Columbus, Ga., a reader of wide experience and reputation, is coaching the play. She opens the performance with some humorous sketches. It is then taken up by the various humorous characters whose performances are very productive of the heartiest laughter from start to finish.

The cast is composed of local persons whose personalities were selected to places they are to play. This together with the careful instruction of Mrs. Martin and the diligence of the players, insures a most enjoyable entertainment.

FOR SALE—One good horse perfectly gentle, which I will sell very reasonable.

Helping Kidneys By Clearing Blood

Most readers will be interested to more clearly understand why analysis of urine is so important. In the use of S. S. S. to purify the blood, its action is a stimulant to the myriad of fine blood vessels that make up the constructive tissues of the kidneys. All the blood from all over the body must pass through the kidneys. They act as testers and assayers. And according to what they allow to pass out in the urine, both as to quantity and materials, the health of the kidneys and the quality of the blood is determined. The catalytic energy forced by S. S. S. is shown in the urine. It is also demonstrated in the skin. And as the blood continues to sweep through the kidneys the dominating nature of S. S. S., acting as it does through all the avenues of elimination, shows a marked decrease of disease manifestations as demonstrated by urine analysis. This assistance is a great relief to the kidneys. The body wastes are more evenly distributed to the emunctories; their elimination is stimulated by the tonic action afforded the liver, lungs, skin and kidneys. Thus, in cases of rheumatism, cystitis, chronic sore throat, huskiness of voice, bronchitis, asthma and the myriad of other reflex indications of weak kidney action, first purify your blood with S. S. S., so it will enable the tissues to rebuild the cellular strength and regain the normal health.

S. S. S. is prepared by The Swift Specific Co., 527 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., and if you have any deep-seated or obstinate blood trouble, write to their Medical Dept. for free advice.

CORRECTIONS, NOTES, ETC., OF CO. SINGING CONVENTION

Editor Union-Banner:—In my report of the county Singing Convention near South Calera some mistakes, omissions etc, due probably to some Misunderstanding or over sight on the part of the printer, which I hope you will kindly correct. I wish to say to all concerned that the fault is not mine. We find in the report that "The convention was called to order by the President Prof. J. W. Hayes. My manuscript reads "The convention was called to order by the President," at that hour Prof. Hayes had not been elected. Prof. T. C. Jackson was the presiding officer. We find the name of M. V. Lowery seveal times in the report, that should not read M. V. Lawley.

The report says Prof. Jackson presided the second day. The Manuscript reads "Second day. President Jackson presiding". The resolutions relative to President Jackson, should read 'We tender him our thanks, realizing that his labors have been largely conducive to the success of the convention'. The resolutions also contained thanks to Prof. Davis of Birmingham for his talk, and to the great author of Sacred Music. This was the best session in the convention's history. The directing by Misses Isabel and Bettie Jackson of Birmingham was among the finest we ever saw. While Miss Isabel sang "Alabama", we never witnessed a convention so moved, it was Just wonderful. Miss Lela Davis of South Chilton did some fine directing. The skillful Blankenship was there, The polished Davis of Birmingham. The well known Lawley. The Jackson Brothers. Prof. Hodgens, Prof. Vandiver of Montevallo, Profs. Martin, Hayes and Lowery, Prof. Teel. The Retiring President Prof. Jackson, Prof. Davis of South Chilton, The efficient Williams, Prof. Armstrong, and last but Not least the Venerable Prof. N.A. Dobbs. All doing good work.

Secretary.

Crimson Clover

Crimson clover is a demonstrated success on practically every soil type in the South where drainage is good. Its ability to succeed on nearly every kind of land in the cotton belt, from waxy clays to light sandy loams, makes it one of the best winter cover arops and soil builders for cultivated fields in this region.

INOCULATION. Crimson clover gathers nitrogen from the air by means of a particular kind of bacteria that exists on its roots. If these bacteria are not present in the soil the clover will be a sure failure. The same bacteria that are found on the roots of crimson clover also live on the roots of red clover, common white clover, and carolina clover, hence, in seeding crimson clover on land where it or one of the above clovers has not been successfully grown, it is necessary to inoculate the land. This is done by broadcosting from 200 to 500 pounds per acre of dirt from a field where crimson clover, red clover or one of the small white clovers have been grown. When soil for inoculating purposes is scarce, fairly satisfactory inoculation can be had in the following manner: Boil one pound of glue in two gallons of water. Spread out thin on a cloth or wagon sheet one bushel of clover seed and sprinkle with the glue until the seed are thoroughly moist; then spread over the seed 200 pounds of dirt taken from a field where crimson clover has been grown. In this way, small particles of the inoculating soil will cling to each seed and 200 pounds of dirt can be made to inoculate seed for three acres.

The inoculation should be made at the time of seeding and the soil should be harrowed immediately as there is danger of the hot sun destroying the bacteria when left on the surface.

It must be clearly borne in mind that crimson clover is certain to be a failure unless the soil is inoculated.

SEEDING. Crimson clover does best on well prepared, well drained, well settled and a fairly fertile seed bed. The middles of a clean cultivated cotton field make an almost ideal seed bed for sowing crimson clover. The time of seeding is determined by the latitude. When sown too early the young plants are liable to be killed by the hot, dry weather. In the northern third of the cotton belt probably the best rerults are obtained by sowing between September 1st and October 10th; in the central third of the cotton belt from September 10th to October 20th; and in the southern third of the cotton belt from September 20th to November 1st. Successful growers of crimson clover, appreciating that the hot sun and the dry condition of the soil affect germination, usually endeavor to sow just after a rain or when there is prospect of rain.

Seed may be sown by hand or an inexpensive clover seeder. Never less han 15 and preferably 20 pounds of seed per acre should be sown if good stands are to be obtained. Just after the first picking, is an excellent time to seed crimson clover in cotton fields. The seed should be sown broadcast and lightly harrowed in with a spike to spring-tooth harrow. Poor stands frequently result from covering too deep.

CRIMSON CLOVER as a fertilizer. Nitrogen in the form of nitrate of soda and cottonseed meal costs from 15 to 20 cents per pound, and is by far the most expensive fertilizing element that the soutnern farmer has to buy. 35,000 tons of atmospheric nitrogen lie above every acre of land in the South. Crimson clover has the power to collect and store this nitrogen in the plant at the rate of from 75 to 125 ponnds per acre. In other words, an acre of good crimson clover, where the entire crop is turned under, has the fertilizing value of 750 pounds of nitrate of soda or 1,800 pounds of cottonseed meal.

[NOTE—Mr. W. H. Conway, county farm demonstrator, has furnished us with a large amount of information that will be valuable to our farmers who are interested in the growing of crimson and burr clover on their farms. Space will not permit our using all these articles at one time; hut we shall publish them in weekly installments until the entire series has been inserted.—Ed.]

REMEMBER YOUR LAST DOSE OF CALOMEL?

You probably recall the bad after-effects of the calomel more than the sickness you took it for. You need never again go throngh with being "all knocked out for a day or two by calomel.

Next time your liver gets sluggish and inactive, we urge that you go to Alred Drug Company for a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, a splendid vegetable liquid medicine that will start your liver as surely as calomel ever did and with none of the after-effects of calomel. It is absolutely harmless both to children and adults and demands no restriction of habits or diet.

A large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone costs fifty cents and the druggists who sell it guarantee it to take the place of calomel, and will refund your money if it fails in your case or if you are not satisfied.

FARMERS COTTON LEAGUE

Whereas, there is no price on cotton at present, we, the farmers of Cross Roads district No. 41, Chilton county, Ala., in mass meeting assembled Sept. 12, 1914, do hereby set a price of not less than ten cents per pound on our cotton in the payment of our debts, and ask the co-operation of all farmers of the state in this movement.

We also ask the farmers of Chilton county to meet in their respective school districts Saturday, Sept. 19, at 2 p.m., and take uction in accordance with the above resolution, and elect delegates to a county mass meeting at the above named place one mile south of Thorsby, on Saturday, Sep. 26, 1914.

ROOSEVELT SPEAKS TO PROGRESSIVES IN WEST

Col. Theodore Roosevelt Monday plunged into the second day of speech making of his Western tour. His first address of the day was in Kansas City, Mo., where at noon he addressed the Progressives of Jackson County.

In his address here Colonel Roosevelt laid particular stress on the appeal made by the Progressive Party to the people to think out political problems for themselves.

"The fundamental appeal I have to make to the American people is that they be true to themselves," he said.

"The Republican Party of today says to you 'Don't abandon the party of Abraham Lincoln.' I say to you 'Don't abandon the principles of Abraham Lincoln.'"

The Colonel asserted that whiskey was usually an ally of crooked politics and complimented the Progressive Party of Jackson County, Mo., for "having the courage to face the issue, while the other parties sidestepped."

Speaking of industrial and labor conditions, he said:

"We want prosperity and an ample reward for invested capital, and without giving the latter we can't have the former. However, we want to see that a just share of that prosperity goes to the man who works and without whom nothing could be produced. The Republicans would give too much to a few men while the Democrats would not give enough to any man."

The theatre where the meeting was held was crowded and there were many women present.

Alabama State Exposition

Montgomery, Ala.—Over one hundred race horses from barns in Kentucky, Illinois, Arkansas, Tennessee, Georgia and Alabama have been entered for the races which will be held at the state exposition at Montgomery, October 12-17. Many of the horses have established good marks, and the interest among the race horse men is very keen as shown by the interesting letters received by General Secretary Barnes. Some of the fastest horses in the South have been entered for the meet which will last for six days. Entries were received this week from race barns in Illinois and Arkansas.

Conditions In Louisiana

Editor Union-Banner:—Please give me space in your paper to say a few words. We are having hard times in Louisiana now; no sale for cotton, paying from 20 to 25 cents per pound for meat, milk cows sell for 40 to 70 dollars. Nearly every farmer is in debt from fifty to a thousand dollars. All have more religion than they need, but cant eat it. I am through gathering corn; made plenty to do me; have fifty head of good hogs. Plenty to do me for next year; all is O.K. Success to the Union-Banner.

Negro Woman Kills Husband

As the result of a family quarrel last Saturday, near Maplesville, Buvil Johnson, a negro man was shot and instantly killed by his wife, Alice Johnson. From the information obtatned it appears that they were both drunk, or nearly so. The woman was arrested Sunday by Deputy Smitherman, and brought to jail here. She makes no statements as to the cause of the shooting.

In another shooting which occurred near Maplesville on the same day, James Williams, a colored man, was snot in the back by Orange Johnson. The injuries, though very severe, are not thought to be fatal. Johnson was tried by the city authorities of Maplesville, who released him upon the verdict that he was justified in defending himself against Williams's offenses.

Oak Hill

The singing at this place last Sunday evening was quite a success. The music was conducted by Prof. James Franklin, assisted by Prof. Smith and others. The duets sung by Miss Carrie Dorminy and Mr. Franklin were excellent, also the one sung by Mr. Glass and Miss Dorminy. Misses Esther Shaw and Carrie Dorminy presided at the organ. We are planning to hold the next county convention at this place.

NOTICE TO TEACHERS

The Teachers, Reading Circle for Chilton County will meet at the following places on September 26, at ten o'clock a. m:—Thorsby in the Institute building; at Maplesville in the school building; and at Clanton in the court house.

We urge that all teachers who want to obtain a reading circle certificate to be present at one of the places, as there will be a summary of the books used during last year and an introduction given to the books to be used this year.

FOR SALE—Burr and Crimson Clover seed. See or write me for prices. W. E. Thomas, Jemison, Ala. 9-17-2t

BIBB COUNTY MEN WILL HOLD COTTON

Eighty-four farmers and business men of Bibb County have agreed to hold 317 bales of cotton from market until price shall have reached 10 cents or higher. Action to this effect was taken Saturday at a mass meeting held in the court house.

With this as a nucleus, it is believed that every farmer of the county can be prevailed upon to hold at least one bale of his crop from the market in the effort to get the price of 10 cents.

The mass meeting adopted resolutions calling upon Congress to come to the rescue of the Southern cotton grower through amendments to the reserve act so as to allow reserve banks to lend money on bonded warehouse receipts at the rate of at least 8 cents per pound. The resolution also called upon local banks to get the best arrangements possible from their correspondents for the handling of the crop.

The meeting also took up the cotton seed question, asking that farmers of the county designate the quantity of seed which they had for sale, and arrange holding untill a price of $20 should be secured.

Editor Union-Banner:—Will you please allow me space in your dear old paper to say a few words to the readers?

At this time the health of this community is fairly good.

The prayer meeting and Sunday school at Macedonia Sunday was good.

Weddings over this way recently have been incidents of very great interest; and it is probable that they will continue to be foa some time yet.

What have become of the letter writers who used to write to the Banner? I sure did enjoy them, and hope they will resume their activities along that line. If this misses the waste basket I will come again.

[Note—The writer of the above letter is one who wrote for the paper years ago. For some time she has been silent, but we are glad to see her letter coming again. There are others whom we would be glad to see take up their pens and send us news of their communities.—Editor.]

A Vision

In the year 1912 I was in a trance, and went through a vision. There was let down from heaven a mantle with three divisions, and in every division there was what each class of people was worshiping. So God has frowned on every nation, and I am warning this nation as well as all others, to lay aside every idle thing and worship God and Him alone, for there shall be no other gods before Him. If we fail to lay aside these idols and worship God, we shall be utterly destroyed, as the eastern nations are now. So let's take heed of the things we see and hear.

Public Speakings

There will be speaking in the interest of the Progressive ticket at the following times and places:

Cross Roads School House, Beat 9, Tuesday, Sept. 29 at 7, p.m.

McCary School House, Beat 15, Thursday, Oct 1, at 7, p.m.

All voters of whatever political affiliation, are cordially invited to be present, and hear the present campaign; they will be presented by able and competent speakers.

Bids Wanted

Notice is hereby given that at a regular meeting of the Commisssoners court of Chilton county, Alabama, on the 14th day of Sept., 1914, a resolution was adopted providing for building or constructing a public highway from Clanton to the line of Chilton and Shelby counties near South Calera by way of Thorsby and Jemison in Chilton county along or near the line of the present highway between said points.

Said road to be built by grading, chirting or graveling, the work to be done by contract, and said contract to be let to the lowest bidder under seal bids to be deposited with the Judge of Probate on or before the 29th day of October, 1914.

Said bid shall set forth the number of miles in length and the kind of road, whether graded chirted or graveled and the charge for each kind. Said bids shall be made under plans or specifications to be provided by J. B. Converse, Civil Engineer of Selma, Ala.

The payment for the building of said highway to be made by the county, by issuing county warrants payable in annual installments from one to three years; all persons offering to bid on said contract for the building of said road or any section or any number of miles of same may deposit their bids in sealed envelopes marked bids for county road work, and addressed to Commissioners Court, on or before 12 o'clock the 26th day of October, 1914, at which time said bids will be passed upon by the Court; the court reserving the right to reject any or all bids. Contractors bidding will be requested, as evidence of good faith in making bids, to deposit with said bid a certified check for $750.00, or to deposit same with the Judge of Probate on or before said bids are opened and passed upon by the Court.

E. B. Deason, Judge of Probate.

MUNICIPAL ELECTION TOWN OF CLANTON

Much interest was centered in the election of officials for the town of Clanton Monday. There were three tickets out, and each one was making zealous efforts to capture the winning scores.

The successful one was the ticket headed by E. M. Pinckard for Mayor, with the following Councilmen: W. W. Fox, J. B. Downs, W. L. Popwell, W. A. Kemp, F. R. Woodyard.

The new officers will succeed the present administration, which is composed of E. A. Matthews, Mayor, and V. J. Gragg, E. M. Pinckard, W. H. Sartor, M. L. White, F. R. Woodyard, Councilmen. None of the former officers were re-elected except E. M. Pinckard, who will take charge of the duties of Mayor and F. R. Woodyard, who retains his former place on the Council.

All Day Singing

There will be an all day singing at Walnut Creek church on the 4th sunday in September. Everybody come and bring your baskets and books, Perennial Praise.

Cotton Ginned In Chilton

There were 67 bales of cotton ginned in Chilton county from the crop of 1914, prior to September 1st, 1914, as compared with 212 bales ginned prior to September 1st, 1913. The above figures are from the official report as compiled for the bureau of government statistics by R. J. Jones, special agent for this county.

Notice.

As my work calls me away, I will close this season with my horse at Thorsby. He will be at Mars Hill Friday, Sept. 25, and every nine days thereafter, and will be also back here for spring season.

STORIES OF GERMAN ATROCITIES NOT PROVED, SAYS AMERICAN WRITER

The Chicago Tribune prints a long copyrighted dispatch from James O'Donnell Bennett, staff correspondent, dated at Aix-la-Chapelle, Germany, which in specific detail disputes and denies the charges of cruelties and atrocities lodged against the Germans in Belgium. Mr. Bennett, in company with John T. McCutcheon of the Chicago Tribune, Irvin S. Cobb of the Saturday Evening Post, Roger Lewis of the Associated Press and Harry Hansen of the Chicago Daily News, traveled 100 miles through 20 towns and their observations lead him to the firm conviction that the reports of barbarities alleged to have been perpetrated by German troops are falsehoods.

The following dispatch to the Associated Press, evidently forwarded by Roger Lewis, is in substantial agreement with Mr. Bennett's story in the Chicago Tribune:

By the Associated Press.

New York.—An Associated Press staff correspondent of American birth and antecedents, who was sent from the New York office and was caught in Brussels at the time of the German invasion, held as a prisoner for several days, and who finally escaped to Holland, has sent by mail the following story of his experiences:

"The night before the Germans entered Brussels, when the Belgian civil guards and refugees began pouring into the city from the direction of Louvain, they brought stories of unspeakable German atrocities, maltreatment of old men and children, and the violation of women.

"The Belgian capital reeled with apprehension. Within an hour the gayety, the vivacity, and brilliancy of the city went out like a broken arc light. The radiance of the cafes was exchanged for darkness; whispering groups of residents broke up hurriedly and locked themselves into their homes, where they put up the shutters and drew in their tri-colored Belgian flags.

Fears of Brussels Quieted.

"The historic Belgian city went through a state of morbid consternation, remarkably like that from which it suffered on June 18, 1815, when it trembled with the fear of a French victory at Waterloo.

"In less than 24 hours the Belgian citizens were chatting comfortably with the German invaders and the allegations of German brutality and demoniacal torture dissolved into one of the myths which have accompanied all wars.

"Neither in Brussels nor in its environs was a single offensive act, so far as I know, committed by a German soldier. In a city of over half a million people, invaded by a hostile army of perhaps a quarter of a million soldiers, no act sufficiently flagrant to demand punishment or to awaken protest came to my attention.

None Knows of Outrages.

"The frightful reports that had preceded the German army into Brussels included the disemboweling of old men and the impaling of children on lances just outside Louvain. Investigation not only failed to substantiate these rumors, but could not even discover any one in the immediate vicinity who credited them.

"An eye witness of unimpeachable veracity told me that the worst behavior he had observed during the first German entry into Louvain (August 19) was that of a German soldier who leaned from his horse and kissed a pretty Flemish girl who brought him a glass of beer.

"I marched for days with the German columns, often only one day behind the fighting, with the houses that had been burned still smoldering, the ground freshly broken by shell and trampled by horses and men, and the memory of the German advance vivid in the minds of the inhabitants.

No Proofs of Murder.

"I interviewed an average of twenty persons in each of a dozen towns and found only one instance of a noncombatant who had been killed without a justifiable provocation. In this case the evidence did not clearly prove that the man had been wantonly murdered.

"He lived in one of the typical small Belgian countryside houses which combine the comforts of home with the lure of a small public bar. This house was at the north of Merbes-le-Chateau, a town through which a large part of the German army passed on the road to Maubeuge.

"A son of the murdered man, whose name was Arthur Nicodem, showed me blood clots on the floor marking the place where Nicodem fell, his throat cut by a saw-edged German saber.

English Fired From House.

"It was said by some inhabitants that the murdered man showed a pair of binoculars; but a more probable explanation is that English outposts had concealed themselves in the house, from which they poured a rain of fire upon the first German invaders. The inference that the shooting was done by Belgian civilians may have inflamed the Germans to reprisals.

"In that neighborhood four houses had been burned and one was still ablaze as I passed on Wednesday, Aug. 26.

"This town of Merbes-le-Chateau, which had been the scene of an unimportant skirmish between the Germans and English on the previous Sunday, was riddled with rifle shots. The small number of windows intact showed that the Germans had made a deliberate assault upon the residents of the town. But the inhabitants themselves admitted that all of the shooting had been done by a comparatively small number of Germans, and that the firing had not been begun until English soldiers who had concealed themselves in the houses had fired first upon the Germans.

News of Incident Goes Far.

"I have emphasized the one fatality of the noncombatant because the news of it traveled up and down the Sambre and across to Hantes-Wiberie and Soire-sur-Sambre, multiplying as it went and developing ghastly and inhuman details until it seemed an unanswerable reproach to the whole German empire.

"With this one possible exception, I did not encounter in Nivelles, in Binche, Buissiere, or Soire-sur-Sambre, or any of the other towns I visited, a single incident of mistreatment or any sort by German officers or soldiers.

"Bruissiere—particularly the lower part of the city—had been virtually destroyed by a cross fire from French and German artillery. Tops of breweries had been hurled bodily to the ground, and walls had either disappeared or become grotesquely dislodged.

Burgomaster Denies Reports.

"Into this town 130 French killed and more than a hundred wounded were brought in a single day. August Blairiaux, burgomaster, said that he knew of no cases of German cruelties, except distant rumors which he had learned to discredit. It ought to be said to the credit of the Belgians that they have not allowed their bitterness toward the Germans to carry them into unfair recrimination.

"Robert J. Thompson, American consul at Aachen, visited Liege during and after the capture of the forts. It is the opinion of Mr. Thompson that no outrage was committed by Germans during the several days' fighting there.

"There are, of course, reported outrages beyond investigation, either on account of their vagueness or because it is impossible to weigh the provocation. It is known, for instance, that 112 natives were killed in Renouchamp, not far from Ardennes; German soldiers say that they were killed because they fired upon them from the roofs and windows of the houses.

Differ on Louvain Incident.

"The history of the absolute destruction of the historic city of Louvain with its cathedral and its university is by this time well known. The German version of this is that the inhabitants, under the direction of the burgomaster, established themselves in the church, where they also installed a machine gun. They proceeded to greet the Germans with a deadly fire.

"The Belgians say, on the other hand, that part of the German army, mistaking one of their own retiring divisions for the enemy, opened fire upon them, whereupon, deluded into thinking this an assault by Belgian civilians, the Germans razed the city.

"I have not been able to acquire any direct evidence in regard to these last two instances, but the explanation generally credited by disinterested persons is that the Belgians, who had laid down their arms, according to the burgomaster's proclamation on the entrance of the enemy, took them up again when it looked as if the Germans were retreating from the town, and opened fire from their windows upon a retiring German train.

Jarotzsky Tells Outrages.

"The most authoritative German denial of German offense comes from Maj. Gen. Thaddeus von Jarotzsky, military governor of Brussels, who informed me that in numerous cases he had been received with a pretense of friendliness by Belgian civilians, who later fired upon the German soldiers from windows and from between the roof tiles. This was done, he said, after a declaration of surrender by the burgomaster and a proclamation warning the citizens against any show of resistance.

"In such violations of the rules of war, the general said, he punished the offender by burning the houses from which the shots were fired.

"I can only say that in every case of reported outrage or reprisal which was susceptible of investigation I have found either that the outrage was a figment of the Belgian mind or that it was more than half excused by circumstances.

"The prevalence of the Belgian practice of sniping from the houses was perhaps indicated by the warning of the German officer who acted as guard for five American correspondents, including myself, who were being taken as prisoners from Beaumont to Aachen in an army train. We were advised to lie down on the floor of the car as the Belgian snipers would shoot at us from the houses. But there was no firing.

"This, of course, is not a brief for the German army; it is an account of German conduct as it appeared to an impartial observer who had the rather extraordinary opportunity of traveling for days with the German columns, over a distance of more than a hundred miles through a dozen important cities and towns.

"Sometimes I was near enough to the front to see the white artillery smoke spurt into clouds along the horizon and hear the double detonations which came from artillery at short range. At other times I trailed behind through the desolate waste which a victorious army leaves behind it.

Pay All and Tip Well.

"On the contrary, I witnessed numerous cases of the most careful courtesy on the part of German soldiers. In Brussels they not only paid their cafe bills, but tipped generously. Along the road, when a German officer or soldier entered a Belgian house for food or shelter, it was not with a demand but a request. In spite of the confusion and errors which arose from a strange tongue there was almost no friction of any sort.

"The German soldiers were punctiliously considerate and polite to women and children, apologizing for the discomfort they were causing. Upon leaving a house where they have been given shelter, I have seen them shake hands with the concierge, peasant woman, or in some cases with the gentlewoman of a Belgian villa, as pleasantly as if they were bidding adieu to their hostess at a week-end house party.

"So many instances of this sort are at hand that a recital of them would be tedious.

"Naturally inclined to be gruff with their soldiers, the German officers always gave the French prisoners a pleasant word, and treated them with every consideration. Not a single exception to this civility toward prisoners has come to my attention.

"A French lieutenant and two English officers traveled with us in the prison train from Beaumont to Aachen, a halting journey which took over thirty-six hours. The train was crowded with German wounded and French and English prisoners, and there was nothing to eat or drink, except a few fragments of rye bread, hard as a stone, and a little liquid compound of chicory, which in Belgium masquerades under the name of coffee. Since there was not enough even of this disheartening fare to go around, German officers went without food so that the prisoners might be fed.

Aid Owners of Cafe.

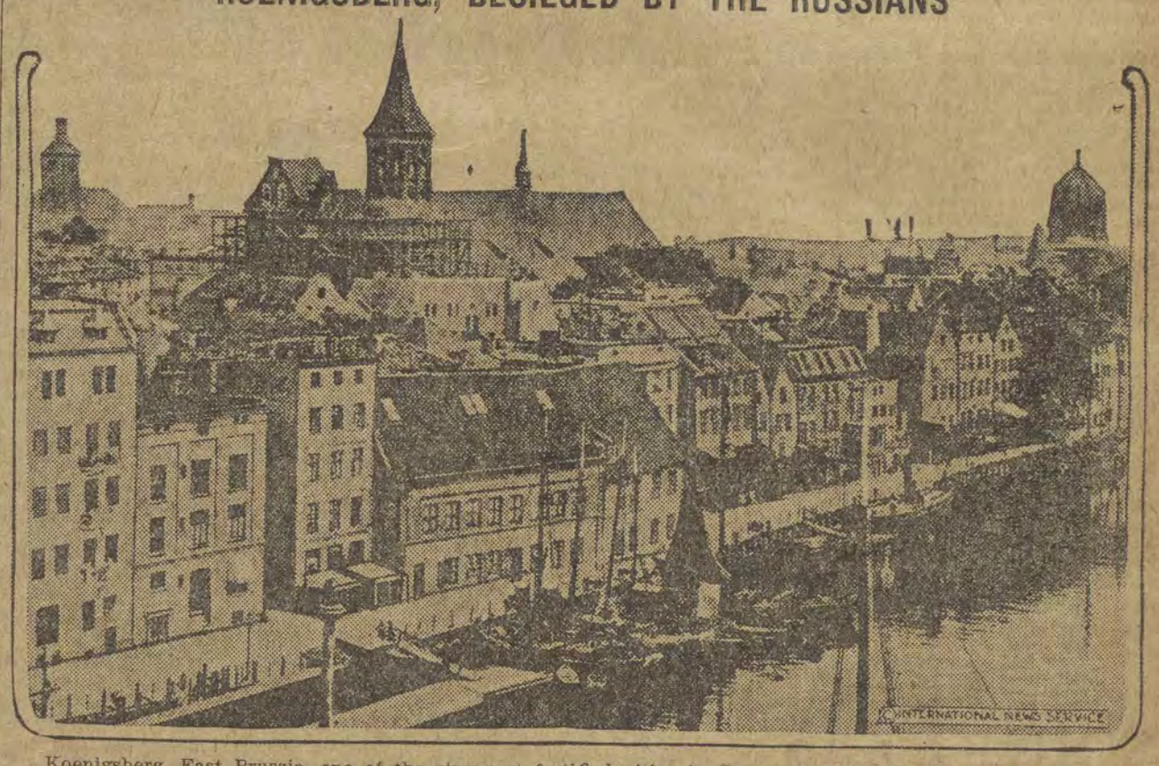
"In a little cafe in Beaumont, concierge and madame had fled before the approach of the soldiers and abandoned their business. Two officers found them in hiding, brought them back, and in a day they had taken in more money than in any previous week in their career.

"These incidents could be indefinitely prolonged, but they would only offer additional support to a point that I think I have already established—the universal kindliness of German soldiers as I have observed them.

"I have seen perhaps half a dozen cases of drunkenness in observing nearly 1,000,000 soldiers, and these few were only good-naturedly maudlin. In Beaumont while I was detained for 24 hours in the small cafe previously mentioned, with an armed guard at the door, although specifically told that I was not an ordinary prisoner, a swaggering petty officer of some sort, lunged toward me and showed me the sharp convincing edge of his sword, insisting that I run my hand across it.

Warned to Avoid Drinking.

"German discipline and German training seem to have put into the German soldier an exemplary behavior which is nothing less than remarkable. Before I fell asleep on the floor of the Beaumont cafe, with two German soldiers' guns slanting almost over me, I heard the petty officer who was in charge of us, giving instructions to the guards, which included the statement that any one of us who stirred outside the door should be shot. Then he counseled them, almost in a fatherly way to drink only moderately, stating that if they became drunk he would recommend a sentence of 15 years in the penitentiary.



"If the conduct of the German soldier errs at all it is on the side of a too complete subordination. It is impossible for any one who has seen much of the German system to believe in the tales of deliberate depredations and unsoldierly conduct."

KAISER ADDRESSES TROOPS AT VIRTON

Rotterdam.—The Cologne Gazette reports that the German emperor delivered a speech to his troops after the battle of Virton, near Longwy, when he visited his son, Prince Oscar, who is commandant of the grenadiers.

The kaiser appeared in the evening with his suite in five automobiles. He kissed his son and then walked along the lines greeting the men, who were quartered in the village. Standing in the middle of the square, the kaiser said:

"I greet you as your chief. I thank you. I have often seen your regiment on parade and now it gives me particular pleasure to greet you on conquered land.

"Your regiment fought as I expected and as your fathers fought in 1871. The battle of Virton will be eternally inscribed in letters of gold in the history of the war.

"Our comrades in the eastern army also fought gallantly, also the army of the crown prince. The fourth army, under the duke of Wurtemberg, advanced victoriously. Our enemies are withdrawing in flight.

"The eastern army has driven three Russian corps over the frontier. Two Russian corps capitulated on the open field. Sixty thousand men and two generals were taken prisoners.

"For all these victories we have to thank but one—that is our God, who is ever over us."

FARMER'S WIFE TOO ILL TO WORK

A Weak, Nervous Sufferer Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Kasota, Minn.—"I am glad to say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done more for me than anything else, and I had the best physician here. I was so weak and nervous that I could not do my work and suffered with pains low down in my right side for a year or more. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now I feel like a different person. I believe there is nothing like Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for weak women and young girls, and I would be glad if I could influence anyone to try the medicine, for I know it will do all and much more than it is claimed to do."—Mrs. CLARA FRANKS, R. F. D. No. 1, Maplecrest Farm, Kasota, Minn.

Women who suffer from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should be convinced of the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health by the many genuine and truthful testimonials we are constantly publishing in the newspapers.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

RUSSIANS CAPTURE TOWNS OF GALICIA

RUSSIANS ARE PREPARING FOR ATTACK ON PRZEMYSL—TO MAKE FINAL EFFORT.

PROVISIONED FOR 2 YEARS

Paris.—An official announcement by Russian headquarters sent by the Petrograd correspondent of the Havas Agency says:

"The Russian troops have captured the fortified positions of Siniva and Sambor (in Galicia). The Austrian rear guard has been thrown back beyond the San river in the region of Radymno and Medyka. The Austrians destroyed the bridges on the San in the region of Sandomir and Radomysl.

"The Russians captured 3,000 prisoners and 22 cannon in the region of Memirov and have taken 3,000 cases of ammunition."

Rome.—A report received here from the Austro-Italian frontier says that 300,000 Austrian troops are watching the Italian border. Trieste has been left with a garrison of only 20,000 men.

London.—The Austrians, supported by German re-enforcements, have established a new line of defense against which the Russian left wing, commanded by Gens. Broussiloff and Ruszsky, is expected to be hurled in their assault on Pryemysl.

A Rome dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company says:

"Dispatches from Vienna state that the Austrians fortified an extended new defense front. Gen. Boycerigz will command the right wing, with his center resting at Przemysl. The center will be commanded by Gen. von Auffenberg, with Tarnow as his base and the left wing will be commanded by Gen. Dankl."

The new Austrian fortified position presents a defensive front which reaches as far as Cracow. It is thought to be a final effort of the Austrians to save the remnants of their army.

It is reported that the Russian Black Sea fleet is waiting at the entrance of the Bosphorus ready to pounce upon the Turkish warships the moment the Ottoman empire declares war upon the allies.

That Russia, probably within 60 days, will have 5,000,000 men in the field in the east, while a million more will be ready to fill the gaps caused by the fighting on the East Prussian and Austrian frontiers, is the burden of another dispatch from Petrograd.

ALLIES FIGHT IN STORMS

Battle Against Germans in Northern France Continues—Rheims Bombarded with Heavy Guns.

London.—In the midst of heavy gales, the battle between the allied forces and the Germans in Northern France continues, apparently with unabated fury, after six days of fighting.

Seemingly the most serious engagements have occurred around Rheims, on the plateau of Caronne and near Noyon.

The French official statement announces the capture of prisoners near Craonne, in what is termed "a rather serious engagement" with the Twelfth and Fifteenth German corps. The Germans in this vicinity have carried out a number of violent attacks, which, however, are reported to have been repulsed.

The town of Rheims has been under bombardment for three days, the Germans using their heavy guns from a distance of three miles, and pouring a veritable rain of shells on the place, which is one of the most historically interesting cities in France.

It was from this town that Joan of Arc expelled the English in 1429. The famous Cathedral of Notre Dame, dating from the thirteenth century, is reported to have been struck by German shells.

British authorities give out no statement as to the progress of the battle, but have issued a list of officers killed in action during recent days. The list contains the names of Capt. R. N. Grenfell, the polo player; Capt. Lord Guernsey, eldest son of the earl of Ailesford, and Col. F. R. F. Boileau of the general staff, who died later of his wounds.

Berlin.—Denial is given the report of the death of Col. von Reuter, who was in command of the German regiment at the time of the Zabern affair.

London.—The Germans resumed their attacks on the allies' left wing, which is made up of French and British forces, but after a fierce fight were repulsed with heavy losses.

Citizens Threatened.

Paris.—During the Germans' stay in Rheims they took 100 hostages and issued a proclamation threatening to hang the inhabitants if disorders occurred. They also exacted a $200,000 war contribution and Prince Albert, the kaiser's son, left with the money.

London.—A dispatch to the Evening News from Venice says that the outside of the Austrian dreadnaught Viribus Unitis was badly damaged in a fight in the Adriatic, but she escaped her pursuers.

QUEEN OF BELGIUM

GERMANS RETREAT 100 MILES

Were Knocking at Gates of Paris Only Fortnight Ago—Prepare for Big Battle.

London.—The German army, which less than a fortnight ago was at the "gates of Paris," and the right wing of which then extended southeast of the French capital, is drawn up on almost a straight line, extending from the neighborhood of Noyon, in the west, to Bois Forges on the Meuse, north of Verdun, with its left resting on the German fortress of Metz.

Thus the right wing, at least, has gone back more than 70 miles in two weeks, while the rest of the army also has had to retire before the whole could find ground on which to make another stand against the advance of the allies.

There seems little doubt that the Germans intend to give battle on this line, with the River Aisne in front of their center and the mountains and forest of Argonne on their left. They went back steadily before the French and English armies, fighting only rear guard actions until their right, in command of Gen. von Kluck, got across the Aisne. Then they turned and delivered several counter attacks which, however, according to British official reorts, were repulsed, the Germans leaving 200 prisoners in the hands of the British.

SAY AUSTRIANS HEMMED IN

Great Fortresses of Przemysl Heavily Discounted by Russians' Position. Enemy Is Surrounded.

London.—A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company from Petrograd says that after the capture of Opole and Tourobine, Russian forces have hemmed the enemy into an angle formed by the junction of the River Vistula and the River San.

The Morning Post's Petrograd correspondent says:

"With the Russians already south of the San River, the significance of Przemysl and the other strongholds of the district have been heavily discounted. These fortresses were intended to cover the great triangle between the Vistula and San rivers and the Carpathian mountains. They have proved useless for that purpose and the question now is whether the beaten and demoralized armies can even reach safety at Cracow. Other refuge there is none. The situation looks almost as bad for the eastern as for the western armies of the Germanic allies."

SERBS INVADING HUNGARY

150,000 Troops Make Inroads Into Dual Monarchy—Will Join Russian Force in West.

London.—According to a statement issued here by the Servian legation, there are now in Hungary at least 150,000 Servian troops successfully pushing an offensive movement against the forces of the dual monarchy.

The Austrians are entrenching at all strategic points on all the roads leading to Budapest. A large Servian army is marching toward Frashkagora, a position of great importance, the purpose being to render secure the Servian left flank.

Continuing, the legation declares that in Bosnia the Servians are besieging Vishnegrad and that their advance line is nearing Sarayevo, which is strongly fortified, and where desperate fighting is expected.

The prediction is made that a junction soon will be effected with a Russian army sweeping to the westward.

GERMAN OFFICERS KILLED.

Men Who Figured in Alsace Scandal Die in Battle.

London.—A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph from the Hague says it is reported there that the German officers, Col. von Reuter and Lieut. Baron von Forstner, both central figures in the Zazern (Alsace) army scandal last year, were killed the same day in different engagements—Col. von Reuter near Louvain and Baron von Forstner near Dixmuyden.

SCHOOLS TO MAKE MONTHLY REPORTS

Normal, Agricultural and County Schools Must Hereafter Make Reports to State Department.

NEWS LETTER FROM CAPITAL

Happenings in and About Alabama's State House Interestingly Told.

—Montgomery.

Monthly reports will hereafter be filed in the office of the State Department of Education by the County high schools, the State Normal schools and the district agricultural schools, according to an announcement made by W. F. Feagin, State Superintendent of Education.

These reports have not been required heretofore. In the reports the executive officers will tell of the work being done and of its monthly progress. He will also be required to set forth the needs of the school and other details of school work.

There are fifty-three county high schools, ten agricultural schools and six State Normal schools in Alabama.

Hobdy to Succeed Baker.

Prof. N. R. Baker, State Supervisor of Rural Schools, has resigned, and J. B. Hobdy of Auburn has been appointed in his place, the changes being effective October 1, it was announced by W. F. Feagin, State Superintendent of Education. Professor Baker resigned to accept the position of Assistant County Superintendent of Education of Jefferson county, which comes in the nature of a promotion.

Professor Baker was appointed as State Supervisor of Rural Schools in 1911 by H. J. Willingham, at that time State Superintendent of Education. He has done much excellent work for the rural schools of the State and has compiled some of the most interesting data concerning the rural schools of the State that has ever been published. In his new position he will have an opportunity for doing much good educational work. He formerly lived in Jefferson county and is well known to all the educational workers there.

Professor Hobdy, who succeeds Professor Baker, is one of the best known educational workers in the State. He began his career as a member of the faculty of the Seventh District Agricultural School in Albertville, of which W. F. Feagin was at that time president. He served in this position from 1897 to 1901, when he succeeded Mr. Feagin as president when Mr. Feagin resigned to become connected with the Department of Education.

For ten years Professor Hobdy served as president of the Albertville school, when he resigned to accept a position in the Auburn faculty in 1911. Since 1911 he has been associated with Prof. L. N. Duncan in the Boys' Corn Club work in Alabama. He has also served as high school inspector. Professor Hobdy will make his residence in this city.

Mr. Feagin announced that the position to be filled by Professor Hobdy will hereafter be known as that of "Rural School Agent" instead of "Supervisor of Rural Schools." Prof. J. L. Sibley will continue as agent for the negro rural schools of the state. These officials are paid out of the general educational fund, but work under the supervision of the State Superintendent of Education.

Books Given History Department.

Announcement has been made by the Alabama State Department of archives and history of the gift to the department of a number of new and attractive books, the gift of various collections. Tehse books cover all classes of literature, including conduct of life, nature study, literature for children, animals, birds, biography, myths, etc.

Examine A. N. G. Officers.

Newly elected officers of the Alabama National Guard will be examined Sept. 25, by the State board of military examiners, according to announcement made at the office of Adjutant General Joseph B. Scully. Nine officers will be present to take the examinations.

Morgan County Books O. K.

Books and accounts of officials of Morgan county are correctly kept, according to a report of Chas. L. Townes, Examiner of Public Accounts. One discrepancy amounting to $23 was discovered, but this was immediately rectified. Officials whose books were found to be correct were W. E. Skeggs, Probate Judge; Charles C. Robertson, Tax Collector; R. N. McCullough, Sheriff; Arthur Stephenson, Treasurer of County School Funds, and Frank J. Troup, Tax Assessor.

Convict Returns to Prison.

After being at large two years, Charlty Burton, a white man of Talladega county, who escaped from the state penitentiary at Wetumpka soon after being imprisoned for grand larceny, returned to Wetumpka and surrendered himself to the penitentiary officials. Burton had spent nearly two years in the west, where he worked in the wheat fields. Announcement was made at the convict department of the escape of Joe Bozeman and Dug Wyatt, negroes, from the convict camp at Aldrich.

Taxes in Jefferson Heavy.

Jefferson county paid in taxes to the state and county during 1913 $1,950,049.84. Of that amount $1,039,328.52 went to the county and $910,721.32 to the state. W. R. Foster, examiner of public accounts, has just completed an examination of the books of F. B. Bowers, tax collector of Jefferson county, and made a report to Governor O'Neal.

Mr. Foster also reports favorably upon the minutes and accounts of the Jefferson county board of revenue. He found that $138,468.23 was paid out between September 1, 1913, and August 31, 1914, for charity, and remarked that, although the institutions and cause were worthy, it seemed a burden upon the taxpayers.

Decision Upholds Kolb.

Attorney General Robert C. Brickell has rendered an opinion in which he holds that commercial food stuffs must be packed in packages of 50 pounds, net weight, 100 pounds, net weight, and so on. This opinion applies to those dealers who have claimed that they could put up short weight packages provided they are labeled "short weight." The opinion was rendered at the request of Capt. Reuben F. Kolb and is as follows:

"Referring to Section 2 of an act of the legislature of 1911," writes Captain Kolb to Mr. Brickell, "you will find that the law provides that commercial feed stuffs must be packed in bags or packages of 50 pounds net weight, 100 pounds net weight, etc. We attach a letter from the Southwestern Millers' League in which they say they are branding their bags 'guaranteed 99 pounds net.'

"They claim that they have the right to do this under our law and that we would not have the right to stop the sale of feed thus branded. Our ruling is that feed can only be sold in bags containing 50 pounds net, 100 pounds net, etc.

In replying to Captain Kolb, the Attorney General writes as follows: "I beg to advise you that a package so marked (referring to 99 pounds net) could not be sold in this state under the plain provisions of Section 2 of the act approved March 9, 1911, and known as the Commercial Feed Stuffs Act, and that in my opinion this act is the proper exercise of the legislative authority."

Battery B Mustered Out.

Supposedly because of the reported mutiny of Battery B, field artillery, Alabama National Guard, of Montgomery, at Mobile recently, it was mustered out of the service of the Alabama National Guard by Adjt. Gen. Joseph B. Scully. The formal order declares that the action was taken personally on recommendation of Maj. D. S. Dorrance of Birmingham, commanding the Alabama artillery battalion.

Capt. Samuel Roswald, commanding the battery, insists that the battery has been dismissed without the investigation which he has requested and and which he again demanded in a statement made public.

To Make Malarial Survey.

Dr. R. H. Von Ezdorf, the health and sanitary expert of Mobile, while in Montgomery, conferred with Dr. W. H. Sanders, State Health Officer, in connection with a proposed malarial survey of Alabama. It is proposed to make a study of malarial conditions throughout the state to enable health officers to know malarial conditions at all points.

Call Issued State Banks.

Superintendent of Banks Alex E. Walker issued a call to the state banks for a statement of their condition at the close of business on September 12. The present call is the third which the bank superintendent has issued this year the last one having been sent out several months ago.

Perry County Negro Paroled.

Governor O'Neal granted a parole to George Smith, a Perry county convict, who was serving a twelve year sentence in the state penitentiary on a charge of murder. The parole was granted upon the recommendation of Dr. J. M. Austin, physician inspector.

Wanted for Jefferson Crime.

The governor has made requisition on the goernor of Missouri for the return to this state of Tippo Holmes, charged with the murder of Tafton Tannehill in Jefferson county. No details of the crime could be learned at the governor's office.

Montgomery Tax Assessor Dead.

Morgan S. Gilmer, tax assessor of Montgomery county, died at Brevard, North Carolina. He was a most distinguished Confederate veteran and organizer of the "Yaller Hammers," an organization composed of juvenile descendants of Alabama veterans which was made official recently by the Alabama division of Veterans.

Three Institutes in Progress.

Investigation Asked.

T. D. Samford, United States District Attorney, and Robert C. Brickell, attorney general of Alabama, were requested by a delegation representing merchants and business men of Clanton to make an investigation of charges that cotton oil mills of the state have combined to force down the price of cotton seed. The delegation was composed of L. H. Reynolds, F. M. Pinckard and Dr. E. A. Matthews, all of Clanton. It was the sense of the committee that the investigation should be state-wide.

For the benefit of the numerous organizations who helped to sell nearly forty-five million Red Cross seals last year and for the general public, the American Red Cross and the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis have framed a definition of anti-tuberculosis work showing how the proceeds from these holiday stickers are to be used. The definition limits the expenditure of money only for the year ending April 30, 1915.

The definition was framed at a recent meeting of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis and states that the term "anti-tuberculosis work" as it relates to the expenditure of Red Cross seal money shall include the following activities:

1. The construction of hospitals or sanatoriums for the care of the tuberculous.

2. The maintenance of the tuberculous.

3. The provisions of day or night camps for the tuberculous; the provision and maintenance of dispensaries, visiting nurses, open air schools, fresh air classes, or preventoria for the care or treatment of tuberculous cases or for the prevention of the spread of tuberculosis.

4. The maintenance of educational or legislative activities which have for their object the prevention of infection with tuberculosis.

SICK DOCTOR

Proper Food Put Him Right.

The food experience of a physician in his own case when worn and weak from sickness and when needing nourishment the worst way, is valuable:

"An attack of grip, so severe it came near making an end of me, left my stomach in such condition I could not retain any ordinary food. I knew of course that I must have food nourishment or I could never recover.

"I began to take four teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts and cream three times a day and for 2 weeks this was almost my only food. It tasted so delicious that I enjoyed it immensely and my stomach handled it perfectly from the first mouthful. It was so nourishing I was quickly built back to normal health and strength.

"Grape-Nuts is of great value as food to sustain life during serious attacks in which the stomach is so deranged it cannot digest and assimilate other foods.

"I am convinced that were Grape-Nuts more widely used by physicians, it would save many lives that are otherwise lost from lack of nourishment." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The most perfect food in the world. Trial of Grape-Nuts and cream 10 days proves. "There's a Reason."

THE UNION-BANNER

Published Every Thursday at Clanton, Chilton County, Alabama.

UNION PUBLISHING CO.

W. M. WYATT, Editor.

Subscription price, in advance, per year, $1.00.

It seems that war tax, bond issue and time warrants are all a democrat in office can think about. Why don't they sometime consider the interest of the common people?

Will the Clanton Press tell the voters which democratic officer it is who is now advocating a county debt of $100,- to be put on the public roads? Please do not dodge this, as it is important that they know who he is.

Mr. M. D. Foshee, Chairman of the Progressive Campaign committee has taken up with Mr. L. R. Sawyer the matter of arranging for a joint debate at the court house by speakers representing the democratic and the progressive parties. We hope this can be arranged, as in that way both sides can be heard at one time. We have been very anxious all through the campaign for a joint debate, and hope we shall soon have the pleasure of hearing this one.

MORE TAXES DEMANDED.

In The Jeffersonian of September 10, appeared an article which is in part as follows:

"More taxes on the common people, demands the President; the Baltimore platform on which Prof. Woodrow Wilson was elected promised cheap money on long loans to the farmer.

"And while the farmer, and the merchants and state banks whose prosperity depends on the farmer, are extending every energy to devise a method of self-help, the President proposes additional tax burdens of $100,000,000.

"He calls it a war tax, just as though the European war were ours.

"In the name of God, where is this oppression of the common people to stop?

"Does it ever occur to Woodrow Wilson that he is heaping up wrath against the day of wrath, when he again faces the people?"

The above is another indication of how the democrats live up to their promises when they get into office. Why is this additional tax necessary so soon after the war began, even if the war has anything at all to do with it? Can the democrats explain how the war affects us so as to make such taxes necessary? In fact isn't it the waste and misuse of the democrats, and the unreasonable laws passed by the democratic congress that has made it necessary instead of the war? We would like to hear the opinion of the Clanton Press, the Democratic organ of this county, on these questions. But we suppose it will get a sarcastic expression on its countenance and say The editor of The Union-Banner has discovered that the democratic party in Chilton county is the cause of the big European war. That is about such simple answers as they have been making to some other important questions.

CHARGES DEMOCRATS WITH EXTRAVAGANCE.

The following communication, relative to Democratic extravagance, appeared in the Birmingham Age-Herrld of September 18th:

"Congress up to this date has appropriated $1,117,000,000," said the Senator, "which does not include the River and Harbors bill nor any expense made necessary, as it is claimed, by the war.

"Appropriations to date are in excess of the Republican appropriations of the last Congress by $100,-000,000, and the appropriations of the present congress when completed, will, in my judgment, be $250,000,000 in excess of that which was denounced as extravagance."

Does the above look as if the democrats are living up to their promises made two years ago? They bitterly denounced the preceding republican congress for spending so much money, and made grave promises of economy and reduction of the high cost of living. And now before the sound of their campaign whirlwind has fairly receded the have made worse the very things they previously termed as grievances, and which they promised to alleviate. Now the people will consider well the issues of the present campaign. They should do so before they cast their ballot.

"BROTHER, WHERE WILL YOU STAND?"

In the Clanton Press of April 17th, 1913, C. B. Cox, one of the democratic nominees for commissioner, came out in a letter advocating a bond issue. The letter was in part as follows: "It occurs to me that the thing to do is to issue bonds and then get all the other money we can by taxation and at the same time work all our men who are subject to road duty and thereby secure good roads in the shortest time possible and at the least expense."

The above explains the way Mr. Cox stood on the bond issue in 1913. He is now a candidate for county commissioner and we suppose, as he advocated a bond issue in 1913, that he is still for the same thing. It surely isn't possible that he has changed his mind since he became a candidate, and now sees things different. We feel that the people should know how Mr. Cox stands on this quesion now, and we ask him to tell the voters his ideas of a bond issue now, and whether or not he bas changed his mind since he has become a candidate.

The Union-Banner wishes to say here and now that we are going to wage this campaign upon the issues that confront the people of this county, state and Nation. We are not going to resort to personalities, and try to convert the peoples mind from the things that are of the greatest inteaest to them, to criticism of some individual. However we wish to say that we feel it our privilege and our duty to criticise the official acts of public officers when we think they deserve to be criticised. And we also feel it our privilege and our duty to criticise the policies of the democratic party in the management of government affairs when they are in power and manage the affairs in such a way as to benefit the classes instead masses of the people. As the Clanton Press is the official organ of the democratic party in this county, we would be glad to go into a discussion of the issues as they confront the people of this county with the Clanton Press. We are willing, waiting and anxious to inter into a discussion with the press of the political issue as advocated by the Progressive party and the democratic party. We further believe that each party through its official organ should tell the people what their party stands for and what it is against in order that the people may know these things before they cast their ballots for either party.

OUR COUNTY CAMPAIGN.

We would like to say a word to the voters of the county in regard to the campaign that is being waged by the two parties at present. The Progressive party, through its campaign committee, is making a direct and vigorous effort to place its policies before the people so that it may be known what the organization stands for. Speakers are being sent to the various parts of the county to explain these policies of the party and its candidates. The process is an open one, and is held up to every man in every community alike. The current issues that concern our people are being discussed openly.

The Democratic party for some cause or other, has not seen fit to place any of their policies before the people. Only one man has appeared in public to defend the Democrats; and when the debate was finished he openly acknowledged that he had enough. He was a candidate too; but said that he was done with public speaking and debating. There has been no acceptance of the challenge of the Progressives to joint debate with the Democrats. We have no alternative by which to judge this inactivity on their part, unless it be that they have no platform to defend. We have asked them a number of times to publish their platform in their paper, but they have never made any statements about it.

Now, the question is up to the voter. It is for him to decide whether he will support the ticket that is placing its policies and the things it stands for as an open book before his eyes that he may read and understand; or support the ticket that has no platform, and is making no effort to show him what they stand for, and what they expect to do if entrusted with the affairs of our county government. It seems that under such circumstances any fair minded man who cares for his own good, and the welfare of his country, would surely vote for the policies and principles which are explained to him, and which he knows and understands, in preference to those which are a closely guarded secret, not to be unfolded unto him until they are placed in power, and even then in absolute defiance of the voice and protest of the multitudes.

If the Democratic party has anything of which they can boast and which they wish to hold up bofore the people as an indication of their good faith and sympathy for the man who is not in the ring, we think it is high time they were telling the people about it. If there be any virtue and sincerity in the party, it is a pity to have it completely snowed under and not held up that the people may see it and be benefitted thereby.

A DISCUSSION OF OUR COTTON SITUATION

Lomax, Ala., Sept. 21.
Editor Union-Banner:

Will you allow me space to express my ideas regarding the cotton situation of the south?

The farmer is getting in hot water; and I hope it will get so hot that he will have to abandon his old system of things entirely. Some farmers blame the merchant, some the banker and some the democratic party; but they are all somewhat to blame, and the farmer himself is more to blame than all the others. The farmer depends on the merchant when really the merchant is dependent on the farmer. So we shall find no relief so long as we depend on someone who is wholly dependent upon us. If our leaders and business men can't help us in time of need, we don't need them in time of plenty. We must organize as a band of brothers and stick together at any cost.

Taxes are to be paid, debts are falling due, and no way to secure money. Cotton, the money crop of the south, is not marketable, and at present worthless. We must change our system of business. We have no system of pricing cotton. Why can't we come to-gether regardless of our political views, and fix this thing? Here is my plan:

First, for the people of the cotton states to demand that their legislatures stay all debts for six and twelve months; also state and county tax with 8 per cent interest. By so doing this will give us time to form our plans.

The next step is to call a meeting of each county in each cotton state and elect a man to represent the people of each county. Let these agents be governed by a committee of 12 or a vote of the people in setting the price of cotton. Selling to the broker then would be in the power of our agents.

We might call this agent the cashier of our bank. Suppose he retains $5 for each bale of cotton sold. Say Chilton county sells 20,000 bales; we would have $100,000 in our bank, the strongest one in the county. Suppose the cotton states produce 15 million bales; we would have $75,-000,000 in our treasury. This plan in ten years time would give us right here at Clanton one million dollars at our command.

I think it would be profitable then to build cotton factories, to help consume this cotton, as we would have plenty of money to invest. That would give our people additional employment. We can do this aud use the same warehouse system we now have.

If we don't resort to some way of protection, we must be mighty foolish creatures, for we can see plainly that we have none now.

This is written with the best respect to all classes regardless of political or business views.

The Attraction.

A rather eccentric man, calling on a family blessed by an observant little son, wore kid gloves that had been cleaned. The little boy, seeming to be much attracted by the visitor, stayed close at his side. "You like to stand by Mr. Blank and hear his funny stories, don't you, Jimmie?" presently asked Jimmie's father. "I don't care about his stories," replied the honest youngster, "but his hands smell just like our automobile."

Simple Cement.

For mending ornaments and delicate china there is nothing better than rice-flour cement. It is very easily made, it being only necessary to mix rice flour or ground rice thoroughly with cold water, simmering gently over a slow fire until it thickens, thereby forming a most durable adhesive substance which can be used hot or cold, in the usual way.

Possible Solution.

"Why do you suppose it is," she asked, "that nearly all the great men of this world have been married?" "I suppose," replied the old bachelor, "it's because they had to do something to get their minds off the troubles they had at home."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Farmers,

We understand that a number of our customers are under the impression that we no longer credit them for Ginning and Bagging and Ties, but demand the cash when the cotton is ginned. THIS IS NOT TRUE.

We have our same old rules for ginning; but only observe them closer. We will gin your cotton as cheap as anyone in town, and allow you till the cotton is sold or you are ready to haul it away from the warehouse, to pay for the ginning.

Having had our machinery put into first class condition, and being operated by experienced men, we can assure you perfect satisfaction.

We also pay the highest cash price for seed.

COUNTY FAIR TO BE IN OCTOBER

The Chilton County Fair this year is to be held at the permanent fair grounds in Clanton, on October 26 to 31. The catalog and premium list is now being printed, and will be out in a few days. We hope that, in spite of the hard times our people will give this worthy institution their hearty support. On account of our excellent crop conditions the agricultural side of the fair should be very good this year.

The Highway has been opened into Clanton from the south by the new route which comes up sixth street to the court house.

After a pleasant honeymoon including an extended trip north Mr. and Mrs. Grady Reynolds are at home to their friends in Clanton.

Miss Ruby Downs was hostess to a number of her friends at an enjoyable rook party Tuesday evening.

ASTHMA AND HAY FEVER A GUARANTEED RELIEF

"I have arranged with Alred Drug Company so that every sufferer from Asthma, Hay Fever or Bronchial Asthma in Clanton can try my treatment entirely at my risk," Dr. Rudolph Schiffmann announces. He says: "Buy a 50-cent package of my Asthmador, try it, and if it does not afford you immediate relief, or if you do not find it the best remedy you have ever used, take it back to Alred Drug Company and they will return your money, cheerfullv and without any question whateyer. After seeing the grateful relief it has afforded in hundrers of cases, which had been considered incurable, and which had been given up in despair, I know what it will do. I am so sure that it will do the same with others that I am not afraid to guarantee it will relieve instantaneously. The druggists handling Asthmador will return your money if you say so. You are to be the sole judge and under this positive guarantee, absolutely no risk is run in buying Asthmador."

Persons living elsewhare will be supplied under the same guarantee by their local druggist or direct by Dr. R. Schiffmann, St. Paul, Minn.

Words of Praise

For Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy

"How thankful we are to you for getting a hold of your wonderful Remedy. My wife could not have had but a short time to live if she had not taken your Wonderful Remedy when she did. One more of those paroxysm pains she was having would have killed her without a doubt. Now she is free from all pain, free from heart trouble and free from that disturbing Neuralgia—all the results of five treatments—and the expulsion of five or six hundred Gall Stones. Now she is able to eat anything she wants and her appetite is good and before taking your medicine she had no appetite and when she ate anything she would suffer death for so doing and could not sleep at night; since taking your treatment she sleeps well all night long. T. A. NEALL, Roanoke, Texas."

The above letter should convince you more than anything we could say in behalf of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. Sufferers should try one dose of this Remedy—one dose should convince them that they can be restored to health. Nearly all Stomach Ailments are caused by the clogging of the intestinal tract with mucoid and catarrhal accretions allowing poisonous fluids into the Stomach and otherwise deranging the digestive system. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy painlessly removes these accretions without a surgical operation and puts an end to Colic Attacks, Gases in the Stomach and Intestines and all of the usual symptoms of Stomach, Liver and Intestinal Ailments. Ask your druggist about Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy or send to Geo. H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154 Whiting St., Chicago, Ill., for free booklet on Stomach Ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored.

Hart-Mullins.

One of the most beautiful weddings of the season was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Higgins Wednesday afternoon, when Mr. Eric Hart and Miss Myrtle Mullins were joined together in the holy bonds of wedlock.

The beautiful Higgins home was made lovely by the pretty decorations for the occasion. A profusion of ferns artistically arranged, with which were mingled various demonstrations of pink formed the color scheme.

A delightful musical program rendered by Mrs. J. O. Middleton, Mrs. A. M. Gowan, and Mrs. J. H. Middleton preceded the service.

At the first sound of the wedding march the ribbon bearers, Misses Maude and Ruth Kate Mullins, Winnie and Willie Reynolds. Bessie VanDerveer and Mary Alice Brown entered, forming an aisle, down which the bride and groom proceeded to the imhrovised altar.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Chappelle in a very sacred and impressive manner.

All through the afternoon a delightful course of refreshments was served the guests.

Showers of congratulations and good wishes were rained upon the young couple by their friends.

There is not a more popular and promising young man in Clanton than Mr. Hart; while his lovely young bride is the ideal of perfection; and both have many friends whose hearts unite in the single wish for every joy that is possible to be visited upon them.

Mr. and Mrs. Hart will be at hame in Clanton aftes their wedding trip.

J. W. Sorrell of Jemison was a visitor to Clanton last Friday.

M. C. Crumpton of Thorsby was here last Friday on business.

Puzzled the Youngster.

The town visitor to the country lass appeared in a bathing suit charming but abbreviated. "Haven't you gone into long dresses yet, Miss Annie?" asked a wondering youngster on the shore.

Rheumatic Throat Is Common Trouble

Should Be Treated in Blood To Prevent Recurrence.

There are successful gargles that stop soreness in the throat, but to prevent their incessant return, the blood must be put in order. The best remedy is S. S. S., as it influences all the functions of the body to neutralize the irritants or waste products and to stimulate their excretion through the proper channels.

Rheumatic sore throat is a dangerous indication, as it means that the blood is loaded with more uric acid than the kidneys can excrete, and may thus lead to serious general disturbance.

The action of S. S. S. stimulates cellular activity. It prevents the accumulation of irritants in local spots. It enables the arteries to supply quickly the new red blood to replace worn-out tissue.

For this reason uric acid that finds the throat an easy prey to its breaking-down influence, is scattered and eliminated. In other words, S. S. S. prevents chronic conditions by enabling all the mucous linings of the body to secrete healthy mucus. Its influence is shown in a marked improvement of the bronchial tubes, whereby the huskiness of voice with thick, grayish expectorations is overcome. S. S. S., well diluted with water, means a blood bath, since it is welcome to any stomach and at once gets into the blood.

S. S. S. is free of all minerals and contains ingredients wonderfully conducive to well-balanced health.

You can get it at any drug store, but do not accept anything else. There is danger in substitutes. S. S. S. is prepared only by The Swift Specific Co., 528 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Our Medical Dept. will give you free instruction by mail on any subject of blood disorders. Write today.

HAPPY MOTHERHOOD

The happiness of motherhood is too often checked because the mother's strength is not equal to her cares, while her unselfish devotion neglects her own health.

The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of "THE MAN HIGHER UP," "HIS RISE TO POWER," Etc.

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

SYNOPSIS.

Mark Truitt, encouraged by his sweetheart, Unity Martin, leaves Bethel, his native town, to seek his fortune. Simon Truitt tells Mark that it long has been his dream to see a steel plant at Bethel and asks the son to return and build one if he ever gets rich. Mark applies to Thomas Henley, head of the Quinby Iron works, for a job and is sent to the construction gang. His success in that work wins him a place as helper to Roman Andzrejzski, open-hearth furnaceman. He becomes a boarder in Roman's home and assists Piotr, Roman's son, in his studies. Kazia, an adopted daughter, shows her gratitude in such a manner as to arouse Mark's interest in her. Heavy work in the intense heat of the furnace causes Mark to collapse and Kazia cares for him. Later Roman also succumbs and Mark gets his job. Roman resents this and tells Mark to find another boarding place. Five years elapse during which Mark has advanced to the foremanship, while his labor-saving devices have made him invaluable to the company. In the meantime Kazia has married one Jim Whiting. Mark meets with an accident which dooms him to be a cripple for life. He returns to Bethel intending to stay there. He finds Unity about to marry another man and wins her back. Unity urges him to return to his work in the city.

CHAPTER XII—Continued.

There had been a snow, hard packed by traffic, and the blacks caught the sleigh swiftly along through the dusk. When the crowded business section lay behind them, Henley remarked casually:

"I saw your little charity back there."

"He was a cripple."

"I see," Henley nodded. "That's your greatest asset."

"What is?"

"Your health."

"My lack of it, you mean," Mark answered grimly. "But I don't quite get your point of view."

"It keeps you from making a fool of yourself. There's Hare, for instance, a capable man, drinking himself into incompetency. And Harmon, with his women. For them prosperity means indulgence. You keep your appetites under control."

"I have to."

"Exactly my point." For a few blocks Henley apparently gave himself over wholly to the agreeable exercise of breathing in the keen frosty air. When he resumed, no one could have guessed from his tone that he was working toward a given point. "Higsbee's case is worse. One woman."

"Has he—"

"His wife. A smooth catty creature, with a craze for display. Married him after he made his stake, of course. Always nagging him for new jewels, new carriages, a new—house. Makes him dress for dinner. Drags him around to dances and receptions and box parties—when 30 minutes of that takes it out of him more than 12 hours at the rolls used to." Mark might have been sitting for his portrait. "Egging him on until he's scheming as unscrupulously as a toothless old dowager to get into society—or what with her passes for society. He spent six months beating about the bush to get me to send my wife around to call on her. Queer, how a big talented man will let a pretty useless woman pull him around by the ears!"

"Damned queer!" said Mark.

"I suppose we, who aren't in the same case, can't understand it."

Henley, Mark thought, seemed to understand it very well.

A few minutes more brought them dashing up to a stop under the porte-cochere of Henley's big house.

"Much obliged for the lift," said Henley as he sprang out of the sleigh. He added casually, "Er—by the way, I think I heard my wife say she was planning to call on Mrs. Truitt in the near future."

Despite a quick flush, Mark looked at him steadily. "Higsbee, then, was a parable?"

"By no means," Henley returned blandly. "It seems they have met at St. Swithin's and were—mutually interested." He paused, but as no reply came from Mark, continued in the impersonal tone of one who philosophizes generally. "After all, there's a Higsbee in all of us. We affect to jeer at this society thing. But we want our wives to have the best. It's more comfortable, too. And besides, when a man has a charming wife, he can't hide her light under a bushel. Good night."

"Good night. Especially," Mark muttered to himself, "when she proposes to let it shine." He gave the reins an angry jerk. The horses leaped and raced down the driveway and into the street. The music of the sleigh bells rang merrily on the keen air.

Once he laughed aloud, sneeringly. "Complaisant toady!" He did not refer to Henley. He had, in fact, himself in mind. One can not well openly resent the insolent if friendly interest—even in one's domestic affairs—of the man whose eccentric favor spells prosperity. Still it stings, especially when it argues a shrewd guess as to the fact. And the fact was, Superintendent Truitt's domestic estate, like the neighborhood in which he lived, left something to be desired.

He stopped at a brick house that differed from its neighbors only in that the lot was wide enough to allow for a driveway to the little stable in the rear. A groom, who had come to the front in answer to the summons of the bells, took the team

Mark, leaning hard on his cane, limped stiffly up the terrace steps to the porch. The parlor—Unity was beginning to refer to it, not easily, as the drawing room—was lighted, the shades were not drawn.

Unity was reclining in graceful attitude—she could be relied upon to present graceful poses at all times—in a big easy chair. Her gown, of some soft, pale green stuff, vastly became her and, as did every detail of her from the carefully achieved coiffure to the black velvet slippers that peeped out from beneath her skirt, avouched the fact that Unity had mastered more than the rudiments of the art of personal decoration.

He went into the house, doffed his heavy overcoat and limped into the drawing room. Unity did not by so much as a glance around disturb her graceful pose until he was at her side. Then she languidly held up a hand to him.

He brushed it with his lips. "You're looking scrumptious, Unity." He went so far as to give a brief admiring pat to her hair.

She moved petulantly. "Don't! You'll muss my hair."

He dropped her hand. "That would be a shame, wouldn't it?"

He sat down near her. She sighed. The sigh, one might have thought, was one of alarm and was because she had noted his pallor, which even after the spirited drive was so pronounced.

"Been a hard day?" But the question was not Unity's. She had not marked his air of exhaustion or, if she had, was so used to it that she was not concerned.

"So hard!" She sighed again very plaintively. "So very exciting! And you know how excitement always affects me."

"Yes, I know." Just the edges of his satirical smile showed again. "What has been the particular excitement today?"

"Mrs. Henley called!"

"Yes?" Mark's voice did not reveal the interest so epochal an event demanded.

"Yes?" mimicked Unity. "Is that all you can say? But I suppose, of course, you don't care, though you know what it means to me."

"Just what does it mean to you, Unity?"

"It means," somewhat dithyrambically, "that I have won the friendship I have tried so hard for three years to win."

"No, Thanks! I Might Acquire the Taste."

"Then she came up to the plans and specifications?"

"She's a dear. So sweet and refined! So intelligent and ambitious! It's no wonder a man with such a wife has got as far as Mr. Henley has. Though I suppose he would never give her credit."

"I fancy Henley does her justice," Mark ventured.

"That is more," Unity's tone was one of patient dignified reproach, "than some people I know do for their wives."

Habit put a seal on his lips.

From lesser beginnings the Truitts had found, in the earlier years of their marriage, steel and tinder for quarrels—nasty quarrels in which tempers were lost and cutting words spoken and that invariably had the same issue—the husband, humiliated by the sordidness of it, suing for peace. But that stage had passed. Now, at the first sign of hostilities, he promptly hung out a white flag.

She eyed him covertly for a little. "I was so ashamed this afternoon," she murmured at last pathetically.

He opened his eyes with a start; he had almost slept. "Ashamed—? Oh, yes—Mrs. Henley. What did you do?"

"I did nothing. It was this house. I could see her looking around at all this and trying to hide her amusement over it. Though she was careful not to take too much pains to hide it."

"But, for a friend, isn't that—"

"Oh, you can't understand. Or won't," she amended bitterly. "You've no conception of the pride a woman likes to have in her home. Of course, she looked down on this. Anybody would."

"We used to think it mighty fine. In Bethel we never dreamed of anything so good."

"You didn't. But I did," she retorted. "Besides, we aren't in Bethel now. We're here and growing rich. And we ought to live like the rest of our kind."

"Just what is our kind, Unity?"

"If you didn't have me to give you ambition, we'd still be homely dowdy nobodies."

"Then we are somebodies?"

"We can be. We're going to be." She sat up suddenly, her thin lips tightening. "Mark, we must—we simply must—move. We can afford it, I know."

"Yes, we can do it." He made a gesture of resignation. "But it will clean me out of ready cash."

"You can make more," said Unity negligently. "You're so clever at that. And besides, what's the use of having money if it doesn't buy the things we want?"

"For one thing," he smiled grimly, "I can't get insurance, and men have been known to die and leave their widows penniless. However," he rose with an evident effort, "we've gone over all this a hundred times. I'll see."

Yielding was in his voice.

She fell back into her languid graceful pose. She gave him her very sweetest smile, which she meant to seem lovingly grateful. He saw in it only triumph.

"You can be such a dear!" she purred. "I'm so proud of you! And now you'd better hurry and dress. You know the Higsbees are coming for dinner."

He repressed an oath. "I'd forgotten." And he limped heavily from the room.

In his own room he dropped on the bed, yielding for a brief interval to the pain and weakness of which it was his pride never to give a sign before others.

He descended barely in time to join Unity in greeting their guests.

He did not see a deeper vanity in his feeling of superiority over his guests. Higsbee was a big beefy man, red of countenance and with a raucous voice that grated on Mark's nerves. He was rough, not to say boisterous, in manner, and his notion of wit was veiled smuttiness—essays to which Unity, incomparable hostess! paid the perfect compliment of a shocked laugh and a blush.

The dinner was well cooked and served, which was not always true when the Truitts dined alone. Mark ate sparingly, the while eying covetously the viands with which he dared not indulge himself. He talked little, neither Higsbee's coarse daring nor the ladies' light gossip of plays, latest books and mutual acquaintances—especially of mutual acquaintances—being fields in which he felt at home. But he was secretly much amused when to Unity's casual mention of Mrs. Henley's call, Mrs. Higsbee replied with the invidious suggestion that Mrs. Henley was a good deal of a snob. And when Unity countered sweetly, "Do you think so? I haven't found her so," he chuckled aloud.

He explained the chuckle. "One mustn't look a gift horse in the mouth." At which crude remark Higsbee guffawed, Mrs. Higsbee tittered maliciously and Unity looked pained. All three had a suspicion of what he knew—that Mrs. Henley's call had been under orders, a gift from Henley.

Later he smoked, slowly and very appreciatively, a mild cigar, which lasted until Higsbee had consumed the second.

"How," Higsbee asked once, untactfully, "did you get Henley to send his wife around?"

Mark resented the question. "I didn't get him to."

"No?" Higsbee looked a bit incredulous. "Well, you certainly do stand well with him. Say, if you get a chance, I wish you'd drop him a hint that we'd be glad to have her call."

"I'm afraid," Mark said coldly, "Henley isn't a man to take that sort of a hint kindly."

"I wish you would," Higsbee urged. "Mrs. H. is crazy for it. And I reckon," he laughed lumberingly, "the best way is to get a woman what she wants. It's comfortablest, anyhow."

"I haven't found it so," Mark lied, adopting Unity's tactics, and promptly changed the subject.

But at last the Higsbees left.

"Thank heaven!" exclaimed Mark. "And to think that that man is one of the best labor handlers in the country!"

"Bourgeois!" Unity gave a shrug and a nod to include the departed guests.

"Spell it."

Unity complied.

"Hmm! I happen to know what it means." He gave her a look of mock admiration. "Unity, you're a wonder. You've got the nerve of a winner. You travel too fast a gait for me. Who could believe that less than six years ago you were back in Bethel, keeping company with tight-fisted Bill Slocum."

But Unity was too well pleased with herself just then to resent this cruel reminder. "Don't you see why I am so anxious to get up above such people?"

"I can see," he said, "I shall have to give in."

She went to him with a little cuddling movement, locking both hands over one of his shoulders and looking up at him. She made a pretty picture. A mirror over the mantle reflected it for him.

"Oh, Mark, you make me so happy! Tell me the truth. Aren't you glad I made you come back to the city, and that we've got so far—and that we're going so much farther?"

"You insist upon the truth?" He looked thoughtfully at the reflection. "Well, I suppose I must be. Otherwise you couldn't force me to buy the new house, even though you are a very capable bully—"

"Bully!"

"Exactly. Only," he continued, "I still have a sense of proportion. We are rather absurd, you and I, Unity."

She laughed contentedly. "I know you. It's like you to growl when you're doing a specially nice thing." She held up her lips to him.

"And is this my reward? Magnificent!" But he did not kiss her. He looked curiously at her. Long ago he had been undeceived. He knew that the shallow tenderness and admiration summoned by her sweetness of flesh and perfect grooming were not love. He gently disengaged himself.

"No, thanks! I might acquire the taste. And it's too expensive." He limped away from her and pretended to examine a book that lay on the piano.

She assumed an air of gentle reproach. "Oh, Mark, you don't mean that?"

She did not detect the warning note in his laugh.

"Oh, no! Of course not!"

He returned to her. They kissed.

CHAPTER XIII.

Trophies.

"Meteoric" was the word most often used to describe Truitt's rise. It was a career possible only in his chosen industry and at that time when, no matter how fast plants were multiplied and new devices adopted, the output could not keep pace with the world's insistent demand for steel. It did not differ notably from the careers of several other young superintendents of the Quinby company, save in the one particular, that Henley's preference had deepened into something approximating friendship. On Mark's side the friendship was not open to question; his admiration and liking for Henley were unbounded and not dependent on favors received.

The Truitts had moved into their new house. It was a rambling, red-brick, ivy-grown structure containing eighteen rooms and surrounded by wide neglected grounds, and had been built half a generation before as a wedding present to Timothy Woodhouse III.

For several months Mark secretly congratulated himself on the purchase. Unity had the new house to wander over and admire. She had four servants to direct. Within the allotted time she had returned Mrs. Henley's call, and after an anxious period, Mrs. Henley called again; seeing which, certain other ladies of St. Swithin's who had attained the half-way station where they were very careful upon whom they left cards, called and invited her to share the activities of the guilds. All of which made for happiness, content. Unity found little to criticize, she was engrossed with the game of being a fine lady, which she felt sure was her vocation.

Thus peace abode in the Truitt household and Mark, freed from the irritation of constant bickering, was enabled to give himself wholly to work. He did not realize that during this truce he grew away from his wife more rapidly than when domestic inharmony kept her constantly in his thoughts. During these months he completed his improved process for rolling steel cold, which made some noise in the industrial world.

But there is nothing to which our species so readily adapts itself as to luxury. Content dissolved. Unity began to complain of the heavy labor of ordering so big a house. She resumed her criticisms of Mark, finding fault with his fashion of dress, his manners, his habits and his neglect of her. She was seized with a devouring mania for amusement, filling the house almost every evening with guests and demanding that Mark perform his duties as host. Other evenings she dragged him to the theater, which he detested. When he, rendered peevish by late hours and boredom, suggested that there were matinees, she put on an injured air that was more irritating to him than outright distemper.

"Other men are glad to go out with their wives."

"Other men don't have to work so hard as I do."

"You think of nothing but money."

"Devilish lucky for you," he was indiscreet enough to retort; and she did not emerge from her sulks for several days.

But at last the gnawing canker was disclosed. One evening so stormy that no guests had come, Unity went up to his study where he was making the most of this respite. She talked ramblingly for a while.

"Well, Unity, out with it!" he exclaimed impatiently, after several minutes. "What do you want? As you see, I've got a great deal to do."

"I wonder what is the matter with Mrs. Henley?"

"You ought to know. You see her often enough, don't you?"

"Yes, I see her—at church! And we call. But she never invites us to the things she gives. I wonder why?"

"Probably because she doesn't want us."

Unity looked her protest at this blunt speech. But she did not abandon her project.

"I should think, if you're such good friends with Mr. Henley, you could manage it easily enough."

"Now you can stop right there," he answered emphatically. "I'm pretty soft, but there's one thing I draw the line at. And that's 'managing' to get invited to other people's houses. That's flat!"

And on that he was firm, though he was made to pay in many ways for his refusal.

But in due time and without management a dinner invitation came; on whose initiative, being a secret neither Henley nor his wife has ever disclosed. Hence we may not speak surely as to the accuracy of certain inferences that Unity drew.

"You see!" she cried, showing the note to Mark. Her manner said plainly, "I alone did it, in spite of the indifference of my husband."

"I see," he responded dryly. "Are you going?"

She treated this question to the contemptuous silence it deserved.

And as Mark stood in the hall and watched her descending the stairs for the start, he was bound to confess that she made a fair—oh, a very fair—picture.

"Why," he wondered, "did the Almighty make so pretty a shell and put nothing in it?" This seems to prove that he had been pretty effectually disillusioned.

However careless he might affect to be, he was himself keenly elated over the event. Often he had asked himself why Henley, so friendly in all else, had never let down the bars before his home. And as he mounted the steps toward the opening door, he could not repress the thrill of exultation.

He had need of the stimulus of this exultation as he and Unity faced that roomful of people who—well, were in longer practice at this sort of thing than was he. He limped, with something less than Unity's aplomb, across the room to meet his hostess, who murmured graciously something quite unintelligible, and Henley, who seemed rather bored. Then he was introduced to his dinner partner, Mrs. Belloc, who mistook his set expression for sternness, and was in the end led by her without mishap to their places near Henley's end of the table.

"Why," He Wondered, "Did the Almighty Make So Pretty a Shell and Put Nothing in It?"

He had no small talk and Mrs. Belloc, after one or two barren essays, allowed him a breathing spell.

Unity was at the very apex of her existence. She was the prettiest woman present, with the loveliness of physical full bloom just before it begins to fade. Her heart's desire had been granted—no longer must she be content with carelessly tossed crumbs and crusts of preferment; she sat, both literally and figuratively, at the table of the city's elect.

The salad was being served when Mrs. Saunders turned to Mark. Mrs. Saunders was one of the insecure ladies who, following Mrs. Henley's example, had called upon Unity. She had just been listening, too long for patience, to her partner's praise of Mrs. Truitt.

"I should think you'd be jealous, Mr. Hare is more than enthusiastic over your wife tonight."

"How very tactless!"

"Oh, no!" said Mrs. Saunders sweetly. "I quite agree with him. I think she's adorable. She reminds me so much of that portrait by—you know, the one that hangs in the Louvre."

"But I don't know. I've never been in the Louvre."

"Oh! I thought everybody had been there."

"You see, Mrs. Saunders, I'm not anybody."

"You would say that, of course. One hears—"

"But it's quite true. To prove it, I've never been east of this city. In fact, the first time I came to this house—not so very long ago—I peeked through the window at the party. Henley caught me." He grinned wryly. "The next day I got a job handling pick and shovel."

"How very romantic!"

"You wouldn't call it romantic, if you'd been in Houlahan's gang."

"And then, of course," Mrs. Saunders beamed, "you set out to win the princess?"

"The princess? Oh! my wife. Yes, I suppose so."

"She has always lived in the city, hasn't she?"

"You'd think so, wouldn't you?" Mark glanced critically at Unity. "But she hasn't. Eight years ago she was living in Bethel. And Bethel, Mrs. Saunders, you'll never find on the map."

"Oh!" Mrs. Saunders said innocently. "I had inferred—but that perfect manner! She must have acquired it at her finishing school?"

Mark chuckled. "Finishing school! I wish you could see Miss Smith's seminary for young ladies. It isn't even a starter."

Mrs. Saunders laughed admiringly. "How very clever! I must tell your wife."

Unity gave ear.

"I must tell you the clever thing your husband just said. We were talking about your school—Miss Smith's seminary, wasn't it? And I called it a finishing school. And Mr. Truitt said"—Mrs. Saunders' voice carried well—"it isn't even a starter. Awf'ly good, I think." A faint titter ran down the table. "Ah—where is Miss Smith's seminary, Mrs. Truitt?"

It was Henley himself, strange to relate, who came to Unity's rescue.

"Never, Mrs. Saunders," he remarked, with an edge to his voice that the men recognized, "never uncover the past—here, at least. Only the other day Saunders was telling me he often wakes up in a cold sweat, because he has heard in his dreams, 'Dig in, ye tarrier!'"

The men all laughed reminiscently. Unity and Mrs. Saunders exchanged sweetest smiles. The dinner resumed its even tenor.

"Now," Mark grimly reminded himself, "I've let myself in for it."

But anger was surging. He deemed that, through Unity, he had been made ridiculous.

The evening passed. Mark handed a smiling Unity into their carriage. Not a word passed between them during the drive homeward, nor until they were in their house. Mark led the way to the library. The gas jets were not lighted, but the glow from a generous log fire threw their angry faces into sharp relief, as they faced each other.

"Well, Unity, I suppose we're going to have this thing out."

"How could you?" she began stormily. "And on this night of all nights! Didn't you know she was leading you on?"

"Yes—when it was too late."

"The sugary jealous snob! She thinks because she's been abroad and came from Philadelphia she's so aristocratic. And you—you—helped her to shame me before them all."

"How could I know that my wife had been—fibbing about her antecedents?"

"Would you have me admit them to her and have her patronizing me? Haven't you any pride?"

"Haven't you any self-resp—"

But the bitter retort was halted, bitten off by the quick tightening of his jaws. When he resumed, he spoke in a slow, distinct, quiet voice that Unity had never heard.

"On second thought, we will not have this out. We couldn't agree as to where the offense lies. No!" He raised a hand, sharply, in protest, as she began hotly to interrupt. "I mean that—quite. I'll remind you that I'm not a culprit boy but a husband—who has at last cut his leading strings. Also that we have had enough scenes in our pretty career together; one more would be too many."

"You take that tone—to me?"

"Even to you."

She stared, too amazed for anger.

"Why, what do you mean?"

"You may take it as a declaration of independence."

"Are you thinking," she gasped, "of—of divorce?"

"Not yet. That may come, though. It depends—" He even smiled.

She tried a weapon that had been effective, her pose of long-suffering injured innocence. But Unity, like all the pampered, was a coward. He was, intuition again told her, capable of carrying out the cool menace in his last words. The pose broke down miserably. Forgetting the anger in which she had come to the interview, she went toward him with a frightened whimpering cry.

"Oh, Mark!"

He turned away with a careless lift of his shoulders and a curt, "Good night."

* * * * * * * *

Alone in his workroom he sat before the fire, staring despondently into the dancing flames.

"I have been a fool," he said. "I have given up enough. Now I will let go."

As well as he could, he tried to keep that promise to himself.

Test for Mental Deficiency.

A Belgian physician, Doctor Demoor, has been making observations on the capacity of different people for judging which of two weights is the heavier, and has satisfied himself that, while ordinary people, especially children, fail to appreciate a small difference, the reverse is the case with the imbecile, idiotic and half-witted. He prepared two bottles, differing in size, partly filled with a heavy mineral but covered all over with black paper and exactly equal in weight. These he handed to 380 children of from six to fifteen years of age. Of these 370 judged one bottle to be the heavier. The other ten said the two were the same weight. These ten children were all abnormal or degenerates.

How the Boy Scouts Help.

A story illustrating the helpfulness of Boy Scouts to those on the road is related by a correspondent.

"I had a puncture near Farnborough, Kent, a few days ago," he said, "and I was busily mending it when a troop of scouts came along and, to my surprise, the scoutmaster ordered them to halt.

"'Can we help you, sir?' he said. 'We have motoring experts in the troop.'

"Two very small scouts—who had proficiency badges for 'motor repairing' and 'puncture mending'—stepped forward and saluted. I am sorry I did not need help."—London Mirror.

Pursuant to a call of the president of the state division, W. H. Seymour, several hundred delegates attended the state convention at Montgomery Sept. 22 of the Southern Cotton Association. The present low price of cotton and methods tending to relieve the farmer were discussed at length.

Gen. Bibb Graves, chairman of the state democratic executive committee, designated the campaign committee of the party nominees for state and congressional offices in the November election. W. D. Nesbitt of Birmingham was named chairman of the committee, with Col. R. A. Mitchell of Etowah and Judge J. C. Kumpe of Lawrence, members of the committee from the state-at-large. The other members of the committee include one from each congressional district.

On the allegation that congress, through the institution of the parcel post, has changed the terms of the existing mail contract without consent of the plaintiff, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad has brought action to recover $184,204.09 from the government for carrying mails in Alabama, Mississippi, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Tennessee, Georgia and other states through which it operates. The Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis brought similar action for $46,739.24.

Alex E. Walker, state superintendent of banks, has addressed telegrams to all the state banks asking for information about the amount of money they are lending on cotton and on what terms. The telegram were sent out by the state bank superintendents following a request for such information from John Skelton Williams, comptroller of the currency. The statistics which Superintendent Walker will collect will be used by the government in attempting to arrive at a solution of the cotton problem.

Farmers of Alabama have responded readily to the request that they plant certain portions of their farms in wheat this winter and the prospects are bright that 50,000 bushels required to supply a new flour mill in Montgomery will be raised, is declared in the weekly bulletin of the State Department of Agriculture issued by Captain Reuben F. Kolb, Commissioner. During the past week the department has issued two separate bulletins on wheat raising and has distributed these among the farmers of the State. The subject of growing wheat is discussed in detail and much valuable information is contained in the booklets.

Several schools in the State have decided to teach on Saturdays and take a holiday on Monday.

The Alabama Good Roads Association is making an effort to secure the attendance of all the newly elected members of the coming negislature at its eighteenth annual session, which begins in Montgomery October 21st and closes the 23rd. An urgent invitation has been sent to all these members. It is expected many will attend.

Of Marion county's 2766 farm homes 1313 the occupied by the owners and have no mortgages, but 464 other farm homes are mortgaged.

E. P. Lakeman of Red Bay, Franklin county, has written to Capt. Reuben F. Kolb, commissioner of agriculture, with a view to starting a movement whereby the government may add to the war revenue measures a section imposing a tax of 5 cents a pound on all cotton sold for less than 10 cents a pound.

Keep Down Uric Acid

Uric acid is a poison formed inside our bodies in digesting certain foods, especially meat, and by the burning up of nerve and muscle cells during exertion.

Uric acid is harmless as long as the kidneys filter it promptly from the blood, but people who overdo and overeat, make uric acid so fast that it overloads the blood, weakens the kidneys, and attacks the nerves, causing rheumatic pains. It forms gravel, hardens the arteries and brings on dropsy or Bright's disease.

By restoring the kidneys to normal activity Doan's Kidney Pills help to overcome excess uric acid.

An Alabama Case

Mrs. J. W. Baxter, 330 Church St., Huntsville, Ala., says: "Malaria fever left my kidneys weak. My back ached terribly and I was tired all the time. I suffered from headaches and dizzy spells and could hardly turn over in bed. After the doctor failed, I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they fixed me up in good shape."

Inventor of the Airbrake.

Who really invented the airbrake? Certainly the automatic airbrake, the one that has proved practicable and of permanent value in modern railroading, was the product of the late George Westinghouse's ingenuity. His patent for the automatic brake was taken out in 1872, superseding the non-automatic or "straight" Westinghouse airbrake patented in 1869, and later the Westinghouse vacuum brake was invented. But, as in the case of most other inventions, there are several claimants for originality in this field. Thus Mme. M. Drouanet, daughter of M. Debruges of Paris, claims the distinction of priority for her father. The New York Times has a letter from State Senator William P. Fiero of White Plains containing a patent office declaration by his grandfather, Henry Miller, of a "new and useful improvement in the application of steam and compressed air to the purpose of operating railroad brakes," recorded January 2, 1855. Mr. Miller was doubtless a pioneer in the progress of airbrake invention.

Rays of Humor.

From underneath the war cloud little flashes of humor escape now and again.

Two Irish sergeants, brought wounded to Paris, are reported as saying that they did not know exactly where the battle was, but they had just been "fighting at Copenhagen." They probably meant Compeigne, but it made no difference in their willingness to fight.

The Paris Figaro pictures as a common sight on the streets two men reading their respective newspapers through to the end, and then exchanging a Figaro for a Matin, and absorbingly rereading in the second newspaper the identical official announcement which they had read in the first.

Too Ambiguous.

Thornton—When Willie Wimpus wanted a new motor car he thought he would throw out a broad hint to his father.

Rosemary—Did the scheme work?

Thornton—Not exactly. He told the old man he would like something he could start and stop, and his father bought him a dollar watch.

A Word From the Weary.

PARADISE FOR THE ARTIST

Devotees of the Brush Are Accorded Accommodations Without Price at Inn at Capri.

Capri, beautiful in itself as a winter resort, offers an irresistible invitation to artists, since it has an inn where anyone, by painting a picture on the wall can get free board.

To the lovely island of Capri, with its perennial summer, its blue grotto, and its lemon groves, came, some fifty years ago, a ruined artist. He opened an inn, and died rich. In his will, leaving the inn to his heirs, he made these conditions:

"The charge per day, two bottles of red Capri wine included, is never to be more than six francs.

"If any artist is too poor to pay he shall paint a picture upon some wall-space, receiving all the accommodation accorded to those paying the highest price.

"If any German artist shall come to the inn he shall be accommodated, and shall receive the amount of his fare to Germany upon his promising never to return to Italy."

The inn is conducted today on these conditions. Its walls are covered with paintings. Now and then a German gets his fare home.

Correct.

"Love levels all things," quoted the sage.

"Yes, everything but heads," corrected the fool.

As Brown landed on the platform he ran full butt into Jones.

"Where bound, Jones, and why such speed?" queried Brown.

"Just off to Seashell-on-the-Mud, and am anxious to get some fruit before I start."

"Fruit? Just the thing! Now she's just off; jump in that carriage. I left a fine pear in the corner."

Jones got in and started searching around.

"My friend said he left a fine pear in the corner," explained Jones, as an old lady sniffed angrily at the way he searched round her.

"Guess he meant that corner, my man," she snapped.

Jones looked and saw a young couple blushing furiously.

Physicians Recommend Castoria

CASTORIA has met with pronounced favor on the part of physicians, pharmaceutical societies and medical authorities. It is used by physicians with results most gratifying. The extended use of Castoria is unquestionably the result of three facts: First—The indisputable evidence that it is harmless: Second—That it not only allays stomach pains and quiets the nerves, but assimilates the food: Third—It is an agreeable and perfect substitute for Castor Oil. It is absolutely safe. It does not contain any Opium, Morphine, or other narcotic and does not stupefy. It is unlike Soothing Syrups, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, etc. This is a good deal for a Medical Journal to say. Our duty, however, is to expose danger and record the means of advancing health. The day for poisoning innocent children through greed or ignorance ought to end. To our knowledge, Castoria is a remedy which produces composure and health, by regulating the system—not by stupefying it—and our readers are entitled to the information.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. B. Halstead Scott, of Chicago, Ills., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria often for infants during my practice, and find it very satisfactory."

Dr. William Belmont, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "Your Castoria stands first in its class. In my thirty years of practice I can say I never have found anything that so filled the place."

Dr. J. H. Taft, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria and found it an excellent remedy in my household and private practice for many years. The formula is excellent."

Dr. R. J. Hamlen, of Detroit, Mich., says: "I prescribe your Castoria extensively, as I have never found anything to equal it for children's troubles. I am aware that there are imitations in the field, but I always see that my patients get Fletcher's."

Dr. Wm. J McCrann, of Omaha, Neb., says: "As the father of thirteen children I certainly know something about your great medicine, and aside from my own family experience I have in my years of practice found Castoria a popular and efficient remedy in almost every home."

Dr. J. R. Clausen, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "The name that your Castoria has made for itself in the tens of thousands of homes blessed by the presence of children, scarcely needs to be supplemented by the endorsement of the medical profession, but I, for one, most heartily endorse it and believe it an excellent remedy."

Dr. R. M. Ward, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Physicians generally do not prescribe proprietary preparations, but in the case of Castoria my experience, like that of many other physicians, has taught me to make an exception. I prescribe your Castoria in my practice because I have found it to be a thoroughly reliable remedy for children's complaints. Any physician who has raised a family, as I have, will join me in heartiest recommendation of Castoria."

MR. BONE WEDS MISS CARRIE Z. MULLINS

An incident of last Sunday afternoon, which carries with it a wide interest, and equally as much surprise, was the marriage of Prof. Joseph F. Bone and Miss Carrie Z. Mullins.

The ceremony was a quiet one, being attended only by the immediate friends of the popular couple. They left on the same afternoon for Montgomery where they will spend this week, after which they will make their home at New Decatur, where Mr. Bone will teach for the next year.

Both parties to the wedding are well known here, having been in past very successful teachers in this county. Many are their friends who will learn of their marriage with interest, and join in wishing them a happy life.

Shower For Miss Mullins

Mrs. J. Q. Wade entertained at a shower in honor of Miss Myrtle Mullins last Friday afternoon. The home was beautifully decorated for the occasion in red and green.

The guests were entertained with a drawing contest, each one being required to draw a picture of some person well known to the company.

After the prizes were awarded little Miss Elizabeth Duncan entered. She was dressed as a bride in white lace and flowing veil, carrying bride's roses, and drawing after her a small wagon in which was a basket containing about seventy-five beautifully embroidered pieces of linen.

A delicious salad course was served.

Miss Mullins was beautiful in a white crepe de chine gown. Miss Maud Mullins wore pink hand embroidered crepe de chine. Mrs. Wade was charming in a dress of soft white material.

DON'T TAKE WRONG MEDICINE

If your liver gets lazy you need a liver tonic, not merely a laxative for the bowels. Many people take a simple laxative when the liver gets sluggish rather than take calomel, which they know to be dangerous. But a mere laxative will not start a sluggish liver. What is needed is a tonic that will liven up the liver without forcing you to stay at at home and lose a day from your work.

You have such a tonic in Dodson's Liver Tone. Dodson's Liver Tone is all that is claimed for it, because the druggists who sell it agree to hand back the money with a smile, to any person not satisfied with the relief Dodson's gives.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a vegetable liquid with a very pleusant taste and is a prompt and reliable remedy for constipation biliousness, sour stomach and torpid liver.

Alred Drug Company give it their personal guarantee. Large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone is only 50 cents. For children or grown people it is the ideal medicine. Try it on the guarantee.

Hint for Coming Maternity

In a little book designed for expectant mothers more complete instruction is given in the use of "Mother's Friend." This is an external embrocation applied to the abdominal muscles for the purpose of reducing the strain on ligaments, cords and tendons.

In thus bringing relief and avoiding pain great good is accomplished. It serves to ease the mind, indirectly has a most beneficial effect upon the nervous system and thousands of women have delightedly told how they were free of nausea, had no morning sickness and went through the ordeal with most remarkable success. "Mother's Friend" has been growing in popular favor for more than forty years. In almost every community are grandmothers who used it themselves, their daughters have used it and they certainly must know what a blessing it is when they recommend it so warmly. Strictly an external application it has no other effect than to ease the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments involved hence is perfectly safe to use by all women. It is used very successfully to prevent caking of breasts.

Bill of Rights.

The bill of rights is a declaration of fundamental principles deemed basic to the Constitution itself and borrowed from the English bill of rights of 1689. When the Constitution of the United States was framed and submitted to the people it did not have a bill of rights and it was so harshly criticized on this account that its friends promised to incorporate or add such a declaration, and the first ten amendments to the Constitution, made after the main instrument was adopted, were in fulfillment of this promise. All the State Constitutions now have bills of rights, practically identical with one another.

EQUAL JUSTICE

Selfishness actuates many of the arguments made on the political stump and pleas made before juries. Equal Justice to all parties concerned is lost sight of.

The cradle days of the American Republic were marked by hardship and privation on the battle field. Our fathers were determined that they would enjoy equal rights with the mother country.

Emerging victorious they adopted a Constitution which provided and guaranteed equal justice to all. That document is a masterpiece of calmness, of statesmanship, of high ideals.

How many of our people have read that document? How many of us have memorized, have pondered it, thinking out the words which constitute the very foundation of our national life?

The L. & N. writes of these things because we want equal justice for the corporation and the citizen alike; no more, no less. We realize the freedom of political speech. We appreciate the educational value of discussion. We hold in reverence the judicial part of our government. We realize that law and order are essential to national prosperity.

We ask only that a mutual understanding exist. That is why we are writing to you frankly, sincerely.

If the citizen would resent the filing of claims which are without merit, the making of attacks that are without foundation, the unjust treatment of corporations on the stump and before juries, a better day would dawn for American peace and prosperity.

The policy of the L. & N. is that no one shall be imposed upon. We devote equal effort in safeguarding the interest of the general public and the interest of our property, to the end that equal justice may be meted out to all.

It is only through equal justice that mutual prosperity can exist.

THE UNION-BANNER

VOL. 3 | THE UNION 11th Year | CLANTON, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1914 | THE BANNER 21st Year | NO. 25

FACTS GIVEN BY OUR COUNTY COMMISSIONER

Editor Union-Banner:--Please give me a short space in your paper to answer some questions that have been asked me in regard to the present condition of the county.

I will say, in the best of my judgment, in regard to the present financial condition of the county, that with what the county now owes and what it has contracted for which will be due by January 15th, 1915, is about $20,000.00 or $22,000.00; and the expectation of letting another contract for about $25,000.00, to be paid in one, two and three years from now, is being carried out. This is to finish grading the Birmingham and Montgomery highway north of Clanton. This road will cost the county about $37,000.00 to be graded and fitted with wooden bridges; and in the course of two or three years this road will have to be graveled and rolled to satisfy the automobilists of Birmingham and Montgomery, which will cost the county about $20,000.00. As soon as the wood bridges begin to give way steel and concrete bridges will be demanded, which will cost approximately $30,000 more. All this will make the road cost, as a whole, $75,000 or $80,000.

Now I am opposed to putting all the money on one or two roads in the county. I believe in reaching the man at the foot of the ladder as well as at the top. The proposed highway, as I see it, is for the people of Montgomery and Birmingham, as some of them came before our court, and told us that if we would build the road the people from those towns would donate about $10,000 toward it, (but where is the donation?)

When we build roads by warrants or bonds we send large sums of money in the way of interest to New York and other large cities, and have to employ large contractors to do the work and handle the warrants. Why not give this work to our farmers and keep this contract money at home where it belongs, as the farmers have to make it.

I do not want anyone to think that I do not advocate good roads; but I do disapprove the way they are going at it.

I notice that the Press likes to give my name the honor of helping to form the present debt warrant system that is about to take effect in this county. I wish to say that I do not deserve this honor or credit, as I do not believe in doing anything indirectly that the Constitution of the state of Alabama forbids us doing directly. The constitution says that we cannot issue bonds without the vote of the people. To issue interest-bearing time warrants is taking the voice of the people away from them, and doing things whether or not. I realize that I am only a servant of the people of this county (not of the people of Birmingham and Montgomery) and I believe in treating all parts of the county alike as near as possible, showing no special favors to any.

This time warrant plan for building roads is being strongly advocated by the democrats of this county and some hungry contractors that have no interest in you or your county.

If you are a free people lets vote the Progressive ticket which will listen to the voice of the people, and be free indeed.

Thanking you for this space in advance, I am yours for the Bull Moose ticket.

W. T. Herrod.

Mrs. Mary Russell Payton Died

Mrs. Mary Russell Payton, a venerable lady of 78 years of age, and mother of Mrs. J. P. Smith, died at the latters home near Clanton on Sept. 10th, 1914.

She was the wife of the late Archibald Payton, who moved to this county with his family in 1902, and died at Maplesville in 1912. Since the death of her husband she had been living with the family of Mr. Smith.

As a believer and worker in the church of Christ, the deceased lady had been active since the early years of her womanhood. Her membership was at Salem church in Coosa county, the place she had cherished from her childhood days.

She was twice married, and was preceded to the grave by both her husbands. Her life was blessed by ten children, six of whom are living.

Funeral services over the remains of her mortal existence were conducted, by Rev. W. J. Armstrong, at Mulbarry church when all that was earthly of this good woman was given back to the dust, and the noble spirit of her life returned to the God who gave it.

Pres. Convention No. 1.

AN APPEAL FOR THE RULE OF THE PEOPLE

Editor Union-Banner:—I have decided that I would drop you a few words; if you have space to print them, all right.

I want to ask what has the democratic party done for the dear people since they took control of this government? It appears to me that this country is in the worst condition that it has ever been in before, and yet a number of democrats say they can see nothing going wrong. When any charge is brought up against the democratic party they never ask or investigate for any broof, but tell the accuser to clear himself. It the democrats were to get the people to where they could not get one cent of money (and we are now nearly to that point,) they would still brag on their party. They brag as much over a failure as over a success, for when the bosses in the little towns tell the country democrats to throw up their hats and hollow, up she goes and out comes a yell. The democrats say that their party to them is the antidote of despair, the elixer of hope, the tonic of depression, the cure of suicide.

I almost feel like crying to hear some democrats boosting the democratic party at a time like this; some of them can be heard saying that it is all right to get the county in debt as far as pleasure demands. Some of the same men said four years ago that Reynolds and Co. made the taxes too high. Now the taxes have been doubled, and because the democrats are in the lead for bonds, road warrants, and other means of throwing the county in debt, the same fellows say it is all right. Put it to us; we will grin and endure it to the end, if you town fellows say for us to.

It has been my opinion for some time that the democrats were controlled entirely by towns and now I am convinced that it is a fact, and I do not believe they will let a country fellow vote who will not vote to suit them. If they threaten to put one of their own men out of a job if he does not vote in their primary as they suggest, what would they do for a Progressive?

I can hardly understand how those men who own the Clanton Press can conduct such discussion of a campaign as they now are. Just stop for a minute and think who is running it for them. Have they lost all self respect? Have they no principal? Do they stand for anything? I cannot understand why they are so much opposed to the farmers, for, it I know who they are, the farmers support them and they have made their money off them and surely expect to make some more in the same manner. Now Mr. Press, I wish you would publish the names of the parties that own and control the Press. I think the people should know, and Mr. J. M. Mims hit the nail on the head when he said we ought to trade with our men who are ready to stand up and fight for us and our liberties. If the crowd that controls the democratic party were to get in full control of the county government, I ask in the name of common sense, what would become of this county? Where would our taxes go to? I heard one of the commissioners say that Judge Deason wanted to issue enough time warrants to build a highway through the couuty, east and west, and north and south, which I am sure would take more than 100,000 dollars. My, my! What are we coming to? The Constitution gives the people the right to vote on bonds before they can be issued, and right here in our county we have democrats that would deprive the people of their Constitutional rights by issuing time warrants, which anybody knows are worse than bonds. I would like to know how the warrants can ever be paid, if our county has gotten in debt fifteen or twenty thousand dollars without building any permanent roads. Does the issuance of warrants mean that all the rest of the roads will have to go without work? I would like for Messrs Herrod, Shaw or Robinson, or all of them to make a statement of the condition of the county affairs; tell us how much in debt the county is; how much they expect to contract on the roads to be paid in the future. Tell us how you expect to get the money to pay them with. I think the people have a right to know of the workings of the county. It seems that just a few are keeping everything a secret from the people. Do you expect to raise our taxes after the election is over? I cannot for my life see how the counto will pay for building the highway unless they raise our taxes. They have been nearly doubled within the last three years, and the Lord knows we are taxed to death now. Where the farmers are going to get the money to pay their taxes this fall is a severe problem now before them and if they are to be raised, it will be farewell; their homes will have to be taken, and all they can hope for is that in two years the Progressives will get in power and then they can redeem it.

Has it come to the place that the farmers of this county have no voice in the affairs of the county? I am sure that if this question of issuing warrants were left to the people, they would vote against it five to one.

Have the dem crats come to the conclusion that this is their last time at the public trough, and that they are going to make well of it? Are they going to bankrupt the county in spite of the protests of four-fifths of the people? Why not give the people a chance to vote on the question? The law provides it.

I hope to see the full statement of the county affairs next week. I am sure we are entitled to it; and if we cannot stop the extravagance before, we will meet you at the polls in November.

Respectfully,
One for the rule of the people.

Burglary at Thorsby

The store of Parnell & Freeman at Thorsby was entered by burglars Monday night. The cash drawer was broken open, and robbed of $12 in money. They took some shoes and other merchandise, the value of which has not yet been determined.

The robbers entered the store by way of a rear window, and carried their goods out at the back door. As yet there is no clue toward identifying the perpetrators of the act.

As my work calls me away, I will close this season with my horse at Thorsby. He will be at Mars Hill Friday, Sept. 25, and every nine days thereafter, and will be also back here for spring season.

H. H. Hayes.

COUNTY BOARD OF REGISTRARS

Register Chanc'y 2 Apr 12

The Board of Registrars of Chilton county will be in session at the court house in Clanton on Friday and Saturday, October 30 and 31, for the purpose of registering voters for the general election of November 3rd. All men who have become 21 years of age since October 1, 1913 are entitled to register and have their names placed on the list of qualified voters for Chilton county.

Mr. Thomas as A Representative

Editor Union-Banner:—Please allow me space in your paper to say a few words to the voters of this county, in regard to my candidacy for the office of Representative. I wish to say a few words in regard to that great injustice that has been done to the common schools of this state, at the hands of the democratic party. Should I be elected to represent Chilton county in the next Legislature, I will use every effort in my power to increase the appropriation to the rural schools of this state.

The children atending the rural schools are now receiving $2.84 each per year, while the students of the State University are receiving $369.00 each. I feel that this is a great wrong, and that children in the rural schools should receive a much larger amount than they are now getting, and I will do all in my power to secure a much larger appropriatian for the rural schools. I feel that the peoples money has been spent uselessly on high salaried officers, and in other ways that did not benefit the common people of the state, and I will do all in my power, if elected, toward economizing the expense of the state, when same can be done without injury to the common good of the people.

I feel that the present administration has been extremely wasteful in the affairs of this state, and that the wishes of the people have been entirely ignored. I feel that something should be done to stop the waste of the people's money on useless officers and appropriations, which does not benefit the masses of the people. Some of the appropriations that have been made by the democratic administration have been for the classes of the people instead of the masses; and most of the offices that have been created have been at the suggestion of the Machine Democrats of the state, to pay political debts. I feel that all such affairs should be abolished and the money left in the treasury should be appropriated to the common schools of the state.

I am against a bond issue and time warrants. I believe that before the county is put in debt it should be submitted to a vote of the people, and see whether they desire the debt or not. I believe that the voice of the people is supreme, and should be heard above three or four men.

In conclusion, I wish to say again that I will do all in my power to bring about better appropriations for the common schools, and get some laws passed looking toward the common people of this county and state.

W. E. Thomas.

NEWS LETTER FROM CAPITAL

Happenings in and About Alabama's State House Interestingly Told.

—Montgomery.

Samuel L. Stoddard of Cordova will be the Republican candidate for Congress from the Sixth District against William B. Oliver of Tuscaloosa, Democratic nominee, according to a certificate filed in the office of Cyrus B. Brown, Secretary of State. The certificate was filed by Sim T. Wright as secretary of the Republican State organization.

Morgan to Instruct A. N. G.

Sergeant-instructors of the Alabama National Guard started this week on an itinerary of instruction through north and south Alabama, according to an announcement made at the office of the state military department.

Sergt. L. R. Morgan has been detailed to north Alabama, where he will spend several weeks instructing companies at Florence, New Decatur, Birmingham and Bessemer. Sergt. John L. Sweeney will work in south Alabama, going first to Luverne and thence to Mobile, Bay Minette and Castleberry.

Sergeant Morgan will spend two weeks in Florence working with the new company of the Second regiment which has just been mustered into service. He will then go to New Decatur for a week and thence to Birmingham, where he will spend one week with each of the companies in that city. Later he will spend a week instructing the Bessemer company.

The itinerary of Sergeant Sweeney includes one week at each place with the exception of Mobile, where he will remain three weeks.

Shackling of Convicts Inhumane.

Shackling of convicted prisoners in the Bessemer city jail is "inhumane and cruel," and is "a sad commentary upon the city," says a report filed in the office of Governor O'Neal by Dr. W. H. Oates, state prison inspector, who recently inspected the Bessemer city prison. Dr. Oates declares that many of the prisoners in the jail have ugly scores upon their ankles caused by the use of leg irons.

"I respectfully called the attention of the mayor and members of the city council to the fact that several counties of the state, including Madison, Pike, Morgan and Etowah, are working long term convicts on the roads without shackles, and with very few escapes," said Dr. Oates.

Dr. Oates declares that he has taken up this question several times with the city authorities of Bessemer and was under the impression that the shackles were removed at night, if not altogether discontinued.

"I find that I was wrong and that neither has been done," said Dr. Oates.

Reports on the condition of the county jailes of Etowah, Cherokee, Marshall, St. Clair, Bibb and Blount were filed. The inspections were made by John D. Adams, chief clerk in the office of Dr. Oates. Nearly all of these jails were found to be in satisfactory condition although recommendations as to cleaning and renovating were made in a few instances. In Marshall county it was found that great improvement has been made.

Reappoint Agee and Winkinson.

W. C. Agee and E. Wilkinson of Birmingham were reappointed by Governor O'Neal as chairman and associate member, respectively, of the Birmingham excise commission. Both were named for two-year terms. Mr. Agee has served three years as associate member.

For the last six weeks an active fight for these two positions has been waged. There were about fifteen applicants for the positions and there was considerable opposition to the reappointment of Chairman Agee. There was practically no opposition to Mr. Wilkinson.

Tax Commissioner Removed.

J. B. Cosby, tax commissioner of Perry county, has been removed by the state tax commission, it was announced by Associate Member Henry P. White. Mr. Cosby was removed "for cause," it was announced. J. O. Bailey of Marion was appointed to succeed the deposed official.

The removal of the county tax official followed a visit to Marion of Special Agent Harvey Blue, who was sent to Perry county in the regular course of his inspections over the state.

New Insurance Tax Double One.

Frank Julian, associate member of the railroad commission, issued a statement to the effect that if the ruling of the tax commission, relative to taxing the reserve or cash value of life insurance policies, is put into effect, "it will simply mean double taxation." According to Mr. Julian, the "reserve, cash or surrender value of a policy, is created out of a portion of the premium, and the state collects a tax on all premiums, hence the further taxing of a premium is necessarily a tax on premiums."

Game Wardens Active.

Illustrative of the activity displayed by county game wardens in prosecuting all violations of the game statutes, John H. Wallace, Jr., state game and fish commissioner, announced a dozen or more recent convictions in three counties of the state.

S. A. Edwards, the game warden of Mobile, reported to Mr. Wallace a few days ago the arrest and conviction of six persons on the charge of shooting squirrels out of season. A fine of $25 was assessed against each violator.

The game warden of Crenshaw county, H. J. Browder, reported to the game department that four persons in his county had been convicted in the circuit court of posioning streams and had been fined $50 each.

Other convictions were reported by J. C. Mims, game warden of Pickens county, who announced to the department that two persons in his county had been fined $50 each for illicit seining of streams.

Solvent Credits Taxable.

The state tax commission formally ruled that foreign corporations are taxable on all solvent credits in Alabama and so instructed the various county commissioners of the state. The commission, in its ruling, announced that it had paid especial attention to the class of foreign corporations which have depots or manufacturing plants from which the products of the corporations are sold and distributed, "and for which credit is given and which credits are under the control of some office outside the state of Alabama."

The substance of the commission's ruling was that foreign corporations are taxable on all credits in Alabama where such credits arise from shipments made from the distributing plants and depots in this state. "It is further the opinion of the commission," according to the opinion rendered, "that such solvent credits are assessable at the places where such distributing plants and depots are located."

The commission has not yet passed on the question of assessing credits of public service corporations.

Feagin Issues School Manual.

The County High School Manual, a volume setting out the new course of study, together with the textbooks to be used in these schools, is the latest publication issued by the state department of education.

The manual was prepared by Superintendent of Education William F. Feagin with the assistance of members of the faculties of the higher institutions of learning and principals and teachers of secondary schools, the various subjects being treated separately.

In his introductory statement Superintendent Feagin calls attention to the fact that the county high school is the property of the county and should be in touch with the humblest school in the community.

"In furtherance of the spirit that has been implicit both in the conception and the preparation of this manual, it is confidently expected that the faculty of the county high schools in the state will give themselves largely to extension work in behalf of the rural schools," said the superintendent of education.

Good Roads Tour Announced.

Good roads advocates of Elmore, Coosa, Talladega and Montgomery counties have arranged for a big good roads tour from Montgomery to Talladega for the purpose of mapping out a trunk highway according to an announcement made by W. S. Keller, state highway engineer. Mr. Keller has been invited to go on the trip and make the tour with the good roads promoters.

Leaving Montgomery October 6 the parties will go to Talladega by way of Wetumpka, Sandtuck, Central, Seeman, Equality, Nixburg and Goodwater. No stops will be made in Elmore county because that county already has a splendid system of roads. Stops will be made at Equality, Nixburg and Goodwater. At Goodwater dinner will be served.

On the return trip the scouts will go by way of Sylacauga, Hanover, Rockford, Speed, Buyck and Wetumpka. Stops will be made at Sylacauga, Hanover and Rockford, dinner being served at Rockford.

This movement will be for the purpose of stimulating interest in the "Montgomery - Talladega" highway.

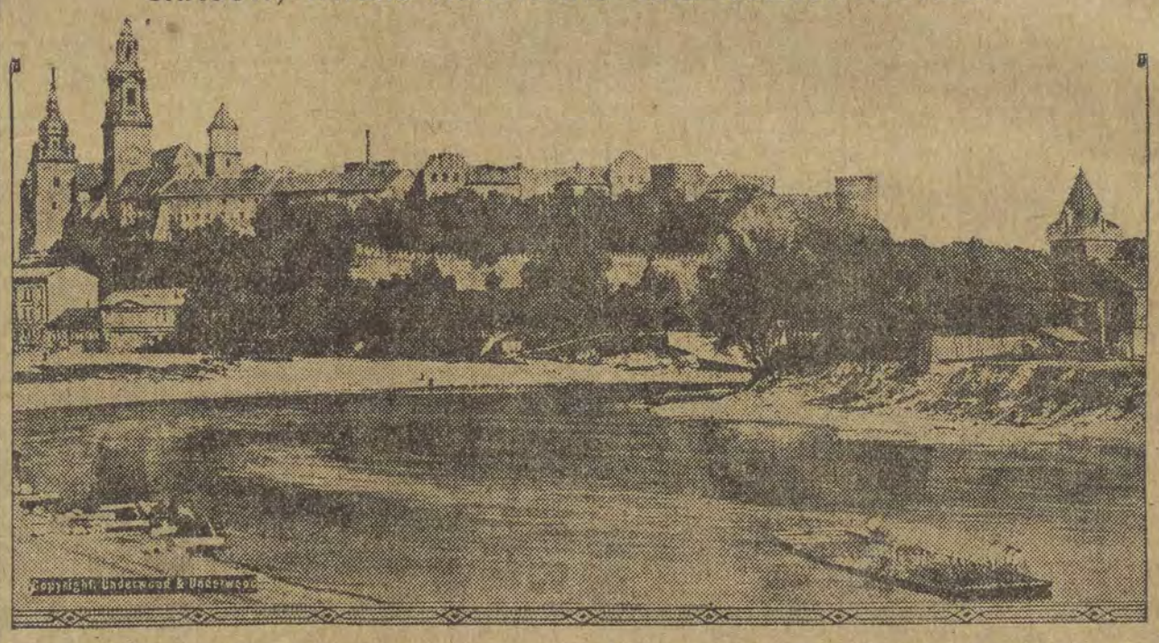
Invitation Issued.

Declaring that the time is opportune to give an impetus to road building in Alabama and stating that an interesting program has been arranged for the next annual meeting of the Alabama Good Roads association, which meets in Montgomery October 21-23, the Chamber of Commerce has issued a general invitation to good roads organiations and other bodies urging them to attend the meeting. The entertainment feature of the meeting will consist of a 75-mile ride through Montgomery county.

Shelby County Game Warden.

J. N. Robertson was appointed game warden of Shelby county.

Crossland Succeeds Gilmer.



Governor O'Neal appointed David W. Crossland as tax assessor of Montgomery county, succeeding Morgan S. Gilmer, who died recently. The appointee had been serving as chief clerk to the assessor for a number of years, and upon the death of Mr. Gilmer there was a general endorsement of his application for the vacancy. The appointment is for two years.

FIERCE BATTLE IS WAGED ON SOMME

GERMANS AND ALLIES HAVE BEEN STRIVING 2 WEEKS TO PUSH EACH OTHER BACK.

RUSSIANS FIGHT GERMANS

Netherlands Declare Martial Law to Prevent Exportation of Contrabands of War to Germany. Keiser's Son Sick.

London.—The territory between the rivers Somme and Oise is the scene of the fiercest battle along the great front in Northern France, where the Germans and allies have been striving for two weeks to force each other back. This ground includes the French left wing, which has thrown tremendous forces against the German general, Von Kluck's, re-enforced army in an endeavor to outflank him.

The French official report describes this struggle as a violent one and announces that the allied troops have made a slight advance.

In the Woevre region the French also report some gain, but describe the situation on the heights of the Meuse as unchanged.

Prior to this, however, the Germans had crossed the River Meuse near St. Mihiel in the Woevre district.

The Russian general staff reports a battle between the Russians and Germans in the region of Druskenhiki, in the government of Suwalki, Russian Poland, bordering on Prussia, but gives no details. The general staff also reports the retirement of the Austrian army westward on Cracow.

The Netherlands government has declared martial law in the eastern provinces, according to an Amsterdam dispatch, to prevent the exportation of contrabands of war to Germany and at the same time Great Britain takes a clear position in the matter of contraband, making it compulsory for neutral countries importing foodstuffs to give assurances that the food is not intended for German consumption.

Prince Oscar, the German emporor's fifth son, according to the announcement from Berlin, has been obliged to withdraw from his regiment because of an affection of the heart, brought on by overexertion.

Latest reports indicate that the Austrian seaport of Cattaro, in Dalmatia, is being bombarded by French and British warships and that the Austrian fortress of Pelagosa has been dismantled and seized.

BIG BATTLE IS IMMINENT

Germans Mass Troops for Clash with Russians in East Prussia—Latter Chase Position.

London.—A dispatch from Petrograd to the Daily Chronicle says:

"A new and decisive battle is imminent on the borders of East Prussia. There is complete confidence in Gen. Rennenkampf, who has had his own way, inasmuch as the fight, when it comes, is to be on ground chosen by him.

"One army corps a day is the rate at which Germany is re-enforcing her army in East Prussia. Along the whole western line, from near Memel in the north to the frontier of the government of Alisch, the armies are in touch, groping by means of reconnaissance and minor collisions at the facts concerning each other's strength and position.

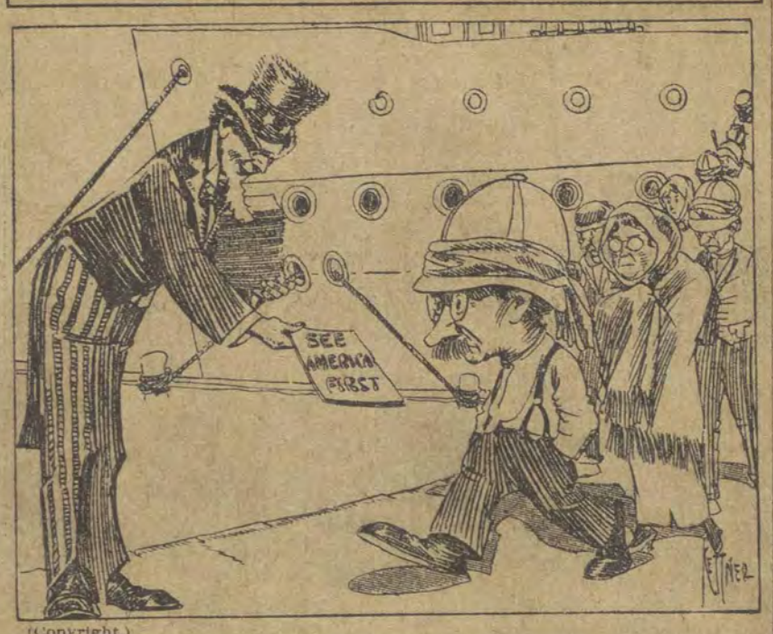
"We know that to the 11 army corps already in East Prussia there must now be added at least five more, of which three are reserves, and that, further, there is a secondary army on the Alisch frontier, whose function is to cover the German right. At least 800,000 German troops of all classes are gathered to try and balance the Austrian failures."

GERMAN COLONIES CAPTURED

Coco Beach Is Seized—Germans Make Reprisals by Raid in Cape Colony. French in West Africa.

Bordeaux.—The ministry of marine announced that the French gunboat Surprise took possession of Coco Beach, in Kamarun, the German colony in Western Equatorial Africa.

Victor Augagneur, the minister of marine, announced the capture of Coco Beach at the cabinet meeting. He said that previous to landing her marines, who dislodged the German troops on shore, the Surprise, which is a small vessel of 680 tons, unarmored, and carrying 10 small guns, sank two vessels belonging to the German auxiliary fleet, the Rhios and the Italo. M. Augagneur said that this capture was a brilliant exploit to the credit of the Surprise.



Roumania May Join Allies.

Petrograd.—A Bucharest dispatch to the Novoe Vremya says it is rumored that the first Roumanian army corps has been ordered to the Austrian frontier.

TERRIFIC ATTACK AT NIGHT

Hand-to-Hand Encounter—Lines Clash in Terrific Bayonet Charges in the Dark.

Paris.—In a furious night attack opened by the allies simultaneously along the whole line between the Aisne and the Oise, the Germans were surprised in their trenches and driven out at several points on the German right, both sides suffering very heavy losses.

Soon after the attack opened, the Germans directed an attack against the allies' lines further to the east, but were finally driven back in a hand-to-hand encounter, in which line after line clashed in terrific bayonet charges in the dark.

Severe fighting has occurred along the entire battle line, which has narrowed to about 90 miles because of the rival armies drawing closer together for more massive compact.

During the early part of the night the engagement had narrowed to activity of the heavy guns, and the fire was desultory. But at 2 o'clock in the morning a preconcerted attack by the allies opened with unprecedented fury. Artillery, rapid-fire guns and small signal, and the fire was overwhelming.

On the allies' left the onslaught was conducted with the greatest vigor, for here the attacking French and British had made the greatest advances and the troops were buoyed up by the full enthusiasm of their triumphs.

The French gunners had the range, and raked the German trenches with a galling fire. Under cover of this and the rapid-firers, which swept the top of the line of trenches, the British and English cavalry and infantry advanced and stormed them.

The energy of the attack took the Germans by surprise, and after a fierce struggle at the trenches, the Germans were driven back. The German resistance was desperate. It was not until they were overwhelmed that they were swept from their position.

ALLIES MAKE SOME GAINS

Try Hard to Turn Right Wing of German Army—Violent Fighting Along Front.

Paris.—The French official communication, after announcing that there has been no change in the situation on the battle front since the issuance of the previous communication, comments on the battle of the Aisne.

"There has been no change in the situation since the last communication.

"The battle in progress along the Aisne has extended over eight days, but it should cause no surprise if one recalls the Russo-Japanese war.

"The battle of the Marne was an action undertaken in the open field, which began with a general resumption of the offensive by the French army against the enemy, who did not expect it and had not time seriously to organize defensive positions. The same cannot be said of the battle of the Aisne, where the adversary, who was retreating, stopped and took position which by the nature of the ground are substantial in themselves in many places and which he gradually has improved as to organization.

"This battle of the Aisne, therefore, presents on a large part of its front the character of war by assault similar to the operations in Manchuria.

"It might be added that the exceptional power of the artillery facing each other—the heavy German artillery against the French 7 5-centimeter cannon—gives a particular value to the temporary fortifications which the two adversaries have now drawn up.

"The task is, therefore, to take whole rows of entrenchments, each one protected by close defenses, particularly rows of barbed wire with mitrailleuses in concealed positions.

Two Trains Blown Up.

London.—The Mail's war correspondent states that two trains of German re-enforcements were blown up between Peronne and St. Quentin by a French gunner. The correspondent also says that the entire general staff of one German division was brought prisoners to Amiens.

Liner and Collier Taken.

London.—The official press bureau announced that the British cruiser captured the German armored liner Spreewald and three colliers in the Nroth Atlantic on Sept. 12.

HEAVY GUNS ARE USED

Both Sides Continue to Hammer Away at Entrenchments of Enemies. Battle Not Decisive.

New York.—Count von Bernstorff, German ambassador to the United States, announced he had received by wireless, by way of Sayville, an official statement from the German general staff in Berlin, as follows:

"On the right wing of the German army beyond the Oise the battle has come to a standstill. Flanking movements of the French army have had no success. Between there and the forest of Argonne no serious fighting took place. East of the Argonne Vareness was taken by the Germans.

"Their advance is continuing. The German army, which is attacking the forts south of Verdun, repulsed sorties from Verdun and Toul. Many prisoners and machine guns and cannon were taken. The heavy German artillery has begun to bombard successfully the French forts of Troyon-les-Paroches, Camp des Romaine and Lionville (L'Ironville).

"In the French Lorraine and on the frontier of Alsace French troops were repulsed.

Paris.—The brief official communication issued here announces that on the left wing the battle continues to develop; that a lull has occurred in the fighting in the center and that on the right wing German attacks apparently have been checked.

London.—Heavy artillery continues to play a leading part in the battle of the Aisne, which has been in progress nearly a fortnight. The opposing forces continue to hammer away at each other from their well entrenched and strongly fortified positions with the greatest stubbornness, but without decision.

Almost without a lull great shells are being hurled across the rivers, valleys and plains stretching from the River Oise in the west to the Meuse in the east, and thence southward along the whole Franco-German border, while the lighter guns play on the infantry lying in the trenches awaiting an opportunity to deliver attacks and counter attacks, with, as the French official communication says, "alternate retirement on certain points and advance on others."

DISCOVER CHOLERA IN ARMY

Announcement Causes Apprehension in Dual Monarchy—Nine Cases Reported in Hungarian Army.

Vienna.—Nine cases of Asiatic cholera have been discovered among wounded soldiers in Hungary. The announcement has excited great apprehension throughout the dual monarchy.

It is learned here that the first suspected case of cholera in Hungary was that of a wounded soldier brought Sept. 15 to Bekes Csaba from the Galician battlefield. The bacteriological examination clearly showed Asiatic cholera.

The patient immediately was isolated. Since then eight other cases have been discovered, also among the wounded who returned from Galicia.

Both Austrian and Hungarian ministers of the interior are taking the utmost precautions against a spread of the disease.

Vienna is awaiting with keen anxiety news of the progress of the fighting against the Russians and Servians, but nothing is forthcoming beyond the bare official statement that there are no new developments in the eastern theater of the war.

Four Die on Revenue Cutter.

Seattle, Wash.—Unconfirmed reports here were that four men in the fire room of the revenue cutter Tahoma perished when the vessel went on a reef in the Rat Island group of the Aleutian Islands and was lost.

Captain Went Down With Ship.

London.—The correspondent at Harwich of the Evening News says he learns from survivors of the disaster to the three British cruisers that Capt. Robert W. Johnson of the Cressy went down with his ship.

50,000 Germans Wounded.

Amsterdam.—The correspondent at Maestricht of the Telegraaf says that during the past few days about 50,000 Germans, wounded on French battlefields, have passed through Liege on the way to Germany.

GERMANS TO RESIST RUSSIA AT CRACOW

GERMAN TROOPS RULE TOWN AND THE AUSTRIAN CIVIL GOVERNMENT FLEES.

RESIDENTS IN A PANIC

Three Army Corps Thrown Into Cracow District by Germans—Baltic Fleet Possible — All Traffic Is Stopped from Berlin.

London.—"That Cracow has been occupied by German troops, that the town has been put under a German military commandant and that the Austrian civil administration has been displaced is the gist of the latest advices received here," says the Petrograd correspondent of the Morning Post.

"All the original administration of the city has fled and all the civil officials of the Austrian government have left. Residents are fleeing in a panic.

"The leaders of the Polish secret committee, which has been in charge of all the Polish volunteer detachments fighting on the Austrian side also have left Cracow. The Germans have thrown three army corps into the Cracow district, according to this information, and are bringing more troops in preparation for the expected Russian attack.

"Word has been received here that Germany has stopped all traffic on the railways between Berlin and the German Baltic ports of Danzig, Elbing and Stettin. This news has set experts to figuring on the possibility of a German descent on Russian territory by way of the Baltic. Any such move is regarded here as impossible from the standpoint of an effective act of war, although it might be theatrically effective in supporting the morale of the Berlin populace."

CARE FOR GERMAN WOUNDED

Poincare Asked That They Be Humanly Treated—Many Will Recover from Wounds.

Bordeaux.—President Poincare's recent admonition to the hospitals to treat German wounded the same as French is being carried out, according to a correspondent who today visited the Bordeaux High School, where 60 German wounded are being treated.

Dr. Melvile Wastermann of San Francisco and a Bordeaux doctor, are in charge of the hospital, assisted by a well-known Dresden surgeon.

The German's are being treated in the lofty class rooms of the high school, which look out over the sunny garden. The men seem to suffer more from homesickness than their wounds, which they bear with patient resignation.

As a rule the Germans in the hospitals here are more badly hurt than the French soldiers. In addition to the first dressing of the German wounds having been inadequate, the wounds also are infected. The physicians say that a large majority of the wounded will recover, however.

ONLY HARD SIEGE WILL WIN

Will Be Difficult to Drive Germans from Positions—Germans Are Playing a Game.

London.—H. M. Tomlinson, the Daily News correspondent, telegraphing from outside of Paris, says the battle now proceeding is beyond the power of description, but from a mass of disconnected matter, carefully examined in detail, as personally related by combatants, we may judge that the progress in the section from Peronne to Verdun has been fairly, finely won by the allies. Some say the Germans are still playing a subtle game, with something up their sleeves, but the concensus of opinion is that the Germans retreated because they had to.

It does not need a military expert to understand that the allies can't make as quick progress, because the Germans occupy strong positions and know that when they break they break for good. It must be admitted that it will be difficult to storm the Germans from their positions. Only a hard siege will do it.

German Diplomat Killed by Japs.

Peking.—A letter from a German in Tsing Tau says that Baron von Eisenback, former secretary of the German legation at Peking, was killed by a Japanese patrol dressed in Chinese clothes.

30 Warships Off Denmark.

London.—A Copenhagen dispatch to the Standard says a fishing fleet which has arrived at Falkenberg, Sweden, has been in close proximity to a fleet of 30 warships. They were sighted in the vicinity of Anholt, a Danish Island in the Kattegat.

Lieut. Gen. Von Busse Dead.

Berlin.—The announcement was made here that Lieut. Gen. Von Busse was killed in action Sept. 8. Thus far 38,000 persons have been decorated with the Iron Cross.

BRITISH SOLDIERS TELL HOW THEY WON THE DAY AT MARNE

By GEORGE DRU.
International News Service.

Paris.—Details given me by British soldiers enable me to give the following account of the participation of the British in the great battle of the Marne:

The troops had marched since dawn through a country of fields and comfortable farm houses. As the afternoon wore on they could see the foe had been driven back from positions recently held. On all sides began to appear stretches of charred waste and broken, gaunt walls, relics of happy homes—even a church on the edge of a village given to the flames, and tombstones trampled under foot.

As the march was renewed the temper of the men exhibited a distinct change. There was no more whistling, no more light banter. Each man's face was set and determined. As night drew near the rumbling of guns was audible in the distance. Then came a galloper on a foam-spattered horse bearing dispatches to the general. After delivering the dispatches he mounted a fresh horse and disappeared into the darkness.

Still the khaki-clad wave marched on, every mile bringing the sound of heavy firing nearer. Toward midnight a squad of cavalry came into touch on the right, and a little later the men were in what they soon discovered was to be the firing line.

Trenches Dug at Night.

The army came to a halt, but harder things than blankets were in store. Gallopers came flying from nowhere and were as quickly dispatched into the darkness. After a wait of no long duration the men dug trenches and threw up breastworks to be ready for the coming fray.

Daylight showed in front of an almost level stretch of open country, backed up by a belt of growing timber, where the Germans had taken up their position. Although none of the foe was visible, the woods were alive with armed men, and behind the woods lay artillery in trenches protected by breastworks. The British troops waited, backed up by heavy guns in the rear. Suddenly there was shooting in the distance, followed by a long wail as a shell passed over their heads, to explode with a deafening roar at a safe distance from the trench. The Germans had opened the duel.

Guns Begin to Answer.

The guns of the British soon began to answer with greater effect. All at once little spurts of dust were noticeable rising in front. The men in the woods were trying to get the range, but still our men had no orders to fire.

One of our men, unable to control his anxiety to use his rifle, rose from the trenches, fully exposing himself to the enemy's fire, only to fall back dead.

Finding themselves unable to draw our fire, the Germans advanced in the open, only to be met by a heavy volley. They quickly sought cover, and then the fight became vigorous. With two hours' continuous fighting, the foe returned into the heart of the woods.

Our guns practically silenced the German battery, thanks to information received from a French aeroplane. They then turned their attention to the riflemen in the woods and under protection of their fire our soldiers silenced the infantry. If it had been a parade they could not have shown more coolness and steadiness.

Enemy Quits Thicket.

After covering most of the intervening space at a march they broke into the double and soon were in the vicinity of the thicket. Finding our guns had located them, the enemy had retreated.

Our left and right flank cavalry rounded the edge of the woods while the infantry passed through the center of the timber. On reaching the far side they fell into close formation and charged the foe, and what they missed was not enough to fill a liquor glass, let alone a tumbler.

Dead Germans, struggling, wounded horses and broken guns made a thrilling but terrible picture. Great gashes torn in the earth were eloquent signs of the accuracy of British gunnery.

At another stage of the great battle the Germans massed near a wood. The British lay well away from them on one side, the French under General Pau on the other. Some desultory firing took place and the Germans tried to hide their real strength under cover of the forest, but the allied commanders had been well supplied with information and were on the alert.

The Germans' right asked for an armistice for the purpose of attending to their wounded and burying their dead, but while this request was under consideration a British aeroplane discovered the Germans were setting a trap for the allies. Negotiations at once were broken off and the fighting recommenced.

Death Trap Fails.

An airman had seen an immense number of guns enter the woods, the foe evidently having planned to put up a sham fight and retreat so as to draw the British to the hidden guns. It was a well planned death trap, but the allies by this time were aware of the tactics. The motive behind the request for an armistice was to lull the allies into a sense of security and so enable fresh German forces to arrive from Compiegne.

A terrific cannonade at once was opened upon the wood, which took fire, and as a brisk wind was blowing, the flames soon turned the forest into an inferno. The Germans rushed out in great disorder, and the British, who were waiting, fell on them hip and thigh. The men, remembering all that has been done by them and the peasantry, fought with terrible fury, and wiped out the score.

The German commander concentrated all his energies on saving the guns, but this was just the thing the allied commanders had decided to frustrate. Much fierce fighting took place around the artillery, the British cavalry distinguishing itself by its dash and determination, sweeping down upon the German horsemen trying to escort the guns to places of safety. They were through them like an avalanche, and it will be long before those Teutons who escaped forget the headlong, irresistible rushes of our hard riders.

Cavalry's Worth Shown.

Once again it was demonstrated that the cavalry arm still is one of the most effective an army can possess when it is used at the proper moment and in the right way. Cavalry may be useless against men intrenched on kopjes, but in the open field it is as effective as in the days of the first Napoleon.

Not only did the cavalry prevent the German guns from escaping, but their lightning-like delivery of charges prevented the gunners from taking up positions from which to work havoc on our infantry. The Germans were busy at all times, and the accuracy of their firing soon made every fresh position untenable.

Our infantry went also into the fray with terrible relish and zest. The zouave-like open formation is the best on earth for rapid advance and heavy volleying on the move.

Our men got over the ground at a swinging pace, and closed up for bayonet work. The men literally were on the run, and nothing could stop them. They went through the Germans like fire through flax.

The French are loud in their praises of the British in this battle. Stand after stand was made by the Germans in hope of stemming the tide of disaster until support should arrive, but the British knew the value of time as well as the Germans, and pushed the attack home so hotly that, according to the latest verbal reports, the enemy lost, in dead and wounded, 35,000 men. A large amount of artillery, great and small, big guns and rapid firers, fell into the British hands.

RIVERS CHOKED WITH BODIES OF AUSTRIANS

London.—"The newspaper correspondents describe horrible scenes on the battlefields abandoned by the Austro-German forces last week," says the Morning Post's Petrograd correspondent.

"Streams, they say, were choked full with slain men, trodden down in the headlong flight till the waters were dammed and overflowing the banks. Piles of dead are awaiting burial or burning. Hundreds of acres are sown with bodies and littered with weapons and battle debris, while wounded and riderless horses are careering madly over the abandoned country. The trophies captured comprise much German equipment. An ammunition train captured at Janow (11 miles northwest of Lemberg) was German, while the guns taken include 46 heavy caliber bearing Emperor William's initials and belonging to the German Sixth army corps.

"The line of retreat of the Austro-German forces was blocked with debris of every kind—valuable military supplies, telephone and telegraph installations, light railway and other stores, bridging material—in fact, everything needed by a modern army was flung away in flight. Over one thousand wagons with commissariat supplies alone were captured.

"Newspaper dispatches assert that the German troops have been interspersed with Austrian troops in the intrenchments in order to raise the morale of the Austrians. One correspondent declares that while the Austrians took flight the Germans were ready to the last man to perish."

GERMAN STAFF MANIFESTS CONFIDENCE IN OUTCOME

Berlin.—Members of the general staff here in private conversation have manifested absolute confidence in the outcome of the battle in France, as their own army is steadily growing stronger and the lines of communication have been adjusted to permit a more efficient supply of provisions and ammunition, it having rather outrun its supply arrangements in the rapid advance on Paris. The French army, according to the staff, is showing signs of having shot its bolt and has fought itself to a standstill, being unable to fill its depleted ranks like the Germans.

The headquarters announcements still give no definite information regarding the position of the battle line, contenting themselves with speaking of it generally as located between the Oise and Meuse rivers, but not mentioning what part of this large region the Germans occupy.

Take all your complaints to the Lord; Congress has troubles of its own.

Mr. P. E. Alexanber, the Progressive nominee for State Senator, has been sick for two or three weeks and when he is able to do so he will be in the Campaign in this county.

Smile, Mr. Democrat! Sell your 8 cent cotton and buy high priced biscuit. Tell your neighbor about the war, and all the great things Woodrow and his crowd have done for you.

Why is cotton 12 cents in Liverpool and 7 cents in Alabama? And why are business conditions much better in Germany than in the United States? Will some free trade Democrat kindly explain?

The Democratic nominee for Representative says that he is in favor of a bond issue. How do the people of this county like that? Does this look like he will use his efforts to lessen the burdens of the tax payers or does it look like he will try try to increase them?

With the county already about $20,000,00 in debt why do the democrats of this county continue to insist on putting the county in debt $100,000,00 to put on the roads? Why don't they submit it to a vote and see what the people want before trying to run it over them anyway? Why does the democratic Probate Judge continue to insist on this? Why aren't they satisfied with putting the county in debt something like $20,000?

THE TARIFF AND WAR.

Democratic candidates for Congress, who have been consoling themselves with the thought that the stopage of European imports, due to the war, has had the same effect as a Tariff wall of prohibitive hight, and therefore has blanketed the Tariff issue for the purposes of the Congressional campaign, are simply reconing without the traveling salesman.

The traveling salesman will take pains to explain the situation to the dealers in all the cities, towns and villages. Take the hosiery salesmam, for instance. He will explain that the war has, in fact, cut off German importations. In a way it has been as though an exorbitant Tariff had been levied. No German hosiery is coming in. Thus, the American manufacturers might be said to have the market to themselves.

Exigencies of the war, however, cannot possibly produce the same beneficial results as a Protective Tariff. The saleman will explain that there are drawback to the war business. There are buyers, for example, who are under restraint for financial reasons incident to present conditions. The salesmen cannot sell his American hosiery if the customers have no money to buy.

The evil of regarding the Tariff as a local issue is to be found right here. It is of little benefit to any industry to be well protected by the Tariff if the rest of the country is not prosperous. A well-adjusted Tariff benefits business generally. There is no accident in the process. The nation itself is protected from cheap labor products from abroad and can pursue its way, with prosperity and high wages.

Moreover, the vaunted protection which certain industries are said to be receiving from the cessation of imports, take no account of the needs of the Treasury. Under a Protective Tariff ample revenue is obtained for the Government, while industry and wages are protected from the lower standards of wages that prevail abroad.

The war is apt to bring the Tariff problem home to the people in a new light. They have had their experience with a Tariff for revenue only for the first time in many years, and the younger generation of business men know more about the subject now than they did before the new Tariff law went into effect.—Washington Post.

COME OUT IN THE OPEN.

We want things done openly and honestly, and in good cool reason. We don't want things done in a fever of excitement, without any time to think. The former is always productive of right and steady action and results; the latter more often is the cause of wrongdoing and dissatisfaction.

Therefore, we would urge for the sake of the voters, that those who have any political fights to make before the election, make them now, and in time for due consideration before the ballot is cast. If one party has a charge to make against another, let it be done now, that the accused may have a fair opportunity for justifying itself in the minds of the people. For any party to fail to do this would be striking a blow at its enemy in the dark, without giving any warning.

As is already known, the Progressive party in this county is already waging its fight. For the past month speeches have been made over the county, each time with an open invitation to the Democrats to defend their party, and not one time have they accepted. We know not their reasons; it may be they have no principles to defend or it may be they are lying low to start a whirlwind of confusion at the last moment. We would warn the voter to be careful that he is not deceived and misled. Whichever way you vote you should exercise this caution, for it means justice to you and all parties. "What I say unto you, I say unto all, WATCH."

COMMISSIONER HERROD

We are glad to present to our readers this week a letter from our Commissioner, Mr. W. T. Herrod. We feel that many will be interested to read a communication from this gentleman of the court regarding the situation that has precipitated so much agitation in the past few months. His letter is very conservative in a way, being given to a strict presentation of some facts that have been disputed by some heretofore. We would like for you to observe as you read what he says, that the arguments which have been put forward by The Union-Banner from time to time regarding the conditions of our county are to all practical intents and purposes, the same as the facts which he states. We are pleased with Mr. Herrod's letter, not only because of the vindication which we find in it for our previous arguments, but also because of the spirit which he shows for being in favor of the rights of the common people, and the success of our Progressive ticket.

STINGERS

From The Yellow Jacket.

Wilson ought to thank his lucky stars for that war. Free Trade never could have survived a period of peace.

There is consolation in store for voters in the Fall Congressional election. For, no matter who is elected, it would be impossible to get a sorrow Congress than the present one.

The difference between the Democratic party and the Republican party is that the Republicans raise money to support this government by taxing the foreign manufacturer and the Democrat raise it by taxing Americans to suppart foreign manufacturers. That's the difference.

If this country had a protective tariff there would now be money enough to run the country without a Democratic war tax on a country of peace, and goods enough made by American workmen to prevent a Democratic panic. But Free Trade has depleted our treasury, busted our banks, shut out factories, and put our working men out of business. And now to cap the stack, Wilson slaps a $100,000,000, Democratic war tax on us, which is more individually than we would ever have had to pay under protection. Ain't Democracy a peach?

OUR COTTON PROPOSITION AND BANKING SITUATION

Mr. Editor:

Will you allow me space to say a few more words about the farmers cotton and banking system?

Some farmers don't seem willing to sacrifice any money at all to relieve themselves. They had rather trust the present banking system than one of their own. If we are not willing to put part of our money crop in a bank of our own, we just as well stop; for we know that money is the power of our business men, also the power of our government. Now unless we have some system of our own of controlling money and plenty of it, we will be left as usual; and I don't know of anything better than the $5 a bale plan for building stock in our bank. This would be shares of stock owned by those who sold the cotton, and I think that we ought to be willing to make this deposit for ten years, with the understanding that we are to let this deposit remain for ten years. Of course we could accept deposits from anyone, and pay same on demand as other banks, but let the $5 a bale deposit of stock be permanent for ten years. Then let this bank do all the cotton selling of the county.

By this method you see our representative would do the selling, and he would have a sayso about it. Of course we must be reasonable in the price.

Suppose we had this plan in force. we would more than make this $5 back this year. I venture to say we would make $10 to the bale this year. If we are not watchful we will get prejudiced against our home merchant and blame him with things for which he is not responsible. I think when we get this thing apjusted all business men will endorse it, for they know that which is to the farmer's interest is to their interest also. The merchant and the banker are not altogether to blame for us not having a system of our own.

There will be a discussien of this subject at Jackson's Chapel schoolhouse, 3 miles north of Clanton next Saturday night, Oct. 3. Everybody is invited to come and leave their poiitical prejudice at home.

Respectfully,
J. H. JACKSON.

Lomax, Ala., Sept. 28, 1914.

We offer a $25,00 reward for a copy of the Democratic platform as adopted by them in this State this year. We will gladly pay this to the Clanton Press, or to any democrat for a copy of the platform that the Democratic nominees are running on this year as adopted by them this year. We have asked the Clanton Press to publish this, and they don't seem to be willing to do so; and now we offer to pay them for their time and trouble. We would just like for the people of this county to see their platform, if they have one.

One of the democratic nominees for county commissioner was for a bond issue in 1913. Does this look like if he should be elected that he will do any thing to lessen the burdens of the tax payers of this county? But on the other hand don't it look like he will do as the rest of the democrats are doing—use every effort in his power to put the county further in debt? How does this suit the tax payers of this county?

GOWAN BROTHERS

J. E. GOWAN, A. M. GOWAN.

OIL AND COAL ARE DISCOVERED HERE.

It is being asserted around in town that the constructors of the city waterworks system, in boring the well on the north side of town, have struck a vein of coal and a flow of oil. All the adjacent property and farms near by have been leased or placed under option.

Rights to several tracts of land were secured by those in possession of the secret before the news leaked out; among them are said to be the Watts farm, the Willis farm and portions of the Cooley estate.

Information regarding the matter is hard to obtain. Secrecy seems to possess those who are on the inside. But some say there is no doubt as to the facts of the discovery.

Machinery is in operation in the big creek swamp near by making additional borings to the one by the waterworks company. Of course no one knows what the speculations may result in; but much subdued excitement seems to prevail regarding the prospects.

Simple Cement.

For mending ornaments and delicate china there is nothing better than rice-flour cement. It is very easily made, it being only necessary to mix rice flour or ground rice thoroughly with cold water, simmering gently over a slow fire until it thickens, thereby forming a most durable adhesive substance which can be used hot or cold, in the usual way.

Wanted Information.

Half an hour after Mrs. Richly had given her new maid an order she became uneasy and went to investigate. "Well, Mary, what has detained you? Have you found my Keats, as requested?" "Lor', mum," Mary apologized, "I was just comin' back to ask what is a Keats."

Possible Solution.

"Why do you suppose it is," she asked, "that nearly all the great men of this world have been married?" "I suppose," replied the old bachelor, "it's because they had to do something to get their minds off the troubles they had at home."—Chicago Record-Herald.

PROVIDENCE BEAT 13

There was a meeting called for this place on September 23 by the farmers to hear a report from the Cedar Grove meeting, which was held last Saturday. The committee made their report, which was received.

A resolution was passed to the effect that all parties hold their cotton if they do not owe it; but parties in debt were advised to place their cotton in warehouses and stay the debts with the receipts till times get better.

Judge Reynolds and Mr. W. E. Thomas had been invited to the meeting, and after the cotton meeting had finished Judge Reynolds made a speech of about one hour. Mr. Thomas made a strong speech and showed that he is for the common people.

After the speaking a vote was taken, and it was practically unanimous for the Progressive ticket. All this part of the county is largely the same way.

Farmers,

We understand that a number of our customers are under the impression that we no longer credit them for Ginning and Bagging and Ties, but demand the cash when the cotton is ginned. THIS IS NOT TRUE.

We have our same old rules for ginning; but only observe them closer. We will gin your cotton as cheap as anyone in town, and allow you till the cotton is sold or you are ready to haul it away from the warehouse, to pay for the ginning.

Having had our machinery put into first class condition, and being operated by experienced men, we can assure you perfect satisfaction.

We also pay the highest cash price for seed.

The Deserter

By John F. Bowdon.

I was tired of the navy
And the routine every day;
Seemed 'twould drive me crazy,
And like a fool I ran away.
The everlasting scrubbing, of
My clothes upon the sand,
Was against the grain you bet;
'T was more'n I could stand.

The easy part was going,
But the hardest was to stay
Among men who were honest;
Gee, it worried me each day.
For I was always thinking
Of a dark and gloomy jail;
I knew of course that eyeoy cop
Was camping on my trail.

I didn't start out bumming
Tho' I know some fellows do;
The job I got was paying,
And the chow I got was good.
My conscience kinda hurt me,
And the hurt grew worse each day;
My tho'ts were sorrow-laden,
And my hair was turning gray.

They called me a deserter,
But today I am a man;
For now I'm in the navy,
I came back to Uncle Sam.
You bet I sure got punished,
Bnt my conscience now is clear
I look all men right in the face
Without a bit of fear.

ASTHMA AND HAY FEVER A GUARANTEED RELIEF

"I have arranged with Alred Drug Company so that every sufferer from Asthma, Hay Fever or Bronchial Asthma in Clanton can try my treatment entirely at my risk," Dr. Rudolph Schiffmann announces. He says: "Buy a 50-cent package of my Asthmador, try it, and if it does not afford you immediate relief, or if you do not find it the best remedy you have ever used, take it back to Alred Drug Company and they will return your money, cheerfully and without any question whatever. After seeing the grateful relief it has afforded in hundrers of cases, which had been considered incurable, and which had been given up in despair, I know what it will do. I am so sure that it will do the same with others that I am not afraid to guarantee it will relieve instantaneously. The druggists handling Asthmador will return your money if you say so. You are to be the sole judge and under this positive guarantee, absolutely no risk is run in buying Asthmador."

Persons living elsewhare will be supplied under the same guarantee by their local druggist or direct by Dr. R. Schiffmann, St. Paul, Minn.

Most Skin Trouble Readily Overcome

The Active Principle of a Famous Remedy Works Wonders.

Many people have marveled the way S. S. S. overcomes skin troubles. The explanation is the fact that S. S. S. works in the blood and the blood is really a most intricate and extraordinary mass of arteries and veins.

When you come to realize that the skin and the flesh beneath are composed of a network of tiny blood vessels you solve the mystery.

There are wonderful medicinal properties in S. S. S. that follow the course of the blood streams just as naturally as the most nourishing food elements.

It is really a remarkable remedy. It contains one ingredient, the active purpose of which is to stimulate the tissues to the healthy selection of its own essential nutriment. And the medicinal elements of this matchless blood purifier are just as essential to well-balanced health as the nutritious elements of the meats, grains, fats and sugars of our daily food.

Not one drop of minerals or drugs is used in its preparation. Ask for S. S. S. and just insist upon having it. And if you desire skillful advice and counsel upon any matter concerning the blood and skin, write to the Medical Department, The Swift Specific Co., 529 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Do not allow some zealous clerk's eloquence over something "just as good" as S. S. S. to fool you with the same old mineral drugs. Beware of all substitutes. Insist upon S. S. S.

The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of "THE MAN HIGHER UP," "HIS RISE TO POWER," Etc.

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

SYNOPSIS.

Mark Truitt, encouraged by his sweetheart, Unity Martin, leaves Bethel, his native town, to seek his fortune. Simon Truitt tells Mark that it long has been his dream to see a steel plant at Bethel and asks the son to return and build one if he ever gets rich. Mark applies to Thomas Henley, head of the Quinby Iron works, for a job and is sent to the construction gang. His success in that work wins him a place as helper to Roman Andzrejzski, open-hearth furnaceman. He becomes a boarder in Roman's home and assists Piotr, Roman's son, in his studies. Kazia, an adopted daughter, shows her gratitude in such a manner as to arouse Mark's interest in her. Heavy work in the intense heat of the furnace causes Mark to collapse and Kazia cares for him. Later Roman also succumbs and Mark gets his job. Roman resents this and tells Mark to find another boarding place. Five years elapse during which Mark has advanced to the foremanship, while his labor-saving devices have made him invaluable to the company. In the meantime Kazia has married one Jim Whiting. Mark meets with an accident which dooms him to be a cripple for life. He returns to Bethel intending to stay there. He finds Unity about to marry another man and wins her back. Unity urges him to return to his work in the city. Mark rises rapidly to wealth and power in the steel business, but the social ambitions of his wife make their married life unhappy. Constant bickerings wear out Mark's patience and he makes threats of divorce.

CHAPTER XIV.

In the Mold.

Then began what promised to become a rake's progress. Mark sought out new companions and got himself invited to join their revels. He tried hard, at first recklessly, then determinedly and then wistfully to enter into the spirit of dissipation. The attempt was a flat failure. The thoroughgoing habit of mind that looked unerringly for the last result saw through at once to the dregs in the cup. His companions privately laughed at the spectacle of this hard serious man awkwardly essaying the role of devil of a fellow; but for the humor he thus unwittingly provided they would soon have got rid of him as a death's-head at their feasts. He succeeded only in still further impairing his health, in acquiring a bad taste in the mouth and relaxing all along the line his habit of rigid abstemiousness.

After a few months he returned to the old routine.

"I hear," Henley interrupted a consultation one day to remark, "you've been sowing wild oats. Got 'em all harvested?"

Mark nodded, grinning sheepishly. "Crop's in the barn—and for sale cheap. I agree with the prophet that all is vanity."

"What made you do it?"

"I don't know. To see what it's like, I guess. But I didn't have the knack of it."

"Trouble at home," thought Henley shrewdly.

Aloud he said: "I imagine not. You'd better stick to business, where you fit in."

"I sometimes think that's all vanity, too."

"At least we have something to be vain over. And on the whole there's more romance in making steel than in helping to support the Tenderloin."

Mark made a gesture of disgust. After a frowning pause, he answered: "I don't know. The trouble is, I've lost the romantic point of view. To me the business is nothing but a money-making machine now—and something to do. I wonder why we work so hard to get money we don't need. We get no good out of it. Timothy Woodhouse gets more pleasure out of his flying machines that won't fly."

"Just wait," said Henley dryly, "until somebody tries to take it away from you. Nearly every man of unusual vitality goes sooner or later through the stage of questioning the existing scheme of things. Things are, is all the answer he gets. The sooner he quits asking questions, the better for his peace of mind."

They returned to the matter in hand, which was the fleecing of Timothy Woodhouse.

No one would have been more surprised than Timothy to learn that he had any fleece worthy of the attention of such shearers as Henley and Truitt. But years before a Lochinvar had come out of the West with stock to sell in the Iroquois Iron Ore Mining, Development & Transportation company. He had a gifted tongue. He departed for his own place, a richer and doubtless a wiser man, having received a profitable lesson in the credulity of his fellows. Later inspection revealed that the long-named company's properties consisted of an immense field of admittedly good ore, but its development work only of the extraction of the sample so proudly exhibited by the promoter and its transportation facilities of a franchise to build a railroad through 300 miles of wilderness. In those days the building of railroads was not lightly undertaken. The investment seemed to fall short of Lochinvar's prospectus.

"Naturally!" Timothy once said ruefully. "Since I invested."

But a time had come when makers of steel began to operate on a larger scale and to look far ahead into the future. The MacGregor company conceived the project of buying that ore field and building that railroad. It commenced secretly and leisurely picking up blocks of stock in Lochinvar's company; it could be bought for the proverbial song. But Henley got wind of it. He, too, began buying stock, secretly and swiftly, also for a song. By the time the MacGregor company learned of his rivalry, he needed but a thousand shares to own control of the company, its properties and franchises.

"And I know just where those shares are to be had," Henley told Mark. "Do you know one Timothy Woodhouse?"

"I bought my house from him. And he wants me to lend him money to build his new flying machine. He came to me," Mark chuckled, "as one inventor to another."

"Get that stock," Henley commanded. "Act quick and you can get it cheap. We can't build that railroad. Or rather, we won't. 'Let the other fellow blaze the path!'" This sneering quotation was from the illustrious but cautious Quinby. "That's what comes from working with a coward. But that's no reason why we shouldn't turn an honest dollar at the expense of MacGregor, is it?"

"I'll Give You," Proposed Timothy Eagerly, "a Half Interest in the Machine."

It is not, however, true, as alleged in the bill in equity Timothy was afterward induced by MacGregor agents to file against Mark, that "the said Truitt falsely and fraudulently and with intent to deceive and defraud, represented to the said Woodhouse that said stock was of no value whatsoever, the while knowing that said stock had the value hereinbefore set forth." Mark, who prided himself on his honesty, was always careful not to lay his projects open to legal interference. In this case, that special Providence which seems to guide the schemes of men of such honesty, graciously rendered legal fraud unnecessary.

"By George!" he exclaimed when at their next meeting Timothy, with the model before them, had explained his plans for the new machine. "By George! It may be—it may just be—that you've hit it. It sounds plausible, anyhow."

"I prize your opinion," said Timothy gratefully, "the more because you've done something mechanically yourself. I meet so much skepticism. Do you think you'd care to finance this?"

"Well," Mark returned to caution, "after all, aerial navigation is hardly in my line. I really ought to have some security, don't you think?"

"I'll give you," proposed Timothy eagerly, "a half interest in the machine."

Mark seemed to be fighting down an impulse. But he shook his head. "You see, its value would be scientific rather than commercial. And I'm just a plain money-grubber, you know."

Timothy sighed. "That ends it, I guess. All I've got is mortgaged to the limit now. I'm disappointed, though."

"Still," Mark went on slowly, "I'd like to do it. Haven't you anything that would give business instinct even an excuse to be silent?"

"Nothing. Unless," Timothy ventured timidly, "you could call Iroquois Iron an excuse."

Mark grinned broadly. "I've heard of that bubble."

Timothy, too, grinned, though unhappily. "Bubble, I'm afraid, expresses it exactly."

Mark spent a minute in frowning study of the model. "It would be something," he admitted at last, "to contribute even money to what might turn out to be the invention of the age. I believe—I believe I'll take the excuse." He made a sudden reckless gesture. "I'll do better. I'll go the whole hog and buy the stock. Mr. Woodhouse, you would talk the birds out of the trees!"

It was ridiculously easy.

But the event had a sequel. Scarcely a week passed when Timothy returned. Timothy was evidently excited.

"Have you discovered some new important principle of your machine?" Mark inquired.

"No," Timothy answered. "I have come to buy back that stock."

"Oh, no! I'm satisfied with my bargain."

"But," Timothy explained innocently, "I have discovered that it has a value in excess—very much in excess—of what you paid me for it."

"The less reason then," Mark smiled, "why I should sell it back to you."

"But," Timothy swallowed hard and down went pride, "you don't understand. It would be a great favor to me. I have been careless—I may as well speak out and say that I am a very poor business man. I have lost almost everything I inherited. What is left is mortgaged almost to full value, except this stock which I now find I can sell for enough to clean up my obligations and give me a new start."

"And which is now mine."

"Which is now yours, through a hard bargain—an inadvertently hard bargain, of course," Timothy added hastily. The troubled look in his eyes deepened. "And now I come to you as one gentleman to another, to ask you to release me from it."

"That would hardly be business-like."

"But this is not business. I said, as one gentleman to another." Timothy was guiltless of humorous intent. "For myself I shouldn't think of disturbing any advantage your interest in my work might accidentally give you. But to my wife and daughter, who are entirely dependent upon me, this would mean much."

"Isn't it a little late, after wasting your substance in riotous invention, to begin thinking of them? Besides," Mark looked at his watch pointedly, "I hardly see your right to ask me to give them the consideration you've never given them."

Timothy flushed painfully, rising. "You refuse, then?"

"I do."

"Then you had this stock in mind all along?"

"If you'd made as shrewd a guess before—" Mark grinned.

"I was told you are apt to do this sort of thing."

"The loser in a deal," Mark reminded him coldly, "always finds something to criticize. If there's nothing else I can do for you—good day, Mr. Woodhouse."

"So this is what you call a deal? I should choose another term. I shall take enough of your time to give you my view of it. You came to me to get that stock, but you did not come frankly. You resorted to subterfuge. You flattered me. You took advantage of your inside knowledge of its value and of the fact that I'm rather a fool in such matters to get it absurdly cheap. But I suppose one need hardly expect particularity of conduct from your sort."

Mark sneered. "At least you felt no obligation to particularity of conduct when you thought you were getting a good round sum for something of no value at all."

"That," said Timothy with dignity, "I supposed and you pretended was practically a gift to science. I shall keep you no longer, sir."

Steel had come into its own. It was the first principality of industry. Swiftly as the sun seeks its zenith, its leaders were rising to power and prestige, doing big things in a big, bold, precedent-defying fashion that stirred the world to a just admiration. And above the others—in the estimation of all who did not march with the army of steel—towered that giant MacGregor, and in his shadow but too big to be obscured wholly, Jeremiah Quinby, their names and fame known wherever the stout fabric was used.

After many years Quinby's project was a fact, the more splendid for the delay. It stood just across the street from MacGregor's library. This proximity called for a comparison, by which the Institute of Paleontology suffered no whit. Somehow its noble lines and masses, in exact copy of the Parthenon, seemed to suggest in its founder a simple majesty of character not shared by the author of the elaborate library.

MacGregor could not have believed that a comparison was intended, since he accepted an invitation to share with Quinby himself and an ex-president of the United States the honors on the occasion of the dedication. He, as did the ex-president, made a speech, in which he paid a high tribute to his "brother in the great work of distributing surplus wealth." This tribute Quinby, when his turn came, formally assigned to "the thousands of obscurely faithful" who had "given their strength, their courage, their patience and talent, nay, oft their very lives, to upbuilding the industry which made this project possible." Some of his hearers interpreted this merely as the too great modesty of superlative, triumphant genius. But when, expanding this text, he thus brought his peroration to a close: "Let labor and capital, the Siamese twins of production, dwell together in unity, in amity, in the forbearance that springs from love!" the audience applauded enthusiastically; reckless of damage to new kid gloves.

That evening, in the cella of the institute, was held a great reception. The Truitts were there—as who that counted was not?—but together only until they had reached the end of the receiving line. Mark betook himself to a chair in a corner occupied by the skeleton of some prehistoric monster and there watched the crowd.

He caught a glimpse of Unity, a beaming happy Unity, the center of a laughing group, and scowled angrily. . . . Though their life had been superficially unchanged, he had had his freedom. It had been a partial useless freedom that he did not want, paid for by the loss of even the pretense of affection, by an ill-disguised mutual aversion.

His reflections were interrupted by a hand on his shoulder. Henley sat down beside him.

"Taking it in?"

Mark nodded.

"We're outshone."

"As the stars by the sun. Do you care?"

"No!" snarled Henley, in a tone that gave his words the lie. Mark repressed another sneer. Here was Henley, the man of magnificent achievements, of real genius, jealous as a woman over Quinby's hollow glory!

"He seems," Mark nodded toward the resplendent Quinby, "to attract the women."

"It's mutual. As I happen to know."

"So? I'd have classed him with the vestal virgins. Isn't he a little old for the woman game now, though?"

"He's in his fifties," Henley said, "and well preserved. And the man who has nothing to do but to idle around the globe and spend the money others make is always easy picking for the Delilahs."

"Quinby doesn't just meet my notion of a Samson."

"Samson," returned Henley, who felt the better for his outburst, "was a penny-wit."

Later, Henley and Mark left their refuge and sauntered through the crowd. It chanced that Quinby espied them. He deserted an admiring group to greet them paternally.

"A lifelong dream has been realized, thanks partly to you"—he placed a hand on Henley's shoulder —"commander in the field. And to you"—he laid the other hand on Mark —"his chief lieutenant."

It was a striking tableau. Quinby, modestly unaware of the many eyes upon them, held it a moment, then gracefully withdrew.

"My commander in the field!" sneered Henley. "Drunk! Blind drunk with self-importance!"

"How much better are we?"

"Sometimes," Henley said coldly, "you talk like a fool." He strode away.

Mark, left alone, began to pick his path gingerly around trailing gowns and chattering groups, in search of fresh air and quiet. But once, as he was passing a group of men, a remark arrested his attention. He did not know the speaker, but he halted sharply and addressed him.

"Who was that you said committed suicide?"

The man looked at him strangely a moment before answering.

"Timothy Woodhouse. It was practically suicide. He insisted on going up in his new flying machine. Broke his neck, of course."

Mark passed on quickly. Not so quickly but that he overheard an explanation.

"The man that skinned Woodhouse."

CHAPTER XV.

Stuff of Dreams.

When his spirit for it was dying, Mark's campaign of conquest came to its grand climax—he became a stockholder in the Quinby Steel company, one of the "young partners" of whom Quinby, in all things abreast of his great rival, was wont to speak with such paternal enthusiasm. Up to this time he had been merely an employe, handsomely paid but finding his chief reward from Henley's profitable friendship.

When, through Henley, Mark laid the matter of partnership informally before Quinby, he was allowed to see through the philanthropist to—Quinby. At first Quinby unctuously but firmly refused his assent, turning arguments aside by the simple expedient of ignoring them. When Henley, at whose suggestion Mark had demanded the right to purchase stock, insisted with rising anger, Quinby donned a frigid dignity.

"Do you want the company to lose Truitt?" Henley demanded.

"I can not conceive," Quinby answered coldly, "that any man who owes as much to my company as Truitt does could be so lacking in loyalty and all fine sensibilities as to desert me."

"That," said Henley curtly, "is damned nonsense. The company owes more to Truitt than the stock we ask can ever repay, more than to any other man—with one exception."

"I am glad," Quinby thawed slightly, "that you make an exception."

"Yes. Myself."

Quinby's face was a study.

"And," Henley continued, "you can let him have this stock or lose Truitt and me."

Thereupon Henley wrote out and gave to Quinby his resignation from the chairmanship. There was a tense silence while Quinby studied the paper.

"Very well," he said at last. He tore the resignation into little bits.

But it was a graceful surrender. During the pause Quinby had regained his poise. He was once more the gracious patron, apparently blind to Henley's show of dislike.

"Ah! my dear Tom," he shook his head smilingly, "that was hardly fair. You played upon my affection. You know there is no sacrifice I would not make rather than lose you."

"Humph!" grunted Henley. "This is no sacrifice."

And this launched another long argument. For under the Quinby company agreement—borrowed, indeed, from his friend and rival, MacGregor—any stockholder, upon written demand by three-fourths of the stockholders owning three-fourths of the outstanding shares, could be compelled to surrender his stock at its "book value;" a provision from the threat of which Quinby, owning the majority of the stock, alone was exempt. Had his own interest not been so deeply concerned Mark might have relished the spectacle of the tremendous arrogant Henley hurling himself in vain against the paternal Quinby. Mark did not deceive himself as to Henley's real purpose, which was not to serve him but to set up a precedent to upset the agreement.

"It isn't fair to Truitt," Henley protested vehemently. "It isn't fair to any one but you. How can he, how can I, how can any of us, know when you're going to make a deal with the others to kick him out and cheat him out of the real value of his stock?"

Tact was the one weapon Henley knew not how to wield. Quinby gave him a pained glance.

"You know I'm not a hard man. And you know that is a contingency not likely to happen."

"It happened to Cauler and Stebbins and New."

"Ah! But they," Quinby reminded him, "got an exaggerated idea of their importance to the company."

Henley glared. Quinby smiled.

The mellifluous voice flowed on. "You should know that men in my position may not consider their private impulses. Our wealth is a trust—a sacred trust." He paused, perhaps to control the rising emotion inspired by thought. "The secret of my success has been harmony in my organization. Harmony I must have—I will have. And so I must reserve the right and means to oust any who seek to disturb it. The work to which I have given myself—the projects you, I fear, hold so lightly—depends too closely on my business success to allow me to violate successful precedents. Even," he beamed on Mark, "even for the sake of your brilliant young friend. Even for you."

Quinby's face had not put off its smiling benevolent mask. His voice had not risen nor lost by so much as a note its wonted musical stately cadence. But Mark, a silent and almost forgotten listener, knew that in the last words menace spoke as clear and venomous as in the hiss of a snake. He could interpret the menace; Henley had rested too securely in his importance to the company; he now had his warning; like Damocles' sword the power of Quinby's contract rested heavy overhead.

If he had not known from Quinby's voice, Mark would have understood from him to whom the menace had been spoken. Henley's hands, resting on the desk, clenched until the nails bit into the palms. The ugly imperious face was deathly white. His black eyes blazed. Mark thought for a moment he was about to spring upon Quinby and inflict physical injury, or at least hurl at the vain shallow poseur the splendid defiance the man of real worth, of invincible and unpurchasable spirit. Because he had a profound respect and a sort of love for Henley, he wanted to see and hear that defiance. He forgot his own interest in the scene.

Henley reached again convulsively, for pen and paper. Quinby raised a hand—a beautiful, soft, perfectly manicured member—in humorous protest.

"My dear Tom!" How the purring paternal phrase, addressed to Henley, stung! Mark felt the hot blood rise, resentful for his master. "If you are about to resign again, I beg of you, consider. I have made one concession to that threat. But if you make it again, I shall be obliged to break off a relation that has been both pleasant and profitable. It will cost me something, perhaps, but—it will cost you more."

"Now!" muttered Mark.

Now was the time to hurl defiance, to overwhelm Quinby and Quinby's power under manly scorn. . . . Quinby, outwardly serene as midsummer's skies, smiled on. Henley was silent. The blazing anger in his eyes died down to a smoldering, sullen, futile rage. The pen dropped from his hand.

What a shattering of idols was there! Mark turned away that he might not see.

His glance fell upon Quinby. The mask of benevolence had been pulled aside. Ugly triumph and still uglier hate shone. In that moment Quinby's revenge for a thousand sneers and the open contempt of years was taken. Mark hated him.

After a long heavy silence Quinby turned to Mark. "Do you accept the agreement?"

"It seems to be Hobson's choice."

Quinby rose and took Mark's right hand in both of his.

"Let me be the first to welcome you into the company. I'm sure we shall be—harmonious."

"I can see," Mark answered with a shrug, "that harmony pays."

Quinby was gone. Mark, sickened and saddened, watched a man, for the moment mad, belatedly giving voice to his rage. He paced swiftly back and forth across the room, like the wild beast he had become. He cursed incoherently the departed Quinby, pouring forth a flood of coarse blasphemies. He flung his arms about, smote and kicked chairs and desk as though they had lives to be taken. This, with Quinby present, would have struck a responsive chord in Mark's barbaric soul. But this, with Quinby gone, from the man who had sat silent under threats, called forth only contempt.

"My success! My company! My work!" Henley stopped, panting and glaring, before Mark. "My God! Did you hear him? Fool—fool—fool!"

Mark shrugged his shoulders. "Your mistake was in thinking him a fool."

"And I—I had to sit there and take his oily threats—"

"At least, you took them."

"—I, who made this company—I, who gave him the money to advertise himself around the world—I—! I'm the fool. You're the fool. We're all fools, working our lives out to build up this business while he, who does nothing, gallivants about spending millions on his accursed institutes—never knowing when he'll close in on us and rip us out of our jobs and rightful profits—"

Henley Glared. Quinby Smiled.

"I used to think that about you, when I was in the mills. I suppose the men think that about us now." Mark's laugh was a sneer.

Henley turned on him. "And you," he snarled. "I made you, too. And I suppose, when Quinby cracks his whip, you, too, will fall into line and help to rob me of the stock I've made valuable. You, with your 'Harmony pays'—"

An hour before Mark might have quailed before Henley's wrath. Now he did not quail.

"See here!" he said sharply, pushing away the fist under his nose. "Probably you're right. Probably I'll fall into line. I hope not—for my own sake. But you can talk to me like that when I give you the excuse. And now you," he added coldly, "had better pull yourself together. There are clerks within hearing."

Henley dropped heavily into a chair. Slowly the paroxysm subsided. In silence Mark watched the white, still working face.

It was Henley who spoke first, and surprisingly. "What are you thinking?"

"I'm wondering, does money make cowards of us all?"

Henley stared hard. For a moment Mark thought that again a match had been touched to the magazine of his rage. Then the red of shame crept into the older man's countenance. He made a gesture of dejection.

"You're a witness that it does."

Now, by all the rules of the game he played, was the time to exult. The monster was tamed, or at least forever baffled; it need not, looking upon him, lick its slobbering chops. Whether or not the partnership—final trophy of Eldorado's conquest—survived Quinby's treacherous caprice, the adventurer would never again know the haunting fear that lashed the crowd. He had no need to catch its hurrying pace.

Yet he did not exult. He had what he had set out to win, and he had it not. His triumph was fact. But the sense of it, the swelling of soul, the surging passionate pride he had foretasted in his young dreams, were not. Success was but figures on a balance sheet.

He had succeeded in a life in which sentiment, brotherly kindness, mercy, were the badges of failure; yet the thought of a weak Timothy Woodhouse, dead in an hour of recklessness bred by a cheat, could drive sleep from his pillow.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.

How many housekeepers appreciate the value of boric acid? A half teaspoonful of the powder dissolved in a pint of water is a most desirable disinfectant to wash the baby's mouth, and also its eyes. Each bit of absorbent cotton should be burned after using, and a fresh piece should be used for each eye. Buy a fourth of a pound of the powder and keep it in an air-tight box. Two ounces of the acid to a quart of boiled water can be bottled and kept for use in different ways. If a burn has to be treated, saturate a cloth in the solution and keep it wet. This will take out the fire. It is a good disinfectant for any cut or wound.

A simple dessert and one which is most wholesome is a graham mush made by adding enough graham flour to a quart of boiling water with salt, stirring until a smooth mush is made. Add a few raisins and serve with sugar and cream, either hot or molded in cups and served cold.

Heliotrope sachet powder which has lost its freshness makes a good deodorizer. A coal dropped in a cup with a tablespoonful of the powder will send up a fragrant incense, continuing to burn for some time.

A most delicious pie is made by baking an undercrust, having it rich and tender. Fill the crust with well-strained apple sauce mixed with whipped cream, sugar and flavored with nutmeg.

A rocking chair should never be allowed in a sick room except for the use of the patient. Some one has said that there should be one chair in a sick room, and that so uncomfortable that visitors will not linger long in it.

If all use sugar on oatmeal, try adding it when cooking and see how much the oatmeal is improved thereby.

The traveler owns the grateful sense

SEASONABLE DISHES.

There are some who find it necessary to cultivate a taste for eggplant, others like it at first taste. It looks so attractive in its natural state that even the prejudiced will be persuaded that it is good.

Peel the plant and cut in half-inch slices, set under a weight to remove some of the juice, then egg, bread and fry in hot fat until well done. Serve hot. This is one of the favorite ways of serving it and the one best liked.

A most satisfying apple-cake or coffee-cake may be made by taking three cupfuls of bread sponge which is light and foamy, add a quarter of a cupful of melted fat (butter is best), a quarter of a cupful of sugar, a well-beaten egg, all well mixed with a half cupful of milk and flour to make a dough soft, but not sticky. Set to rise, add a half cupful of raisins when kneading it for the flat loaf, cover with butter, slices of apple, sugar and cinnamon and bake when twice its bulk.

Cottage Pudding With Raisin Sauce.—Beat half a cupful of butter to a cream; add a cupful of sugar, add two yolks and one white, well beaten, then alternate one cupful of milk with two cupfuls of flour sifted with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder; add a fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, beat well and pour into a shallow pan to bake a half hour. Serve cut in squares with Sultana Sauce.—Simmer a half cupful of raisins in a cupful of boiling water until tender, an hour will be none too long; add a level tablespoonful of cornstarch mixed with half a cupful of cold water and let cook ten minutes; add two tablespoonfuls of butter, a cupful of sugar and a teaspoonful of vanilla.

Fresh Fish Balls.—With a silver fork pick some remnants of cooked fish and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Pass through a vegetable ricer a few hot boiled potatoes, to these add a little fish stock or sauce or cream, also salt, pepper and beat as for mashed potatoes. To the fish add just enough of the hot potato to hold the fish together. Shape into balls, roll in crumbs and egg, then in fine crumbs, and fry in deep fat.

ERUPTION COVERED BODY

321 Lee St., Hampton, Va.—"In July of last year the eczema made its first appearance on my fingers and before the last of August my body was completely covered. I was unable to sleep at night the itching was so severe. I had to take sleeping medicines several times a week to get any sleep at all. It broke out as a rash and some of the eruption turned to boils. My chin was covered and I had several boils on my face. My hands looked so that I had to stop school and my clothes irritated the eruption so much that it kept me scratching all the time. I could not stay in a warm room and I could not put my hands in warm water at all.

REMEDIES FOR POTASH SHORTAGE

By Prof. H. A. Huston.

Various suggestions have been made in regard to the steps to be taken by farmers in reference to the shortage of Potash in their fertilizers, caused by the greatly reduced shipments of Potash from Germany since the first of August. Most of the Fertilizer Companies have endeavored to make the Potash on hand go as far as possible by selling for the present brands of complete fertilizers containing only 2 or 3 per cent of Potash and withholding from sale brands containing larger amounts.

The suggestion that some or all of the Potash be replaced by phosphoric acid is absurd, for every schoolboy knows that one plant food cannot take the place of another. There are some indirect fertilizers, such as lime, gypsum and salt that can release a limited amount of Potash from some soils that contain hydrated silicates of Alumina and Potash. But if these soils have already been treated with lime or have received repeated dressings of the usual forms of fertilizer containing soluble phosphate with its accompanying gypsum, then the Potash in the hydrated silicates has to a large extent already been replaced and the use of more lime or gypsum or salt could not be expected to release much additional Potash. Ground limestone or oyster shells act too slowly to be used as Potash releasers.

The residue of soda left in the soil by nitrate of soda is more effective in releasing Potash than is gypsum and hence goods, in which the nitrogen is largely in the form of nitrate of soda, may have a special value in the present emergency.

It is often stated that decaying organic matter releases Potash from the soil, but there seems to be no direct evidence of this. On the contrary, Dr. S. Peacock states in the American Fertilizer of Sept. 5, 1914, "Several thoroughly competent researches have shown that decaying organic matter has little effect on converting inert mineral plant food in the soil into available form."

In any soil the amount of Potash capable of being released by these indirect means is a very small fraction of the total Potash in the soil, most of which exists in a form about as soluble as window glass. There is no known profitable method for rendering this inert Potash of the soil available fast enough to provide for profitable crops. Whatever temporary expedients we may employ in the present emergency, we must keep in mind that the Potash thus removed from the semi-available soil reserves must later be replaced if we are to maintain the soil's productiveness.

There is danger in the statement that farmers have been using an excess of Potash. Crops use on the average about two and one-half times as much Potash as phosphoric acid, while the average fertilizer sold contains only half as much Potash as phosphoric acid; yet no one claims that we are using too much phosphoric acid. The Potash remaining from previous fertilization is practically nothing except in the limited areas where a ton or more of fertilizer has been used per acre on truck crops. Very rarely is half as much Potash applied to the wheat, oats, corn or cotton crop as the crop removes.

The Potash mines are so numerous and the stocks on hand so large that supplies can be promptly sent forward, as soon as European conditions permit freight shipments to be resumed.

One Way to Lengthen Life

Late in life, when the organs begin to weaken, the hard-working kidneys often tire out first.

Failing eyesight, stiff, achy joints, rheumatic pains, lame back and distressing urination are often due only to weak kidneys.

Prevention is the best cure and at middle age any sign of kidney weakness should have prompt attention.

Farmers Hold Mass Meeting

Pursuant to a call, the farmers of the county met in mass meeting at Cedar Grove church last Saturday. J. W. Hayes was elected Chairman and J. M. Smith, Secretary. After hearing reports from different parts of the county regarding the cotton-holding proposition, a motion was carried that the chairman appoint a committee of five on resolutions, which was as follows: B. L. Cobb, S. E. Waldrup, N. J. Vinson, E. B. Popwell and W. B. Cooper.

The committee presented the following which was adopted:

1. We recommend that the farmers hold their cotton for 15 cents per pound and that cotton seed be sold at $25.00 per ton or used as fertilizer.

2. That we ask the ginners to reduce the price of ginning to 25 cents per hundred pounds of lint; and covering to.75 centsper bale.

3. That we cut our cotton average for 1915 to not more than six acres per farm horse; and as a means of reducing expenses, we recommend the following: (a) A repeal of the law creating the Jury Commis ion, and that the Commissioners court be required to select the Jurors for each term of court. (b) A repeal of the law creating the office of each tax commissioner, and that two competent men be elected to assess land values and said assessment to be made every four years. (c) That the nine congressional agricultural schools and six of the state normal schools be disposed of and the appropriations heretofore made to those schools be placed to the credit of the rural school. (d) That we discharge the county health nurse, at work in our county.

Many farmers expressed their unwillingness to purchase any commercial firtilizer for another crop, as they consider it a risky thing, if used to grow cotton.

The meeting adjourned at 4 p.m., subject to the call of the Chairman.

JUMBO.

Health in our part of the county continues very good.

I hear of some who have not finished fodder pulling yet.

There is much cotton to pick here; and everybody grumbles because they can't sell it. Why do they plant so much then? As a man soweth so shall he reap.

Let us all unite in everything; let us pray for peace among nations; let us all have more brotherly love one for another.

Our country is just what we make it. If we want to be prosperous we must be prayerful and peaceful: we must serve God with our whole hearts in haste. A. V.

Finds Cure for Epilepsy After Years of Suffering

"My daughter was afflicted with epileptic fits for three years, the attacks coming every few weeks. We employed several doctors but they did her no good. About a year ago we heard of Dr. Miles' Nervine, and it certainly has proved a blessing to our little girl. She is now apparently cured and is enjoying the best of health. It is over a year since she has had a fit. We cannot speak too highly of Dr. Miles' Nervine."

BIDS WANTED.

Notice is hereby given that at a regular meeting of the Commissioners Court of Chilton county, Alabama, held at Clanton, Alabama, on the 14th day of September, 1914, a resolution was adopted providing for building or constructing a public highway from Clanton to the line of Chilton and Shelby counties near South Calera, by way of Thorsby and Jemison in Chilton county, along or near the line of the present highway between said points.

Said Road to be built by grading, chirting or graveling, the work to be done by contract, and said contract to be let to the lowest bidder under seal bids to be deposited with the Judge of Probate on or before the 26th day of October, 1914.

Said bid shall set forth the number of miles in length, and the kind of road whether graded, chirted or graveled, and the charge for each kind. Said bids shall be made upon plans or specifications to be provided by J. B. Converse, civil engineer, of Selma, Ala.

The payment for the building of said highway to be made by the county, by issuing county warrants payable in annual installments from one to three years; all persons offering to bid upon said contract for the building of said road or any section or number of miles of same, may deposit their bids in sealed envelopes marked bids for county road work, and addressed to Commissioners court on or before 12 o'clock the 26th day of October, 1914, at which time said bids will be passed upon by the Court; the Court reserving the right to reject any and all bids. Contractors bidding will be required, as evidence of good faith in making bids, to deposit with said bid a certified check for $750.00, or to deposit same with the Judge of Probate on or before said bids are opened and passed upon by the Court. E. B. DEASON,
9-24-4t Judge of Probate.

Public Speakings

There will be speakings in the interest of the Progressive Ticket at the following times and places:

Everybody, regardless of political affiliations, are cordially invited to be present.

Mineral Springs, Beat 12, Monday, Oct. 5 at 7 p.m.

Oak Grove, Beat 2, Thursday, Oct. 8 at 7 p.m.

Jachson's Chapel, Beat 4, Saturdey, Oct. 10 at 7 p.m.

Competent speakers will be present to deliver the addresses.

The Attraction.

A rather eccentric man, calling on a family blessed by an observant little son, wore kid gloves that had been cleaned. The little boy, seeming to be much attracted by the visitor, stayed close at his side. "You like to stand by Mr. Blank and hear his funny stories, don't you, Jimmie?" presently asked Jimmie's father. "I don't care about his stories," replied the honest youngster, "but his hands smell just like our automobile."

Lambasted.

A new trainer was engaged for the circus and was told to put a lion and a lamb through an act. He seemed nervous, and the next his boss asked him how he got along with the savage lion. "Sure, the lion didn't bother me much," he said, "but that durned lamb butted the daylights out of me!"

Red Men Give Entertainment

The members of Waxanatchie Tribe No. 9, Improved Order of Red Men, were hosts at a banquet to their friends at the Lodge hall in Clanton Tuesday night. Despite the fact that the weather was cloudy, there was a splendid crowd out, and the entertaining spirit of our ruddy warriors and braves was fanned to a brilliant glow by the presence of so many ladies and children.

Short speeches were made at the hall by J. P. Gore, W. S. Cox M. M. Wyatt, J. E. Robinson, P. O. Barrett, and A. R. Aldridge setting forth briefly to the visitors, some of the works and principles of the Order.

It is Just Natural To Admire Babies

Our altrustic nature impels love for the cooing infant. And at the same time the subject of motherhood is ever before us. To know what to do that will add to the physical comfort of expectant motherhood is a subject that has interested most women of all times. One of the real helpful things is an external abdominal application sold in most drug stores under the name of "Mother's Friend." We have known so many grandmothers, who in their younger days relied upon this remedy, and who recommend it to their own daughters that it certainly must be what its name indicates. They have used it for its direct influence upon the muscles, cords, ligaments and tendons as it aims to afford relief from the strain and pain so often unnecessarily severe during the period of expectancy.

Every woman should mention "Mother's Friend" when the stork is the subject of conversation. An interesting little book is mailed free upon application to Bradfield Regulator Co., 405 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. It refers to many things that women like to read about.

Get or recommend a bottle of "Mother's Friend" to-day and write for the book.

A Lecture On The Judgment

On the 15th inst. Mr. Thorne of the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Brooklyn lectured at the Waldrup school house in West Chilton to a large audience. "A reasoable and an unreasonable view of the judgment."

He said, "The unreasonable view is to look for it to be a day of 24 hours, a day of five cyclones, tidal waves, a day of dread when all in heaven and in eternal torment will be brought back to be judged; and the whole race will pass before the great white throne and be judged; a day of reeling tomb-stones.

"The reasonable view is to look for the judgment to be a day of one thousand years, a bright day, the grandest in all earth's history; a day of gladness, light, and progress when the dead billions will come back from death and be tried or judged; when the aged will be restored to youth; when life, perfect life will be everywhere; when the wilfully wicked and no others would be cut off in the second death never to live again; a day of the pure gospel, when all will be taught, and have one full chance of life; when sickness will flee away. Although a bright and glorious day, yet it will be ushered in with a trouble unparallelled."

Bill of Rights.

The bill of rights is a declaration of fundamental principles deemed basic to the Constitution itself and borrowed from the English bill of rights of 1689. When the Constitution of the United States was framed and submitted to the people it did not have a bill of rights and it was so harshly criticized on this account that its friends promised to incorporate or add such a declaration, and the first ten amendments to the Constitution, made after the main instrument was adopted, were in fulfillment of this promise. All the State Constitutions now have bills of rights, practically identical with one another.

REPORT OF THE COUNTY HEALTH OFFICER

Concerning the present health conditions in East Chilton.

Dear Doctor:—It gives me pleasure to herewith submit my report of the investigation made in regard to Malaria in the neighborhood of the reservoir above the dam of the Alabama Power Company, at Lock 12.

First, I wish to state that I did not attempt to cover the entire territory adjacent to this rerervoir, but I am submitting a map which shows just what territory was covered and what condition was found in that part covered by me, and I wish to say that I tried to make a thorough investigation so far as I went.

The dotted lines on the map show my route: Leaving Clanton, I went via Thorsby in my car. Arriving at Brewer school house, Beat 1, I left my car and walked about one mile to the bridge across Waxahatchie creek where I entered a canoe and rowed down the creek about five miles to where it flows into the Coosa River; thence I rowed down the river about one and a half miles to the mouth of Littleton's branch and rowing about one and one-half miles up this stream, I left my boat and proceeded on foot to W.L. Littleton's home, Sec. 2, T. 23, R. 15. I was then carried in a two-horse wagon across the country to Brewer school house at the south-west corner of Sec. 29. T. 24, R. 15.

The red figures on the map refer to the marginal number and by consulting this you can find the number of people in that particular family who have had chills this year, the distance they are from the backwater, and whether or not they have had chills in former years. I obtained data by sending the word two days before, that I wished to meet the people on the afternoon of the 23rd inst., at their school, and the result was that enough people met me to report 94 cases of chills this year where there had only been two cases in the last 6 years.

There are many, I am informed, who failed to meet me. I know of my own knowledge that the teacher at this place abandoned his school before it was out because of his being confined to his bed with malaria and he is not included in this survey.

It is needless for me to say that I did not try to account for all cases of malarial infection in those cases seen. I counted only those who suffered marked chills.

Before the rising of the water this section found an outlet by crossing the Waxahatchie creek into Seelby, but now the creek has been converted into an unfordable river.

The main stream contains some standing and thousands of sunken trees cut before inundation, and some floating logs. The same conditions prevailed to less extent along the Coosa river, but the worst element of danger seems to be in the small streams and flat hollows tributary to both the creek and river. Here thousands of logs are found floating and thousands of trees, some dying, some dead, and others still living are partially submerged.

In conclusion I will say that so far as I can tell, much of the timber was cut; little of that cut was destroyed and much was left standing, there being thousands of trees with the water half way or more to their tops.

I saw no ditches for draining pools that would be filled by high water. The water at some places has a very offensive odor.

Respectfully submitted,
V. J. Gragg, M. D.,
County Health Officer.

Mars Hill

Dear Editor: Please allow me space to say that politics was warm in this section last week, when Mr. Gant Riggins and Mr. Frank Goodgame passed through and made a speech at this place.

Mr. Riggins said he was before the people, not belonging to the Democratic, Republican nor Bull Moose party; if he claimed any it was the Socialist. But he said that he and Goodgame were going to vote for a part of the Democratic ticket. It was real funny to hear them say they were not out in the interest of any party. I told them it seemed strange that men would be out giving their time to making political speeches, when they were not in the interest of any political party. I told them they were in the interest of the Democratic party, and were hired to go about as they were doing.

But they are ashamed to come out and claim the old Democratic party. Why? Because they know that the wolf is in the flock and they are the hirelings.

I learn that they made a favorable report to Mr. Felix Dudley though, when they returned. They stated that there were at least 15 or 20 at Mars Hill who would vote the Democratic ticket. But I dare say there was not a man present who will vote that ticket. They are too sick of this administration. They are too tired of bosses, and will vote the Progressive ticket in November. They are going to get into a party that is clean and for the people and invites all white voters to came in and cast their ballot with the cause of the party

This is the new party of salvation for us. The two old gangs have stripped us, and left us without anything. The Progressive party is the Good Semaritan, come to relieve us. This is only the second time it has been out. But let us all give our support to the good cause, and soon we will find the relief we so much need. Respectfully,

J. N. Scott.

Joint Debate at The Court House

In accordance with Mr. L. R. Sawyer's letter in the Clanton Press and other correspondence with him, there will be a joint debate at the Court house in Clanton on Saturday, Oct. 17, 1914. There will be two speakers to represent the Progressive party and we hope the Democrats will have two speakers there to represent them.

Everybody is invited to come and hear the issues discussed.

Walnut Creek

The singing at this place the Fourth Sunday was a real success. The good singing and behaviour was above the ordinary, which made it an occasion of enjoyment and pleasure to all present.

The meeting being opened with a song, Prayer was offered by Mr. T. J. Powell, after which Prof. R. A. Smith was elected Chairman, who appointed T. G. Wyatt, John Cleckler and Hugh Thompson as Program Committee, who rendered the program for the morning as follows: W. B Culp, C. H. Robinson, L. F. Cleckler, R. A. Smith, and J. A. W. Mims; each 15 minutes.

The Chairman then adjourned for dinner, after which a bounteous dinner was spread to all.

The congregation reassembled at 1:30, when the committee rendered the program for the eyeneng as follows: J.M. Smith, Ocie Baker, W. O. Rich, R.M. Robinson, W.B. Culp, R.A. Smith J.A. W. Mims and our esteemed Bro. Riley Robinson; each 15 minutes.

The organists for the day were W. B. Culp, Lee Grant, C. H. Robinson, and Misses Beatrice Mims, Roberta Driver, Lillian Robinson and Martha J. Mims.

STORE AT JEMISON ENTERED BY ROBBERS

The storehouse of S. J. Reynold at Jemison was entered by burglars last Friday night, and quite a large amount of Merchandise was taken out, consisting mostly of jewelry and cutlery. The loss will be several hundred dollars. A telephone call was sent to Clanton at once for blood hounds to pursue the outlaws, but none were obtainable. No evidence has been produced leading to the identity of the robbers.

GENERAL DISCUSSIONS BY MR. J.A. LINDQUIST

Thorsby, Ala., Oct. 2, 1914.

Editor Union-Banner:—Please allow me space for a few words in regard to the resolutions adopted by the Farmers Meeting concerning the schools of the state.

In the first place, very few farmers' or laborers' children get any education in our higher institutions of learning. But to annihilate them entirely would be wrong. Shall we have our public and common school teachers educated in other states, or shall we teach them at home?

My belief is that we should pay an equal amount to each pupil, whether in the higher or lower institutions; and where the tuition is not covered by our appropriation, let the individual pupils complete it. This is fair to all.

The amount of school money which the state now appropriates would have to be multiplied by five to come up to the average appropriation of all the states which is $20 per pupil; or multiplied by three to amount to $12 per pupil, or to allow the common sohools ten months of school per year.

The aforesaid resolutions gave $2.94 as the amount expended per pupil in the public schools, $300 and some per pupil in the higher institutions. But neither of these is correct; I can find nothing sustaining that statement. Only $4 per pupil is expended for both the higher and lower institutions. There are 750,357, whereby 385,442 or 51.8 attend schools, at an expenditure of 3,000.428. Now if the expenditure were paid on actual attendance or $1,541,796 the school money could be raised to $8.00 with hardly any extra taxes, the savings is $1,459,632.

There are out of the above numbers who attend the common schools only 475,048, where 291,340 or 618 attend school. The expenditure is $1,600,360 or a saving of 733,832 and there our other $4 could be added to equal $12 with very little additional taxes.

There are 275,309 within the school age whereof 95,109 attend the higher institutions at a cost to the state of $1,101,236 and is spent according to actual attendance equal $376,536 at a savings of $725,800 and the 1200 allowance per pupil would come fairly in reach without extra taxes.

As for attendance a $4.00 cash is $1,531,796 or a balance of the amount.

Now as to the school taxes, there are about .25 on each $100 of valuation, and no tax payer ought to kick at all on .50 and 100 and a dollar (1.00) would be a fair appropriation. As a rule such is a demonstrated fact. $1 per year, per head for school means from $50 to 100 income a year per man as an average case. As educating well our boys and girls, is similar to spending money for good seed corn; as both poor education and poor seed corn lead to poverty.

As an actual shown record the south Central states children get 41.2 day school at a cost of $1.05 whereas in the north Central, get 82.2 day at a cost of $3.23 the lowest in the North.

Now the expenditure we pay for good schools and good roads are wise and cheap, and will come back 10 fold. But it is up to the farmers and common people to eliminate extravagance and needless offices at high salaries. Then tax land held for speculation, or laying idle to its full value. Then tax all income over 1000.00 and all inheritance for near kin, 108 and about 25c on distant kinship, that will place the burden of taxes on those able to bear it best. And enact a law that all notes and bonds are not collectable unless tax collector has fixed his stamp or name to it and taxes paid.

For the roads, work all convicts possible to spare in each county, one part raising their own food and cloths needed for all.

The price of 25,000 is out of reason. Cotton seed are worth $16 spread over land as fertilizer. None should sell for a cent less, and if farmer has stock, seed are worth 21.00 as feed and manure combined.

Jury commissioner and tax commissior should be voted out by legislature, or the people to vote out the legislature.

There should be three men for land assessors, but why not let the assessor do the assessing as is done in the north and Europe, and not having that extra amount to pay. The assessor goes to each real estate property and assess at full value, and two-thirds of that is the assessed valuation.

I, as one citizen, think we should not discharge the health nurse but rather give her more power within reason, and her word to be obeyed, especially in regard to vaults and cleaning up also wells, it she is competent to test the water; not otherwise.

On Mr. Herrod's remarks I will say that if the people must vote on a bond issue, why not on a time warrant. If the people see fit they can legally repudiate them.

Yours respectfully,
J. A. Lindquist,
Thorsby, Ala., R.F.D.

CHILTON COUNTY WOMAN WINS 2ND PRIZE

Register Chanc'y 2 Apr 12

Much congratulation has been extended to Mrs. S. E. Bruce by her friends here, and througout the county on her victory in winning the second prize of $150 on the individual display of diversified farm products, at the Birmingham state Fair, in addition to the premium of $50 for having her display placed ahead of time,—thus making a total of $200.

If the women of the county, or even the entire South, would display the mastery and industry of Mrs. Bruce, in managing the economic home problem, no war or industrial panic could seriously affect our common welfare. The victory of Mrs. Bruce should be taken as a matter of county pride by every citizen of Chilton, and her example should be practiced by many both men, women and children the next ensuing year.

Pates Chapel

Editor Union-Banner:—Please let me have a few words regarding the war and cotton situation. To me everything seems in a rather bad fix; but this all shows us what the democratic party will do. They say it is the war in Europe that caus s cotton to go down; but I believe the trouble is at Washington, and it begins right there with Wilson and the Democratic Congress.

Behold, Gant and Frank have come; Moses has gone, but you can give some account of him. We all know they are just out to try to deceive the people in any way they can. The Democrats think that they might get a few votes for their ticket; but Gant says he is a Socialist, but we don't know what in the d—l Frank is.

I was glad to read Mr. Thomas's letter last week. I knew where he stood. He has always been with the common people, and is always ready to help the laboring man. I am sure if the people of Chilton elect him for Representative, he will work for the betterment in every way.

The Old Coon.

WARRANTS FOR FIRST QUARTER

Pensions Warrants Aggregating Approximately $290,000 are Sent Out by the State Auditor.

STATE CAPITAL NEWS ITEMS

Doings of the Various Departments of the Commonwealth Given for Our Readers.

—Montgomery.

Pension warrants aggregating approximately $190,000, covering the first quarter of the fiscal year 1914-15, have been sent out by State Auditor C. Brooks Smith. These warrants were paid on October 1.

Because of the large number of illegal pensioners removed from the pension rolls of the State, the amount paid out for pensions during the first quarter of the fiscal year of 1914-15, beginning October 1, was $35,422 less than the amount paid for pensions during the same quarter last year, according to a statement issued at the office of C. Brooks Smith, State Auditor.

The total sum paid to pensioners for the first quarter of the new fiscal year was $271,533. The amount paid out during the first quarter last year was $306,955. The total number of pensioners on the roll this year is 15,323 as compared to 17,442 last year.

Following is the statement issued by Auditor Smith:

October 1, 1914:

On roll first class	1,101
roll, second class	4,118
On roll, third class	10,103
Total on roll	15,322
Total amount disbursed	$271,533

October 1, 1913:

On roll, first class	1,211
On roll, second class	4,246
On roll, third class	11,985
Total on roll	17,442
Total amount disbursed	$306,955

Ask Mill Men to Meet.

Cotton mill owners of every section of the country will be asked to meet in Alabama during the next few weeks for the purpose of agreeing upon some uniform and standard price of the fleecy staple. This announcement was made by the Governor of Alabama, who declares that he will at once issue a call to the spinners of this state to co-operate with him in bringing together for a conference the leading mill operators of the entire country.

It is the opinion of the Governor that if the cotton spinners of the South and East will pledge themselves to purchase cotton at a uniform price—say at the cost of production—that it will have a strong tendency to relieve the present crises in the cotton market, and that it will also serve to improve business conditions generally throughout the country. According to the plan proposed, an effort will be made to induce the manufacturers to purchase cotton at 10 cents a pound, the price which is declared to be equal to that of the cost of production.

The Governor stated that this plan was favored by William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, and that he had given Mr. McAdoo his assurance that he would use his effots in calling together a national conference of cotton spinners. It is proposed by the Governor that the conference be held in Montgomery, though he declared that Birmingham or Mobile would serve equally as well for the purposes of the convention.

Still's Books Are Correct.

The books and accounts of Probate Judge M. D. Still, of Elmore County, are correctly and accurately kept, according to a report filed in the office of Governor O'Neal by G. F. Sedberry, Examiner of Public Accounts. Examiner Sedberry discovered that Judge Still had not paid over to the State Auditor $375, collected from a sewing machine company, which has been withheld pending a decision of the Supreme court. When informed that the Supreme Court had ruled that this money should be paid to the state, Judge Still immediately settled.

Lee Cowart, Commissioner of Immigration, announced that arrangements have been made for the placing of a plaster cast of the late Senator John T. Morgan in the Alabama building at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, which will be held next year at San Francisco. Mr. Cowart says that this cast will be twice life size and will be placed in the Alabama building as a tribute to the efforts put forward by Senator Morgan in the construction of a canal between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

The contract for the construction of the Alabama building will be let October 15, according to Mr. Cowart. The first contract will call for an expenditure of about $20,000 and more money will be spent later on the building.

Fulenwider Nominated.

Republicans of the Ninth Congressional district have notified Secretary of State Cyrus B. Brown of the nomination for Congress of Robert Fulenwider of Birmingham. Mr. Fulenwider will oppose George Huddleston of Birmingham.

Illiteracy Alarming.

Illiteracy in Alabama is alarmingly excessive and is due to a lack of adequate school facilities according to a pamphlet issued by W. F. Feagin, State Superintendent of Education. There are at present 306,857 white children in Alabama between the ages of 10 and 20 years, and of this number 26,259 are unable to read or write. This means that one child out of every twelve in the state is illiterate. These figures were compiled by Superintendent Feagin from figures gathered when the school census was taken last summer.

Randolph county has a larger percentage of illiterate white children than any other county in the state, according to the figures compiled by Superintendent Feagin. These figures include children between 10 and 20 years of age. Lowndes county has the smallest number of illiterate white children. Montgomery county ranks third.

Considering white and negro children, Jefferson county ranks first as far as the smallest percentage of illiteracy is concerned. Wilcox county ranks last. Montgomery ranks as the forty-sixth county when white and negro children are considered.

Rutland Succeeds Hobdy.

Prof. J. B. Rutland, of Auburn, was appointed State High School Inspector to succeed Prof. J. B. Hobdy, resigned, according to announcement made by W. F. Feagin, State Superintendent of Education. Professor Rutland assumed his duties at once and is making an inspection tour of the county high schools of the state. Prof. Hobdy, whom Prof. Rutland succeeds, was recently appointed rural school agent to succeed Prof. N. R. Baker, resigned.

Superintendent Feagin stated that all of the high schools of the state will be inspected by Professor Rutland during the next thirty days. Professor Rutland will be assisted in the inspection work by Prof. J. S. Thomas of the University of Alabama.

There are fifty-four county high schools in the state and they will all be inspected within the next thirty days. Reports of the inspections will be filed with Mr. Feagin. Monthly reports of the work done at the high schools will also be filed at the Department of Education.

At the capitol a conference was held by Mr. Feagin, Professor Rutland and Professor Thomas. At this conference Mr. Feagin outlined his plans and made suggestions concerning the work he expects to be done.

Not Taxable, Says Commission.

Public utility corporations which are subject to a franchise tax and which have complied with the law in making report to the State Tax Commission, are not taxable on solvent credits, it was held by the commission. Any corporation, however, against which no franchise assessment has been made, is liable for taxation under the solvent credits law, it was especially pointed out.

"The State Tax Commission unanimously decided, with the approval of the Attorney General of Alabama, that public utility corporations, which are liable for a franchise tax under Article 19 of the Code, are not taxable on solvent credits owned by them, provided they have complied with the requirements.

Warrants to Sheriffs.

State Auditor Brooks Smith mailed warrants to sheriffs of Alabama aggregating $65,000, which represents one-half of the amount due them for feeding prisoners for the past nine months. The fund appropriated by the legislature for feeding prisoners was exhausted last January, and sheriffs carried their accounts until the beginning of the new fiscal year. The remainder of the amount due them will not become available until the legislature makes provision for the payment, inasmuch as the law expressly states that for the year beginning October 1, 1914, only one-half of the appropriation of $130,000 shall be available, and that the remainder shall not be sent out until March.

Pitts Succeeds Shivers.

William L. Pitts, Jr., of Uniontown, was appointed by the Governor to the office of Probate Judge of Perry County, to succeed the late Judge J. B. Shivers. The new Probate Judge is a warm personal friend of the Governor, and has been the recipient of other honors during the present administration. He was a member of the Governor's staff and was tendered a place on the supreme court bench several months ago. Another citizen who was mentioned for the vacant judgeship was William Fowlkes.

R. F. D. Men to Attend.

Fifty delegates from the Alabama Rural Letter Carriers' Association will meet here October 21 and will attend the sessions of the Alabama Good Roads Association meeting, according to word received at the office of W S. Kellar, State Highway Engineer. The rural letter carriers will discuss good roads problems and the needs of the roads of the state at present. The rural letter carriers traverse all the roads in the state and are familiar with good roads and bad roads.

AISNE A BLAZING VALE OF DEATH SAYS ENGLISH WAR CORRESPONDENT

London.—A correspondent of the Times, writing from behind the lines at Senlis and Chantilly, says:

I have passed through a smiling land to a land wearing the mask of death; through harvest fields rich with great stacks snugly builded against the winter to the fields of a braver harvest; by jocund villages where there is no break in the ebb and flow of everyday life to villages and towns that despoiling hands have shattered in ruins.

And I have passed up this Via Dolorosa toward the very harvesting itself — toward those great plains stretching away on the banks of the River Aisne, where the second act of this drama of battles is at this moment being played.

Details of this fight are very scanty, but partly from personal observation and partly from information which has reached me I know that the struggle so far has been a terrible one, equal to, if not greater than, the struggle on the banks of the Marne.

Battling for Life.

The events of Monday revealed a foe battling desperately for his life; and this defense of General von Kluck's army demanded of the allies, and is demanding, their utmost strength and determination.

Picture this battlefield which before these lines are printed will assuredly have taken its place with that of the Marne as one of the greatest combats of the greatest war. Through the middle of it flows the great river, passing from the east to the west. The banks of the river here are very steep. Above the plain, which sweeps away from the northern bank, rises the "massif" of Laon. It is an ideal area for great movements and for artillery work directed upon the valley of the river. Pass eastward a little, there are the heights behind the city of Reims and above the Vesle, a tributary of the Aisne. Here again nature has builded a stronghold easy to defend, difficult exceedingly to attack.

I know of heroic work against these great lines, work that will live with the most momentous of this struggle. I know of smashing attacks the thought of which takes one's breath away. I have heard narratives of the trenches and of the bridges—these engineers, French and English, have indeed "played the game"—which no man can hear unmoved; how the columns went down again and again to the blazing death of the valley, and how men worked, building and girding in a very inferno—worked with the furious speed of those whose time of work is short.

Tells of Heroism.

And in the trenches, too, the tale of heroism unfolds itself hour by hour. Here is an example, one among ten thousand, the story of a wounded private: "We lay together, my friend and I . . . the order to fire came. We shot and shot till our rifles burned us. Still they swarmed on towards us. We took careful aim all the while. 'Ah, good, did you see that?' I turned to my friend and as I did so heard a terrible dull sound like a spade striking upon newly turned earth. His head was fallen forward. I spoke, I called him by name. He was moaning a little. Then I turned to my work again. They are advancing quickly now. Ah! how cool I was. I shot so slowly . . . so very slowly.

"And then—do you know what it feels like to be wounded? I rose just a little too high on my elbow. A sting that pierces my arm like a hot wire—too sharp almost to be sore. I felt my arm go away from me—it seemed like that—and then my rifle fell. I believe I was a little dazed. I looked at my friend presently. He was dead."

Make Great Stand.

So, on these green river banks and across these fair wooded plains the Germans make their great stand—the stand that if they are defeated will be their last in France. And meanwhile behind them lie the wasted fields and the broken villages. It is impossible adequately to describe the scenes which I have witnessed on the line of the great retreat, but here and there events have had place, which, in truth, cry to the heaven for report. Of such is the grim story of Senlis.

I spent many hours in Senlis and I will recount that story as I saw it and as I heard it from those who lived through the dreadful procession of days. On Saturday, September 5, the Germans reached this beautiful old cathedral town and entered into occupation. They issued a proclamation to the inhabitants calling upon them to submit and to offer no sort of resistance on pain of severe reprisals.

People Are Reckless.

But the inhabitants of Senlis had already tasted the bitter draft of German war making. The people had become bitter to the point of losing care of their own safety. They were reckless, driven to distraction.

Bitter was the price exacted for this recklessness! The trouble began on Tuesday when, exasperated beyond measure by the invaders, a brave tobacconist declared to a couple of the Prussians: "I serve men, not bullies." He followed his words with a blow delivered fiercely from the shoulder.

The infuriated soldiers dragged him from his shop and hurled him on his knees in front of the door. His wife rushed out shrieking for mercy. A shot rang out. . . . Another. . . . Man and wife lay dead.

Immediately the news of this act flew through the town. Outraged and furious, the conquerors marched instantly to the house of the mayor—their hostage—and arrested him. They conveyed him without a moment's delay to the military headquarters, where he was imprisoned for the night. On Wednesday morning a court-martial sat to decide his fate. A few minutes later this brave man paid for the indiscretion of his people with his life, dying splendidly.

Relieved by Turcos.

And then guns were turned on this town of living men and women and children. Shells crashed into the houses, into the shops, into the station. At Chantilly, seven kilometers away, the amazed inhabitants saw a great column of black smoke curl up into the air; they guessed the horrible truth. Senlis was burning.

The work, however, was interrupted. At midday the glad tidings were heard, "The Turcos are here." Within the hour broken and blazing Senlis was relieved and rescued. The Turcos pursued and severely punished the enemy.

Today these streets are terrible to look upon. House after house has been shattered to pieces—broken to a pile of stones.

One Big Heartache.

London.—The Westminster Gazette publishes a letter from a correspondent who obtained special permission to visit the Aisne battlefields. The letter does not deal with the military operations. The writer says:

"The whole district northeast of Paris is one big heartache. Imagine driving in an automobile through the lovely roads of France, with the harvests ripe and trees laden heavily with fruit and everywhere in the fields, on the roadside, on hill and in valley, sitting and lying, are not harvesters, nor holiday-makers, nor happy idlers, but dead men, stiff and stark, covering the fair fields.

Dead Stand in Trenches.

"Men in uniform lay or sat or stood as they were shot or had fallen from mortal wounds. Until I saw with my own eyes dead men standing or leaning stiff against their fellows in the trenches and actually against the earth of the trenches itself, I had not believed the stories that had reached Paris of this fact.

"It is impossible to conceive a nightmare more hideous.

"At a small village at no great distance from Cotterets we came upon a German surgeon, assisted by a French Red Cross nurse, operating in an open yard with several Prussian wounded, but most of the cases were past saving, although undoubtedly all that was humanly possible with the limited means at his disposal was being done. Two British officers near by also were being attended to, but scant hope was entertained of their recovery.

"An undeniable fact is that both the English and French armies are particularly scrupulous in their treatment of German wounded."

Suffer, Defying Death.

London.—A picture of the sufferings of the German troops, cramped in miles of underground trenches and galleries along the Aisne river, is given by the Paris correspondent of the Daily Mail.

He says that the autumnal weather with its warm sunshine in the daytime, damp nights, and bitterly cold dawns, is extremely trying to the men who are compelled to spend every minute in the same section of the damp, depressing trenches.

Alarms Occur Often.

If the men step from their trenches to the level ground, they do so at the risk of their lives.

At night the chances of an unexpected attack from the allies' infantry are so great that every German soldier must be at his post in the narrow ditch which is his home and defense, sleeping as best he may with his rifle at his side, ready to spring up at any moment at the alarms, which come very frequently these dark, cloudy nights.

The nerves of the sentries are sorely tried. They mistake the most innocent sounds for French infantry creeping up. When a sentry, tricked by his nerves, fires his rifle he brings the whole advanced post up at double quick, and it finds that there has been a false alarm.

WAR COSTS ENGLAND $25,000,000 A WEEK

London.—The government is expected shortly to make a further issue of $75,000,000 treasury bills. In the last 11 days of September supplies cost in excess of $75,000,000, the bulk of which went for war, while in the preceding week $43,595,000 was absorbed in the same way.

The government balance on hand September 30 does not exceed $20,000,000. The war is costing more than $25,000,000 weekly, the expenditure or "supply services" having increased by $211,910,000 during the eight weeks of the war.

The stock exchange committee is making inquiries into certain transactions on behalf of German interests before the war. Punishment is urged for those who accepted German orders which helped the panic.

How Europeans Get Our Gold.

Do you know just how Europe recently got that $125,000,000 in American gold. Well, here is the way it was done: Europeans hold great amounts of American securities, which is to say they have bought bonds issued in this country. When the war crisis came they saw the need of actual money in place of these bonds. They cabled to their American brokers to sell at the market price. They took whatever they could get, but there was always something offered, so the sales were heavy.

The purchasers of these bonds gave their checks. These the brokers cashed at their banks and got currency. The currency of the United States is made good by the deposit of gold in the teasuries. For every gold certificate in existence there is the actual metal in the treasury. So the brokers, getting the currency from the banks, went to the sub-treasury in New York and asked for the actual gold. They received it and sent the gold to their customers abroad.

Fashion Note.

"One blessing, at least, will come to us from this dreadful war. We shan't be inundated with shocking French fashions."

The speaker was a leading clubwoman. She resumed:

"At a club dinner the other evening a man fashion writer—man fashion writers are the best—said to me:

GERMANS ADVANCE AGAINST BELGIANS

BELGIAN FORCES HAVE BEEN FORCED TO FALL BACK TO RIVER NETHE.

ARTILLERY FIRE IS FIERCE

Germans Make Fierce Attack on Allies' Center at Roye—Russians Push Germans Back Into Prussia.

New York.—The determined efforts of the Germans are making not only to hold their lines in the north of France, but to win back some of the territory the allied forces have succeeded in taking from them since the great battle of the Aisne began, are indicated in the official announcements from the French war office.

The Germans have continued their series of desperate attacks on the French left wing, and in the center the crown prince's army, which includes the sixteenth corps, has attempted to advance through the wood of La Grurie. But in all of these endeavors, according to French accounts, the Ger have have been repulsed. The crown prince's army even has been driven back toward the north a mile or two.

In Belgium, however, the Germans have been more successful, for the Belgian legation at London admits that on the east of the River Senne the Belgian forces defending Antwerp, after a desperate resistance of five days, have been obliged to fall back to the River Nethe, so terrific has been the German artillery fire. But the declaration is made that the Belgians intend to resist the attack on Antwerp to their utmost.

The latest official communication from Petrograd describes the battle of Augustowo, in Russian Poland, as developing into one of extreme violence, the Germans supplementing their artillery fire with furious counter attacks. In an encounter between the first division of the German cavalry and Russian cavalry the Germans are reported to have been routed with great loss, carrying their infantry along with them.

The Russians have occupied Raygrod, Kalvary and Mariampol, in Poland.

The Russian emperor, according to a Petrograd announcement, has left the capital for the war zone. The German emperor is said to be at Thorn, West Prussia, close to the Russian frontier.

GERMANS ARE DRIVEN BACK

Petrograd Says Russians Made Brilliant Bayonet Charge—Push Germans Back Into Prussia.

London.—C. P. Sturk, correspondent of the London Daily News at Petrograd, telegraphs that Russian infantry, as a result of brilliant bayonet charges, are driving the Germans back into East Prussia in the direction of Lyck.

Russian infantry also charged the Germans who were besieging Augustovo compelling them to abandon their guns.

This is the first time in the northern war zone that there have been genuine infantry battles and the Russian soldiers have proved their great superiority in this class of fighting.

A Reuter dispatch from Petrograd, describing the German attack on the Suawalki-Olita railroad, says the Germans made Vilna their objective, disregarding Kovno, and attacked stubbornly, finally retreating before Russian bayonet charges, but in order.

ROYE CENTER OF BATTLE

French Official Statement Says There Are No New Details to Give Out. Impression Favorable.

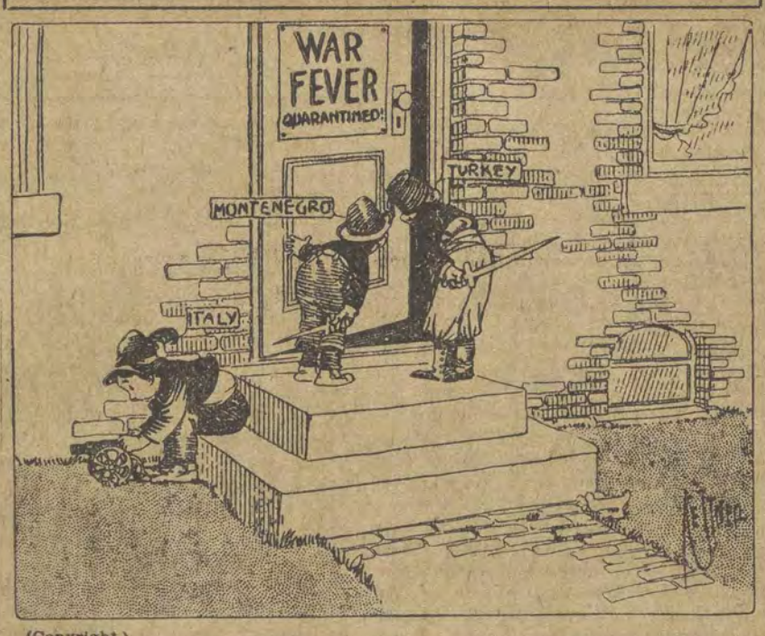
Paris.—The official communication issued here says:

"There is no new detail to announce. The general impression is favorable."

London.—Roye, the little town on the main road from Amiens to Noyon, the heights around which have been alternately occupied by the French and the Germans during the past week, is still the center of a battle of great violence.

The Germans, who are fighting stubbornly to protect their flank at this point, have brought up re-enforcements, but according to the French official communication all their attacks have been repulsed.

The action, however, is still proceeding and upon it much depends, for if the Germans are beaten their line of communication at Tergnier will be seriously threatened.



Seven British Steamers Reported Sunk.

London.—The following official statement, issued in Berlin, has been received here by wireless:

"The German cruiser Karlsruhe has sunk seven British steamers in the Atlantic."

Berlin.—Now that the Germans have succeeded in clearing East Prussia of the Russians, German army officers are giving their views as to the fighting qualities of the Russian emperor's soldiers and officers.

REPULSE GERMAN ATTACK

Allies' Pressure Tells on Germans. French Forces Reach Practically to Belgian Border.

London.—The battle of the Aisne finds the allied armies pushing with all the strength they can bring to bear in their great effort to outflank the German right wing and force it back from its line of communication through Belgium.

There is evidence that this movement is beginning to tell, and that unless something unforeseen happens this portion of the German army must fall back to another defensive line.

The French official report says the action continues to develop to the northward, so that the French left must be pushing toward Cambrai, as it was in the neighborhood of Albert.

Even farther north than this the French cavalry is operating and last week a German force which was sent to Orchies, 16 miles southeast of Lille, to punish franc-tieurs for an alleged attack on a German hospital at that place met with superior forces and had to fall back.

The Germans, too, admit that they have been unable to arrest the French advance against their right and also that the allies have advanced on their right front. Indeed, there seems to be some agreement in the official reports of the belligerents on the events in this part of the battlefield.

JAPS CLOSE ON KIAO-CHAU

Invest Heights Around Tsing-Tau. Overlook German Position—Evacuate Line of Defense.

London.—The Japanese occupied all the high ground outside Tsing-Tau (seat of government of the German concession of Kiao-chau) overlooking the German's main line of defense, says a statement given out by the official news bureau. The communication continues:

"They began an attack on the advanced positions four kilometers (two miles and a half) from the enemy's main line at dawn. In a spurt of fierce flame from sea and land they drove the enemy from his position."

Peking.—The Germans in Kiao-chau have evacuated the Waldersee line of defense before an overwhelming force of the enemy. Tsing-Tau is now completely invested. The German losses were small.

This information is contained in a dispatch received here from a German source at Tsi-Nan, Shan-Tung, which evidently is a wireless communication from Tsing-Tau. It adds that the Japanese armored cruiser squadron bombarded Tsing-Tau Monday without doing any damage.

GERMANS BESIEGE ANTWERP

Commence Attack on First Line of Defense—Village People Flee to Forts.

Amsterdam.—The Germans have commenced their attack on the first line of defense of Antwerp, according to disptches received by the Amsterdam papers. Moll, an important railway junction near the Dutch border, was occupied by the Germans, and now the Germans who again occupy Malines, began a bombardment of Lierre, directly in front of Antwerp. They also continued their bombardment of Forts Waehel and St. Catharine. It is believed heavy Austrian artillery is being used.

Lierre, according to a message to the Handelsblad, has been under shell fire since early morning. The people at first hid in the cellars, but subsequently fled to Antwerp, being joined by fugitives from the surrounding villages. It is reported that one shell fell on a hospital, killing nine persons.

Concentrate on West.

London.—Fighting of the past few days, which took the form of heavy offensive operations, has not changed to any marked extent the positions of the opposing armies in Northern France.

Indian Troops Land.

London.—The war information bureau made it known that Indian troops were landed in France. The point of landing was not revealed, but it is presumed the troops disembarked at Marseilles.

GERMAN FLANK EXTENDED

Paris.—The following official announcement was issued here:

"There is nothing of particular importance to describe except in the region of Roye (on the French left wing), where a violent action has turned successfully in our favor, and in the Argonne, where we have made progress at several new points.

"The general situation remains satisfactory."

London.—The battle of the Aisne, now nearing the end of its third week, soon will outstrip in respect to time the greatest fought at Mukden nearly 10 years ago, but still no decisive result has been achieved.

The French official communication condensed into about 30 words was one of the shortest given to the public since the war began. It records that progress has been made by both right and left wings of the allied armies, but gives no details or the extent of the progress between the lines.

Military experts believe the great claws, as they have been described, continue to open to clutch at the outspread wings of the German army, particularly the right, which forms the upright portion of the L, and now has its back to the east, fighting with desperation to prevent the French left from encircling or smashing it along most of the front, estimated at 180 miles in length.

The artillery has played by far the most important part in the struggle, but on the German right lighter guns, cavalry and infantry are doing most of the fighting with a stubbornness and disregard of life that people so often have said in recent years modern soldiers never would display.

IMPORTANT BATTLE FOUGHT

French and Germans Hold Center of Stage—Berlin Silent on Operations in France.

New York.—For the moment, all interest is fixed on the territory occupied by the French left wing and the German right wing, where the most determined fighting of the battle line is going on. The allied forces gradually are moving northward, and, according to the French official statement, that battle continues to develop more and more toward the north, the allies attempting to get beyond the extremity of the German line for the great outflanking movement which has been the object of their operations.

A continuation of this advance to the north would bring the allies to Cambrai, a strongly fortified town in Nord, and beyond that as far as the circle could be drawn.

Meanwhile there is comparative calm from Rheims to the Meuse, which constitutes the center of the front, but in the Woevre district there have been engagements in which the French have made advances.

Regarding the operations in Northern Farnce, Berlin is officially silent, dispatches from the German capital declaring that no information has been given out regarding the progress of the general engagement.

An official announcement from Petrograd says the Austrian province of Galicia is completely freed of Austrians, the last remnants of their troops having sought refuge in the Carpathians. An unofficial dispatch from the Russian capital says fighting along the East Prussian frontier has resulted in the repulse of all the German attempts to force a passage of the River Niemen, in the government of Suwalki.

Ships Sunk by Mines in Adriatic.

London.—A dispatch to the Times from Rome says a Roumanian sailing ship and an Italian steamer have been sunk by mines in the Adriatic with heavy loss of life.

More British Officers Killed.

London.—The official report of casualties among British officers, from general headquarters, includes Brig.-Gen. Frederick L. V. Wing, commanding the third division, Royal artillery. Gen. Wing won distinction in the South African war.

Torpedo Boat Sunk.

Rome.—An Italian torpedo boat is reported to have been sunk by a mine between Venice and Comacchio, in the Adriatic sea. No confirmation of the report can be obtained in official circles.

Two Forts Near Cracow Reported to Have Fallen—Petrograd Correspondent Reports 30,000 Men Killed and Wounded.

London.—Reuter's Rome correspondent says news received in the Italian capital from Russian headquarters declares that Przemysl, Galicia, has been attacked by the Russians on all sides.

Two of the forts, it is said, already have been taken, and from these the Russians silenced several Austrian batteries.

A dispatch to the Central News from Rome says:

"The Russian embassy here has issued a communication announcing that the Germans have suffered a terrible defeat in the provinces of Lodz and Suwalki, Russian Poland.

"The Germans," the communication says, "were attacked with extreme violence and compelled to flee from Suwalki, Ostrowiec and other towns, leaving behind great quantities of transports and guns. Their troops threw away their rifles and baggage. Numerous cannon were abandoned."

Telegrams from Petrograd, the Central News correspondent at Rome says, declare that the Germans have lost 30,000 men in killed or wounded and 20,000 taken prisoners.

The Antwerp correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph company has sent the following dispatch:

"The German attack on the fort and approaches of Koningshoyck (one of the new forts on the outer line) was repulsed.

"A violent attack on Termonde was repulsed, the Belgians blowing up the bridge (over the Scheldt).

"The Belgians undertook attack from Antwerp on the front of the easterly position. This attack continues."

ANTWERP FORTS HOLD OUT

Bombardment of Forts Continues. British Aviators Do Splendid Work—Refugees Arrive.

Antwerp.—The bombardment of the southeast front of the Antwerp defenses was resumed fiercely, but no success attended the German effort to break through the strong Belgian positions. During the brilliant moonlight the Germans bombarded the forts at Duffel, Waelhem and Lierre. Many shells fell on the town of Duffel and a big paper factory was damaged severely.

The enemy made an infantry attack in force from the direction of Termonde on the intermediate forts of Liezel, Brendonck and Heyndonck, but it was brilliantly repulsed. The Germans suffered heavy losses. In the afternoon the artillery shelled Thisselt and Raemdonck, to the west of Mechlin. The damage was immaterial.

British aviators did splendid work for the Belgians. Flying in and out among the low clouds, they indicated the German positions to Fort Waelhem and enabled the gunners to direct a withering fire on the attackers.

CLAIM GERMAN DISASTER

Petrograd Correspondent Tells of New Gun Used by Russians—Says Rennenkampf Prepared.

London.—Percival Gibbon, the Daily Chronicle's Petrograd correspondent, telegraphs:

"The great German guns, which are now making their difficult way back over the marshes to the north and south of the Suwalki, met their match during the fighting on the Niemen. There appeared for the first time the new patterns of the Russian gun of large caliber and considerable mobility, which are the products of the Putiloff works.

"Artillery experts who have watched its performance are satisfied that it is equal in power and effect to anything the Germans have yet shown. On the Prussian frontier near Druskenik two of these new guns silenced the German batteries within 10 minutes. The German guns were afterward abandoned on their position, every gunner having been killed.

"The German invasion has been a disaster. It has failed at every point. Even as a reconnaissance it can have produced nothing of even the smallest value to the Germans.

Germans Repulsed.

Washington.—The following dispatch from the Belgian minister of foreign affairs was made public here:

"Forts south and southeast of Antwerp have been violently bombarded. On the southwest attack of German troops against Willebroeck repulsed."

Aeroplanes Toward Paris.

Paris.—Two Taube (German) aeroplanes were reported near Compiegne, flying in the direction of Paris. They are being pursued by one of the French aviators.

HOW RESINOL CURED ITCHING SKIN TORMENT

Baltimore, Md., May 23, 1914: "My limbs from knee to ankle were completely covered with eczema for a year. I hated to go in company, it itched and burned so badly. I had no rest at night. I tried a good many remedies for eczema, both liquid and salve, but they did me no good, only made the skin more rough and scaly. I learned of resinol ointment and resinol soap and tried them, and was relieved of the severe itching and burning AT ONCE, and after a month's steady use was completely cured." (Signed) T. S. The Human Automobile

The human body, like an automobile, changes fuel (food) into power. When the fuel is too rich, or the mixers and valves are out of order, waste products clog the machinery and reduce the power.

The kidneys, like exhaust valves, should carry off the waste (uric acid), but weak kidneys can't. Uric acid in excess causes headache, weak eyes, rheumatic pains, gravel, dropsy and fatal Bright's disease.

Save the Babies.

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twenty-two per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirty-seven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save a majority of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity, they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. Castoria operates exactly the reverse, but you must see that it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Castoria causes the blood to circulate properly, opens the pores of the skin and allays fever.

Finally Captured Eagle.

After defying a score of traps and as many guns of farmers, who have sought vainly to impose summary sentence for the loss of hundreds of chickens over a period of six months, Old Baldy, a monster eagle, was caught by a man with a lasso. He lay waiting in the shadow of his chicken house for the chicken thief for more than eight hours. The bird swooped down shortly after daybreak. The lasso was thrown around the eagle's neck. The man wanted to capture the bird alive, but it fought so desperately that he was forced to shoot it. The eagle measures eight feet seven inches from tip to tip, and weighs 73 pounds.

Read from Mr. MacAdoo Secretary of Treasurery, President Wilson's son in law and right hand man; "In a number of places which have been brought to my notice the interest rate has been put up arbitrarly by the concerted action of the banks. There is no justification for high interest rate. There is no real reason for tight money in this county." Age Herald October 7.

Mr. MacAdoo says the banks are hoarding the money. Why is it Democrats who control every branch of the National government, stand by and see the farmers robbed?

What is the cause of all this cry about no money? What has become of all the cold cash we had in this country under Republican rule? Have the money power and the speculator combined so as to rob the southern farmer who has been so loyal in the past to the Democrtic party? Why is it the Democrats which have full control of the national government will not provide some way to help save the farmers of this county from bankruptcy? Is it because the south votes the Democratic ticket any way? Or is it because the speculators are in control of the Democratic party? Will some one please explain why it is the war has put every thing up except cotton and put cotton down? Will some one please tell us when we ever had a prosperous year under full Democratic laws and a Democratic administration? One thousand dollars reward will be paid for the information. $500,00 reward for a copy of the Democratic platform in this state and county for 1914.

SOUTH MUST AND WILL HELP ITSELF!

That congres is not going to help us out of the plight in which those dependent upon the cotton crop have been plunged by the European war, is now evident.

That is now apparent with a finality that must convince the most credulous and confiding nature.

Very well, then!

There is at least the advantage that we know that we have nothing to expect.

We have before pulled out of holes infinitely deeper than this one without a helping hand.

We will do the same thing in the present instance, and on record time. The task already is well under way. It will be completed with a minimum of hardship upon the humblest factor in the southern states.

But the south will not let this mammoth congressional Punch and Judy show, the curtain upon which has just rung down, pass without its lasting lesson.

That lesson is that these people will not soon again be fooled by promises, nor be jigged along by broadside assurances that the government will come to their rescue in other emergencies that may confront them.

For two months we have been treated to a farce comedy of promises that would be humorous if it were not founded on deception.

We were told there was anywhere from $150,000,000 to $500,000,000 of emergency currency available to meet an unprecedented crisis.

We were told its placing for the relief of farmers and business men needing help was a matter of detail only, soon arranged, soon executed.

We were told to banish worry and leave it all to Washington.

We followed that advice. What happened?

After weeks of buncombe, thrashing around, caucuses and conferences, the soothing information comes that—

Congress will do nothing whatever of a definite nature! That the cotton states themselves must find the solution. Those who formerly were eager to lift the burden from our sholders are now fertile in advice as to how the problem can be solved without the interference of Washington.

It was a beautiful dream—while it lasted. The awakening is a little rude. But, thank the Lord! the south has cared for itself in previous emergencies and is fully capable of repeating the process in this emergency.

The shame of the thing is that we have lost valuable time listening to the siren song of congress. If we had been told the truth, at first, instead of gulled with verbal promissory notes, our problem would already have three-fourths been solved.

Never mind! The south will not forget!

Congress could willingly valorize the silver of the western mines.

It could pour millions and millions of public money to which the south contributed, into western irrigation projects.

It could appropriate millions and send two cruisers to bring stranded Americans back from Europe—which was right.

It could appropriate $37,000,000 to build a railroad through Alaska, from which it will be years in receiving a cent's compensation.

It could scramble to the relief of Wall street, pinched, asked for help.

For "probes" that ended in nothing, for "pork barrels" built to keep politicians in congress, congress could lavish millions.

But when confronted with the gravest crisis in half a century, when it asked, not for uncompensating aid, but for help with the best staple crop in existence for absolute security—

We were treated to a drama of promises which ended in a hoax!

The farce is ended. The curtain is rung down. At last we know that help cannot be expected from congress.

Now to the task of working out our own salvation. We have done it before. We are better equipped to do it again than ever in our history.—Atlanta Constitution.

Smile Mr. Democrat, smile. Tell your friends about the war and all the good things Woodrow and his crowd have done for you. The above article shows what confidence one of the strongest Democratic editors in the south has in Democracy.

MINERAL SPRINGS

Editor Union-Banner:

I wish the Democrats of Clanton could have been out here on Monday night to see the demonstration on the part of the people here. I have observed many political meetings here, and I am sure the interest in this one was the best I have ever seen. I was here early, and there was a large crowd already assembled; they continued to come till at the time Hon. J. O. Middleton called the meeting to order, the house was more than full. Many had to remain on the outside.

With a few appropriate remarks, Mr. Middleton introduced Mr. W. E. Thomas, candidate for Representative on the Progressive ticket, who made a short talk of about ten minutes.

At this time Mr. Roy Sawyer walked in, and being offered an opportunity by the chairman, he tried for about thirty-five minutes to make the best of the situation he could.

Mr. Middleton introduced Judge Reynolds as one who had been dubbed the Roosevelt of Chilton county, saying he could not conceive of any higher compliment that could have been paid him by the Press. He said perhaps Judge Reynolds had been abused more than any citizen of the county, but was always found on the side of the people and ready to fight their battles.

When Judge Reynolds rose, there was applause for several minutes. His speech of about one hour, was received with the greatest enthusiasm. He referred to the Democratic executive committee having been ordered by Mr. Goodwyn to put the bars up in Chilton, and not let Progressives, Republicans nor Socialists vote in their primary. He said Mr. Pinckard, chairman of the Democratic executive committee of this county, called the county executive committe together and put up the bars because the bosses at Montgomery said so. Mr. Ab Retherford interrupted the Judge by saying that the Democrats HAD to put up the bars because the bosses said so. When Judge Reynolds got through with that statement Mr. Rutherford looked like thirty cents.

He spoke of the bosses taking Mr. Stanfield down and putting Mr. Sawyer up for Representative. And he said the people would take Mr. Sawyer down on election day. From the demonstration out here it looks as if it would be by a large majority too.

The next speaker was Mr. Harri , the nominee for Sheriff. His speech was well received.

Squire Waldrop, candidate for Commissioner, followed with a short but appropriate speech.

Mr. Middleton concluded with a speech of thirty minutes. It was filled with much enthusiasm and portrayed very forcibly the false position of the democrats, and making it plain that we always have hard times when they are in office.

At the conclusion of his speech he was asked to poll the crowd which he did, and the great crowd rose as one for the Progressive ticket, and when the other side was put, but two lone men stood up, Mr. Sawyers and Mr. Maud Robinson; you know it looked mighty gloomy for the Democrats to only have two out of several hundred.

It was frequenty remarked that if Gant Riggins and Frank Goodgame could be sent back to this neighborhood there would not be any Democrats left. I have thought they might get ten or fifteen up here but I do not know now.

The Democrats think we people havn't any sense; they think they can fool us any way, with any old thing. Frank says he is a straight Republican, and as there is not a Republican ticket out he will support Jones the Democrat. Gant says he is a straight Sociallist, but they have no ticket and he is for Jones also. Now do you think we cannot understand all this? I wonder who is paying for the horse and buggy they ride in? I wonder who is paying the expense of the campaign they are waging?

Well I do not think we ought to be too hard on the Democrats. They have got their business in a jam. The whole thing is in such a mess that they cannot afford to go out and uphold the Democratic party, and they have to get some pretended Republican and Sociallist to manage their campaign for them. You know it makes me shed tears to think of a few good men getting themselves in such a mess. There are some honest Democrats that want to vote from principal, but my, just think what they have to endorse to be a Democrat. First Killgore runs the campaign for them; then comes Frank in all his pomp and glory, and he hits her for a quarter race till he is bellused; then comes Pounds for a half mile race, and he takes the the lead. Now it is up to Gant Riggins to lead the Democratic party out of the wilderness under Sociallist colors. It must be mighty bitter to some Democrats that have some principal left to have to stand by and see this crowd running the Democratic party. Just think for a moment how these fellows have stood with the Democratic party for the last few years; but you know it does not make any difference with a few fellows that hope to get office how they get it, or who leads the fight. I say it is enough to make the hardest heart weep to see a party that has stood for something, sacrifice all principle, trying to get an office.

Well we boys will all be at the joint discussion Saturday the 17th, at Clanton. I hope as many as can will come to hear both sides.

There will be a public speaking at Highland schoolhouse on next Saturday night; the discussion will be in regard to the cotton situation and banking question. J. H. Jackson and others will speak.

SENATOR BANKHEAD'S PLAN FOR COTTON SITUATION

To the Chilton County Farmer and Business Man:

This business crisis is no time for the crimination and recrimination ordinarily practiced in local and state politics.

It is incumbent upon the farmer, merchant and banker to look well to the future and study carefully the succinct, practical plan submitted to his people by Senator John H. Bankhead in the Birmingham News of October 5, whereby the Senator proposes, through a special session of the legislature immediately called for the purpose, to place forthwith, an amendment to our constitution,—upon which the whole people by their vote, will have previous opportunity to pass—providing a medium of exchange for the purchase of one-half of the state's cotton crop, by the issuance of forty millions in bonds, in denominations ranging from ten dollars to one thousand dollars, thus to the end that the farmer and the business man can buy with his cotton, be it a small or a large amount, any denomination of bond that he can afford to handle. This system will afford a market for the cotton, and at the same time will afford a subsidiary medium of exchange (the bonds) in lieu of the actual money; the system should have a tendency in practical operation, as I view it, to steady and standardize the price of cotton, and to afford a system of credit to the State, to the individual farmer, the merchant and the banker. The bonds would be absolutely security, for the reason that they would be backed by the substantial commodity, cotton, as well as the State's credit in the commercial world. The bond, therefore, viewed from this standpoint would be worth dollar for dollar, and should, after business conditions assume a steady formation as a result of the standardizing of the price of the cotton crop, be worth a premium.

It is not for the hesitating and vacillatting local or statewide politician to place his ear to the ground and wait, look and listen for the direction of the popular straw. It is time for the practical farmer and business man to take the situation in hand, looking well to the future, the time when, after the first of the year 1915, the farmer will go to his merchant to arrange for advances to make the 1915 crop. What then, if the present conditions confront us? Providence only can determine when the present conflict in Europe will terminate; by it we are bound hand and foot unless, by some remedy as suggested by Senator Bankhead, we take a grip on our destiny.

Placing in execution this or some similar plan will steady the business conditions for the year 1915, when the farmer necessarily will be compelled to make his arrangements for the year.

Would it not be well for the advance merchant and the farmer, in making the advance contract (the mortgage) for 1915, to have the said mortgage to stipulate and provide for the planting by the farmer, of a certain percentage of his acreage in ready money Spring crops, which will be marketable for cash? Would not this tend to practical diversification, for which there has been so much popular clamor?

Very respectfully,
WM. M. ADAMS.

REGARDING DISCOVERY OF COAL AND OIL HERE.

Editor Union-Banner:—In assuming the prerogative of an old newspaper man and one who has had a wide experience in the oil, gas and coal fields of Sistersville, W. Va., Bridgeport, Ills., Tulsa, Okla., and North Louisiana, I trust you will pardon the friendly criticism of conditions in this territory, as voiced in a local, under the caption "Oil and Coal are Discovered Here," published in a recent issue of your valuable paper.

You stated that it was impossible to obtain authentic information, on account of the desire on the parts of persons, on the inside, to act in secret, until such a time when all available lands should be fenced in by leases or options prohibitive to the entrance of all who otherwise would have a chance to assist the exploitation of conditions beneficial to the entire community.

My understanding is, that all money used in the drilling and construction of the well in question, is from a fund created by the taxpayers, therefore public money, in which every taxpayer has an interest and an unquestioned additional interest in all benefits accruing from the use of their money.

As a guardian of public functions, a censor over the morals of a municipality, as well as a moulder of public opinion, is is your duty, dear editor, to place before your readers accurate information, so that they may protect their interests as well as the interests of their heirs and assigns.

There can be no question, from the viewpoint of experience, about the presence of oil, gas and coal in marketable quantity, in this territory. This triple alliance is inseperable. Just where it will be profitable to go after it remains to be seen later, but if public money is to be used to locate such desirable assets the result should be for public gain and not to satisfy the avraciousness of private individuals who are gambling with chance.

Throw the searchlight of your powerful personality on to this secret and give it to your friends, the farmers, merchants and taxpayers through the columns of your paper. Birmingham Stomach Sufferer Convinced by the First Dose.

H. R. DeLaye, After Suffering for Nine Months From Serious Malady, Finds Quick Relief.

H. R. DeLay of Birmingham, Ala., suffered from an acute stomach trouble for months. He went to doctors and got only a day or two of relief.

Mr. DeLaye is head of DeLaye's News Agency, and his malady means both pain and less business efficiency. A cure became more more imperative. He read an announcement of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. Now read what he says:

"I received your trirl treatment last week and I used it according to directions. I am at a loss to find words to tell you how much good it has done for me. I feel like a new man. The relief that your medicine has given me is wonderful. I have been to several doctors and they have only given me relief for one or two dav."

We want all people who have chronic stomach trouble or constipation, no matter of how long standing, to try one dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy—one dose will convince you. This is the medicine so many of our people have been taking with surprising resnlts. The most thorough system cleaner we ever sold. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy is now sold here by Upchurch Drug Company and druggists everyWhere."

OTIS ROBINSON SHOT BY BEN KENDRICK.

A shooting affray occurred in Clanton Tuesday afternoon in which Otis Robinson, a young man about seventeen years old was seriously wounded by a pistol shot inflicted by Ben Kendrick, another young man of about the same age.

The direct cause of the shooting is not known, but it is understood that there has been ill feeling between the goung men for some time. They have had some personal encounters before, but none so serious as this one.

Kendrick was working below town, and walked to and from his work on the railroad, passing by a lumber mill where Robinson was working. It was as he was passing this mill that he and Robinson came in contact, and the shots were fired by Kendrick, one of which took effect in Robinson's breast, making a very dangerous wound. Entering the center of the breast, the bullet turned to the right side, striking the liver. They were only a few feet apart when the shots were fired.

Young Robinson was carried to Montgomery on the evening train in the hope that an operation might save his life. Reports received Wednesday morning say the chance for his recovery is rather uncertain.

Kendrick is a stranger in Clanton, and little is known of him. He makes no statements more than that he shot in self defense. He is in jail waiting the result of Robinsons wounds.

The Robinson boy is the son of Jno. M. Robinson, and was working at his father's mill.

Walter Culp, another young man about twenty-one, has been arrested charged with complicity in the crime.

ASTHMA AND HAY FEVER A GUARANTEED RELIEF

"I have arranged with Alred Drug Company so that every sufferer from Asthma, Hay Fever or Bronchial Asthma in Clanton can try my treatment entirely at my risk," Dr. Rudolph Schiffmann announces. He says: "Buy a 50-cent package of my Asthmador, try it, and if it does not afford you immediate relief, or if you do not find it the best remedy you have ever used, take it back to Alred Drug Company and they will return your money, cheerfully and without any question whatever. After seeing the grateful relief it has afforded in hundrers of cases, which had been considered incurable, and which had been given up in despair, I know what it will do. I am so sure that it will do the same with others that I am not afraid to guarantee it will relieve instantaneously. The druggists handling Asthmador will return your money if you say so. You are to be the sole judge and under this positive guarantee, absolutely no risk is run in buying Asthmador."

Persons living elsewhare will be supplied under the same guarantee by their local druggist or direct by Dr. R. Schiffmann, St. Paul, Minn.

Convicts Escape From Train

Two negro convicts who were being carried to the penitentiary Wednesday morning, escaped from a train jast south of the depot here, and made their way into the big swamp, getting away completely. Just as No. 9, the train they were on was crossing the creek swamp, one of the negroes pulled the signal cord to the engineer, and the train slowed down. When this was done the two leaped from the car window. Soon after the alarm was given, an army of men surrounded the swamp to close in on the fugitives, but they had been too quick. They made the get-away successfully, and have not been recovered yet.

Quick Relief When Utterly Worn Out

Getting the Blood in Order Is Required By Most People.

If you think you have gone to smash and fit only for the discard, try S. S. S. for the blood. It will surprise you to know what can be done for health once the blood is released of the excess of body wastes that keep it from exercising its full measure of bodily repair.

If you feel played out, go to any drug store and ask for a bottle of S. S. S. Here is a remedy that gets at work in a twinkling; it just naturally rushes right into your blood, scatters germs right and left, up and down and sideways.

You feel better at once, not from a stimulant, not from the action of drugs, but from the rational effect of a natural medicine.

The ingredients in S. S. S. serve the active purpose of so stimulating the cellular tissues of the body that they pick out from the blood their own essential nutriment and thus repair work begins at once. The relief is general all over the system.

Do not neglect to get a bottle of S. S. S. today. It will make you feel better in just a few minutes. It is prepared only in the laboratory of The Swift Specific Co., 530 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Send for their free book telling of the many strange conditions that afflict the human family by reason of impoverished blood.

Everything in this section is moving along smoothly, except some of the farmers have the blues over the cotton situation. They are grumbling at the low prices, some blaming the merchant, and some saying it is caused by the war. It is possible that they may have something to do with it, but I believe the main trouble is that the farmer is to blame for the way he carries on his business. He depends too much on cotton, and does not raise enough of his necessities at home. We must get out of this if we ever expect to have better times. We must raise our corn, peas, potatoes and everything we have to eat, right here at home, and not have to depend on the merchant or anyone else to furnish it to us. If everybody would cut down his cotton acreage in 1915, and look to raising what he has to eat, you would see better times. The farmer is the most independent people in the world, and could be the happiest, if he only would manage right.

Do not plant all your crop in cotton and depend on the other man to raise your corn and meat next year, Mr. Farmer. Raise it yourself. You can do it, and cheaper too, than anyone else can for you.

Hoping to see this in print, and promising to write some more later, I am, only a farmers son.

The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of "THE MAN HIGHER UP," "HIS RISE TO POWER," Etc.

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

SYNOPSIS.

Mark Truitt, encouraged by his sweetheart, Unity Martin, leaves Bethel, his native town, to seek his fortune. Simon Truitt tells Mark that it long has been his dream to see a steel plant at Bethel and asks the son to return and build one if he ever gets rich. Mark applies to Thomas Henley, head of the Quinby Iron works, for a job and is sent to the construction gang. His success in that work wins him a place as helper to Roman Andrzejzski, open-hearth furnaceman. He becomes a boarder in Roman's home and assists Piotr, Roman's son, in his studies. Kazia, an adopted daughter, shows her gratitude in such a manner as to arouse Mark's interest in her. Heavy work in the intense heat of the furnace causes Mark to collapse and Kazia cares for him. Later Roman also succumbs and Mark gets his job. Roman resents this and tells Mark to find another boarding place. Five years elapse during which Mark has advanced to the foremanship, while his labor-saving devices have made him invaluable to the company. In the meantime Kazia has married one Jim Whiting. Mark meets with an accident which dooms him to be a cripple for life. He returns to Bethel intending to stay there. He finds Unity about to marry another man and wins her back. Unity urges him to return to his work in the city. Mark rises rapidly to wealth and power in the steel business, but the social ambitions of his wife make their married life unhappy. The big steel interests are secretly anxious to get hold of stock in the Iroquois Iron company, supposed to be worthless. Timothy Woodhouse seeks financial assistance from Mark and the latter buys Woodhouse's Iroquois stock at a small figure. Henley forces Quinby to let Mark have stock in the Quinby company, through a threat that if he does not he will lose both of them.

It was the less satisfying because he foresaw the end of a chapter. He had spent himself: in body—he was no longer capable of long intense application, he had fallen back upon the invalid's last resort, drugs; in mind—the creative faculty seemed dead, that very morning a young man in the mills had announced an important invention that was to have been Truitt's magnum opus and upon which his sterile brain had labored in vain; in soul—he could no longer dream. And for reward he had—the dry fact of a triumph he could not sense and the prospect of an empty, useless, discontented future.

He was a critic, you see; but not of himself. The world was out of joint.

Passers-by were diverted from their own cares by the sight of a well-dressed man stamping his cane on the pavement and muttering aloud: "An evil fate pursues me. Other men do as I do, desire as I desire and find content. Why can't I be contented—and happy?"

A thousand faces streamed past him, unrecognized and unrecognizing. Then, at a corner where two currents jammed each other, appeared one that seemed oddly familiar. It was of an undistinguished homeliness, pasty pale, morose, matching well the general shabbiness of its owner. At first Mark, confused by the dirty brown beard, did not recognize him.

The man had no doubts. At sight of Mark an evil glitter sprang into the sullen eyes.

"You!"

By the hate that had lived through fifteen years Mark placed him.

"Piotr Andzrejzski!"

"Peter Anderson," the man corrected him.

"That's a good American name. I'd forgotten you had a preference." Mark smiled and held out a friendly hand. "How are you, Peter Anderson?"

The hand was ignored. When Peter Anderson sneered, his homeliness became almost grotesque.

"Since you're so interested, I manage to keep alive."

"How do you manage it?"

"I'm a compositor on the Outcry—when there's any money for an issue."

"The Outcry?"

"You'll hear of it yet. It's the paper of our Cause."

Mark knew of but one cause that employed the capital. "Socialism, I suppose." He smiled indulgently. "I hope it's in funds sufficiently often."

"I look it, don't I?"

The answer was so obvious that Mark avoided it. "How," he asked hastily, "is Roman?"

"He breathes and sleeps and eats. But he's dead."

"Is that a Socialist parable? I'm not a Socialist, so you'll have to explain."

"His mind's gone. It began to go soon after you stole his job. But probably you've forgotten that, too."

"I have no recollection," said Mark coldly, "of any such occurrence." With a curt nod, he passed on.

He had gone but a few steps when he halted and looked back. Peter, unmindful of elbowing pedestrians, was still at the corner, glaring at him.

Impulsively he turned and retraced his steps.

"See here, Piotr," he said. "Let us not use hard names. There are a good many things we'd never agree on. But we can agree on this—you're hard up. I've been luckier than you. What can I do to help you?"

Piotr's lips formed a surly, "Nothing." But the refusal did not fall. A look of transparent craft displaced malevolence.

"Do you mean that?" he asked suspiciously.

"I'm not in the habit—"

"I don't care about your habits," Piotr interrupted ungraciously. "If you want to do something, you can lend me a hundred dollars."

"Lend," evidently, was a euphemism.

"What will you do—still, that's your business. Of course, I will. I wish you'd asked me something harder. Come along to the bank."

The bank was a few blocks away. Mark improved the time by asking the details of Roman's circumstances. Piotr, sullenness not lifted by the prospect of money, answered shortly. It was a pitiable story of descent—of the gradual dissipation of the savings of Roman's active years and the swift failure, through idleness and too much alcohol, of his mental powers, leaving him and Hanka dependent upon Piotr's scanty and uncertain earnings.

"Where," Mark asked, as they entered the bank, "do you live now?"

"Rose Alley."

"Rose Alley!" Mark stopped short. "My God!"

"What does your sort know of it?"

"Quite enough. Come along."

A few minutes later they were in the street again, Piotr the richer by the sum he had asked.

They stood facing each other—the strong man who had conquered and the inefficient, one of life's guerrillas, who had just taken of the strong man's largess. But the inefficient was not grateful; a hundred dollars could not conquer his hatred.

"I s'pose," he sneered, "you want me to thank you?"

"No. If you need more, come to me. And, see here, Piotr, I want you to get Roman and your mother away from Rose Alley."

"You want—!" The money in his pocket, Piotr threw craft to the winds. "What have you to do with us? Do you s'pose we'd let you help us?"

"But you took—"

Piotr chuckled—a chuckle of triumphant malice. "Did you think it was for us?" The chuckle grew into a laugh, as though he pondered some mammoth jest. "You—you—have just paid for the next issue of the Outcry!"

He wheeled and went haltingly away. Mark watched him until he turned a corner.

It was not Mark's habit to waste precious hours wandering the crowded city streets in introspective meditation. He now went to the appointment with his lawyer to keep which he had left Henley.

It was a long and tedious consultation, having to do with a big real estate deal in which Truitt had shown his customary shrewdness. He displayed little interest. More than once Shirley, the lawyer, had to recall his straying attention. Shirley was astonished at this; his client was notable for his concentration on the matter in hand. He would have been even more deeply astonished, could he have looked upon the picture that lured away Mark's thoughts. But then, for

She Looked at Him Steadily, Showing No Surprise.

Shirley, the name of Rose Alley would have raised to life no dead memories.

"It's a good deal," he remarked, "for you."

Mark answered with a nod and opened another subject. "I don't suppose Timothy Woodhouse left much."

"Practically nothing."

"How does our case stand?"

"We'll win it."

"You're sure of that?"

"Absolutely. His estate will never push it to trial."

"Then settle it."

Shirley whistled his surprise. "Has the philanthropic bee stung the whole Quinby concern?" he grinned. "I wouldn't do that, though. It would be an admission. As a lawyer, I couldn't advise—"

"I don't ask advice. Settle it."

Shirley waved a concessive hand. "It's your case, of course. For how much? They'll take any figure."

"For whatever you think fair. Not as a lawyer, however. Think of it," Mark smiled wryly, "as a gentleman—if the word means anything to you."

"It's your case," Shirley repeated. "But my notion is, people will think you don't want the publicity—for social reasons. That sort of talk—"

Mark rose abruptly. "I can't help," he replied, with an impatient frown, "what people think, can I? Fix it up as soon as you can."

But the day's adventures were not ended. The ghost of Timothy Woodhouse could not oust Rose Alley from Mark's mind.

The blacks, ordered by telephone, waited him. Swiftly, Mark holding the reins, they were guided across a bridge, along rough-paved, tumbledown streets, into a quarter such as their aristocratic feet had never trod. Grime and decay were everywhere.

It was 15 years since he had seen Rose alley, but he found the way as though he had taken it but yesterday.

He drew up at the mouth of a narrow shallow court, and giving the reins to his man, got down from the trap.

A few children—dirty, sallow, undersized—had been playing in the court. With difficulty, for they had not his tongue and were afraid of the stranger, he learned from them in which tenement Peter Anderson lived.

He groped and stumbled up two flights of stairs that groaned protestingly under his tread. He found a door and knocked. It opened. . . .

For a full minute, speechless, he stared at the woman who stood on the threshold.

CHAPTER XVI.

Glowing Embers.

The figure silhouetted in the doorway was one to make men dream, full curved, strong with the strength of women whose forbears have always toiled, yet without heaviness; it was the strength that lies in quality, not in bulk.

She looked at him steadily, showing no surprise. And by that he read that she had learned to take life, its coincidences and its climaxes as they came, calmly, without loss of poise.

She spoke first, in a low even voice that hinted even less than her manner at inner excitement. "I thought it was Piotr. Your step sounds like his."

They might have been daily familiars.

"Yes," he flushed. "I am somewhat in his case."

He almost missed the swift glance she cast toward his cane. But he was grateful that she had no comment for his injury. In the presence of her splendid perfections his own physical shortcoming seemed almost cause for shame.

"How do you do, Kazia?" he said gravely. "I didn't expect to find you here."

He held out an uncertain hand. She took it, neither hastily nor reluctantly, for a brief meaningless clasp.

"I am here sometimes. Will you come in?"

She stood aside and he entered, trying to overcome his limp. It was the kitchen, which in Rose alley—as he remembered—had to serve as living room as well. It was clean, but bare; pitifully bare.

By the stove stood a little faded woman, much stooped, her hair white and thin, her pale lack-luster eyes for the moment brightened by a startled question. He went over to her and took her hand. She shrank away from him.

"It is Mark Truitt, Matka," said Kazia in Polish. "Don't you remember?"

Hanka said something in the same tongue.

"She says," Kazia interpreted, "they have never forgotten."

Their eyes met again. . . . His turned away quickly and went to the other occupant of the room. He sat in the only armchair, a huge mass of inert flesh, head slouched forward and fingers playing aimlessly with the long unkempt beard that reached half-way to the bulging waist. Mark laid a hand on his shoulder. Roman looked up. But Roman saw as the new-born babe sees.

The grasp on his shoulder tightened. "Roman, don't you know me? I'm Mark—Mark Truitt, you remember."

The shoulder stirred a little under the tight grasp. Roman's head slouched forward again and he began once more his aimless twisting of the long beard.

"How long," Mark's voice had become sharp, "has he been this way?"

"Almost three years."

"And here?"

"A year longer."

Kazia's eyes said: "What is that to you?"

"Why," he demanded, "didn't you let me know about it?"

She smiled—contemptuously, as it seemed to him.

"We must get them out of here," he went on hastily.

"We can't. Piotr won't let us."

"He must," Mark declared curtly.

"He will not," she repeated.

"I saw him today. He's crazy."

"He is. He's a good compositor and could make enough to keep them at least decently. But he prefers to work for the Outcry—for little or nothing. Generally it's nothing. He says it's for the cause."

"But that's no reason why he shouldn't let me help them."

She shrugged her shoulders. "To Piotr it is. I know, because I've tried."

"Then," he said, "we'll take them away and settle with Piotr afterward."

He said it crisply, with the assured air of fortune's darlings who, having made their resolve, take its consummation for granted. Her faint smile showed again.

"It isn't so simple as that. They won't go."

"They won't go!" He stared. "Why not?"

"For one thing," she returned quietly, "the Matka loves her son. I'll ask her."

She turned to Hanka and for several minutes the two women talked earnestly in their native tongue. Hanka shook her head continuously.

"She says," Kazia returned to Mark, "'My Piotr wouldn't like it.'"

Hanka interrupted, laying a hand on Kazia's arm and looking anxiously toward the door. Kazia nodded.

"She says also," she interpreted again, "that we'd better go. It's most time for Piotr to come home. She's right."

"I think," Mark answered, "I'll stay, since I'm here, and have this out with Piotr."

"You'd better not." Her swift glance seemed to measure his physical frailty. "Piotr's temper is uncertain. He found me here once and drove me out. It—" The gloom could not quite hide the color that surged into her cheeks. "It wasn't nice."

"I'm sorry for them, but just the same, since I've started, I'll see this through and wait for Piotr."

"No, you'd better not," she repeated with cold emphasis. "You can prove your inflexibility in some other way. Piotr is apt to have been drinking and if his temper is stirred up, he'll make them suffer." She nodded toward Hanka and Roman. "Really, you're quite helpless in the matter."

"I seem to be." He laughed shortly, to conceal a disappointment as undefined as the emotion set stirring by the sight of his old friends. "But, at least, I can leave some money."

But she shut him off from this, too. "No. What money they can use without Piotr's knowing of it, I can furnish."

He limped stiffly toward the door, more hurt than he was willing to admit to himself by the rebuff and the failure of his impulsive mission.

He went quickly out into the dark passage, that he might not have to look longer, and there awaited her. When she came, he led the way down the rickety stairs and out into the foul smelling court, lighted up now by a swaying arc lamp.

"One would think," he blurted out, "you wanted to stay there."

"Do you find that so wonderful?"

"I'm glad you can't. It's no place for such as you."

"Many people have lived here."

"But not from choice. I know. I lived here once myself, before—" He hesitated a moment. "I left it to live with Roman."

She made no reply. He stopped, facing her and blocking her egress.

"You're thinking my going there was to the advantage of no one but myself?"

"Why else should you have gone there?"

"That's almost cynical, isn't it? I might have had several other reasons—but didn't. At least I did you no harm."

"Neither harm nor good."

"One doesn't like to think of one's self as reduced to even a harmless nonentity. Still, most of the virtues are negative, I believe. Though I'm vain enough to wish I could have been a positive influence in the making of the woman you've become. It's rather remarkable, Kazia."

"It isn't remarkable—or excuse for vanity."

She had not winced, nor had her steady gaze wandered. But for just an instant a fleeting somber shadow had rested in her eyes.

"I must go," she said.

They walked in silence to the mouth of the court. At their approach Mark's man got down from the trap, touching his hat.

"Can't I set you home?" Mark ventured, not at all sure that she would accept. But she affected no reluctance.

She glanced at a little watch she wore. "I go to the Todd hospital, and I've overstayed here a little."

He helped her up to the seat. The horses sprang forward, swung into the car tracks and quickly left the tenement neighborhood behind. For a time Mark gave his attention to guiding their swift course around overtaken cars and the slow lumbering teams that drew the heavy traffic of the street. They were on the bridge before either spoke.

"You said, to the hospital," he began suggestively. "Do you—"

"I'm on a case there."

"You're a nurse, then? I remember you had a knack for that sort of thing. Your husband—er—I hadn't heard—"

"I haven't seen him for 12 years."

"Kazia," he asked gravely, "will you tell me about yourself?"

"There is nothing to tell—any more than there is about you."

"That is, you're not interested in what has happened to me. You're frank."

"Because a chance has thrown us together for an hour is no reason for us to pretend an interest neither of us can feel."

"You may speak for yourself, please. At least, we can oil the wheels of circumstance by going through the polite forms. You could smile very graciously on my man Felix, but to me—" He broke off with a short laugh. "History has a way of repeating itself. I remember saying something of the sort to you once before. Of course, you've forgotten."

"I forget—nothing."

"Ah!" He turned quickly to her again. "Then I did do you harm."

"I can't see—"

"It follows," he interrupted. "If I had done you no harm, you would remember charitably, not coldly or worse, and you would be at least as cordial to me as to my groom."

"Now it is you," she answered after a thoughtful pause, "who will not let me oil the wheels. Probably what you say is right. I haven't thought much about influences—I haven't had time."

"I'm sorry. Which seems all I can do about it. You and Piotr and Hanka seem in a conspiracy to teach me that for regrettable things we can pay only with regret. But I promised to save you time."

Darkness had fallen when they drew up before the hospital. Mark descended painfully to help her down—a rather superfluous courtesy, since she was better able to alight alone than was he. "You're in good time, I hope?"

"Oh, yes. Thank you for the ride."

They exchanged a conventional hand clasp. She moved toward the steps leading to the hospital door. He began to climb back into the trap.

But the restive horses started too soon, while he was balanced on the little mounting step. His foot was dislodged. He would have fallen, perhaps been dragged, had Kazia not sprung forward, and catching the reins, brought the horses sharply to a stop.

"You are hurt?"

"No," he lied through set teeth, as he pulled himself up to the seat. His

"Ah!" He Turned Quickly to Her Again. "Then I Did You No Harm."

hip, in fact, had received an excruciating wrench. "I'm a little awkward. This is one of the things I can't get quite used to."

"I supposed it was only temporary."

He shook his head briefly, as though the topic were distasteful.

"Another—you probably won't believe this—is an existence that continually requires little cruelties of one. Big ones, too, sometimes."

"You say—requires?"

"At least, encourages. But I," he smiled unpleasantly, "am subject to regrets. And equally unprofitable impulses. Of course," with obvious irony, "this is very interesting to you."

She was standing between two balustrade lamps. In their bright glow he saw her cool impersonal regard change, become questioning. And the dark shadow again—as though she had seen and known to the full the cruelties whereof he spoke. Her lips parted. But no words fell. With an odd little gesture of repression she turned and slowly mounted the stairs. At the top she paused for an instant.

"Good night," she repeated. "And thank you again."

He dined alone at his club that night. The events of the day had left him depressed and strangly restless and with a strong distaste for companionship.

CHAPTER XVII.

Fanned into Flame.

"I'd better quit thinking of her," Mark told himself.

A virtuous and a wise resolution, forsooth! And one strangely hard to keep. The thought—of a woman of the people, dwelling in a fine strong body whose splendid perfection the toil of the people could not diminish, whose flame it could not quench—never withdrew entirely, at most retired into ambush whence to spring out upon him at unguarded moments, with ever increasing potency to stir his jaded imagination.

Attainment of the partnership had indeed proved to be the climax of his career with the Quinby company. Followed quickly the long imminent collapse. There was no specific ailment, save a heavy stubborn cough and the constant ache in his injured hip, which were really symptoms. It was rather a general failure of his powers. He was no longer able to whip flagging energies to the day's tasks. The cool, clear, incisive brain that could grasp a multitude of details and yet not lose sight of result and purpose had become cloudy, vacillating and wandering, a poor tool for the direction of a huge, intricately organized plant operating under tremendous pressure. He was subject to attacks of profound melancholy. He could not sleep without the aid of drugs. Worst of all, the will to endure, to mock pain and weakness, had broken.

"What's the matter with me?" he demanded of his physician.

"Burnt out," was the succinct reply.

"What can I do?"

"Nothing. And quit taking drugs."

"But," habit protested, "I can't do nothing."

"It's your life," interrupted the doctor. "But you've consulted me and I propose to earn the stiff fee I'll charge you. Drop everything, go to the country or to the end of the earth—personally, I'd advise the end of the earth, because it's farthest away and newest to you. Forget work, play a while."

Mark asked and received from the directors a six months' vacation. But, although he formulated no reason, he did not at once leave the city. When the weather permitted he filled in the hours by driving through the parks. They were long tedious hours, as drearily empty as he had forecasted. The nights, when he lay sleepless, fighting an incipient craving, were longer and drearier. Thus it was that he had leisure to think of Kazia Whiting, though at some loss to explain why the reappearance of one whom in his receded youth he had treated badly should command so much of his interest.

Nor did he admit a design when his drives took him almost daily past the Todd hospital. Nevertheless the sight of that institution was enough to evoke a faint thrill of excitement not to be laid to its barrack-like architecture, followed by a more emphatic disappointment as the neighborhood was left behind. One afternoon Kazia, in company with another young woman, emerged from the grounds as he was passing and gave him a cool impersonal nod. He guessed that it was her recreation hour and marked the time. The quick leaping interest should have been a warning to him. Perhaps it was, for:

"I'm making a fool of myself," he growled. "What do I know of this woman?"

On the third day thereafter, at the same hour, he passed the hospital. This time Kazia appeared alone. She gave him again the cool impersonal nod and would have passed on. But he drew the horses up sharply and called: "Kazia!"

She paused, hesitated a moment, then went over to the curb.

"Will you drive with me for a while?"

"I ought to walk," she answered.

"Please, Kazia." It did not seem absurd to him that he pleaded.

She hesitated again, then—

"Yes," she said.

He would have alighted to help her to the seat, but she forestalled him.

"Don't get out." And she was beside him.

He touched the horses with his whip and they sprang forward.

"You aren't well," she said abruptly.

And he, ascribing to that fact her unexpected compliance, was at the moment almost glad of his disability.

"Is it obvious? I believe I'm not. In fact, my doctor has ordered me to get out and play—I find it very hard work. That's why—that's one reason why—I asked you. I needed company. The circumstance," he smiled, "ought to appeal to you professionally."

"Nurses are notoriously hard-hearted."

"Yes? Then I can't work on your sympathies. On the whole, I'd rather have it so. You'll have to admit it took courage to ask you to play with me, because—you'll admit again—you weren't exactly cordial the last time."

"What did you expect?"

"But I expected nothing," he retorted. "I didn't know you would be at Roman's. Why, I hadn't even heard of you for—I've been counting it up—14 years. That isn't gross flattery, is it? But, of course, you aren't the sort of woman that likes flattery. Are you?"

"Then you're not so sure, after all? But I do like it."

"I must remember that." He chuckled. "Playing becomes distinctly easier. Isn't it lucky I happened along by the hospital just when I did?"

"But I thought—" She almost smiled. "I thought it was a habit."

"So you've seen me? Now you mention it, I may as well confess that this isn't luck, but the result of a very clever plot. I've been driving past the hospital almost every day in the sneaking hope that just this would occur."

"You say, a sneaking hope—?"

"You see," he confided, "I'm easily frightened. How could I know that I'd find you so—so beautifully human?—Are you preparing to snub me for that?"

"I am considering it." The smile was unmistakable now. "But I won't, because today is one of the days when I can't help being beautifully human. I'm so healthy that sometimes I just have to take a vacation from myself."

"And I'm so unhealthy that, though I'd like to, I can't give Truitt the slip for even an hour. He's a persistent beggar—as you may have noticed the last few weeks."

They laughed.

It was a clear afternoon, beautiful with the mellow radiance of autumn sunshine. But the wind that swept sky and air clean was crisp and penetrating. To her, superbly healthy, it gave only a rare tinge of color that enhanced her charm, gave the last needed softening touch. His wasted body, despite the heavy overcoat he wore, could not resist the chill breath. But, though he knew he would probably pay later for the exposure, he would not by so much as a minute curtail the hour.

"I haven't had so pleasant—it's a puny word, but let that go—so pleasant a time in years," he declared.

"I see," she laughed, "you have taken me at my word."

"But I mean it," he protested. "I'd like you to believe that I mean it."

He became grave.

"Since that day at Roman's I've been thinking a good deal of what we said—about my having harmed you. If regrets—but there's nothing so useless. That sort of thing isn't easily forgiven, is it?"

"Oh, very easily."

"You are thinking that I give too much significance to our little affair. I do not—"

"No, I mean I have never blamed you. Of course, we were too young for it to have any lasting significance. And, if I remember aright, I invited it—and so put you in what must have seemed a very tragic quandary at the time." The most critical ear could have discerned nothing ungenuine in her rippling laugh.

Schoolboy a Good Deal More Thoughtful Than Most Youngsters We Ever Heard Of.

A popular member of a certain school board tells a good story of a certain schoolboy who enjoys the unique distinction of having attended one school for 11 years without being once absent or late. In evidence of this the youth is the proud owner of 11 medals. When the eleventh medal was conferred the boy's mother was asked whether her son ever had any illness.

"Oh, yes," she replied.

"Measles?"

"Yes."

"Whooping cough?"

"Yes."

"How is it, then, that he has been able to make so remarkable a record at school?"

"Well, he generally had 'em in his holidays," was the proud mother's interesting reply.

Escapes in Heat of Battle.

Reports indicate it sometimes takes a lot to kill the modern soldier, the New York World states. Sergeant Fougere of France received eight bullet wounds, a broken arm and other injuries, and although shot in the calf, thigh and ankle, escaped being captured by Germans and limped ten miles to his regiment. Another French soldier received six bullets and three bayonet wounds and is recovering. The French war office estimates only two men are killed out of every one hundred hit. The peneration is so clean one soldier did not know he had been hit for three hours, and another bullet went through two soldiers and lodged in a cavalryman's saddle.

Old Charon Must Explain.

His boat made fast after the last trip of the night, Charon, homeward bound, encountered a stranger in one of the ill-lighted streets along the water front.

"What's the idea?" asked the old sailor.

"Summons," the stranger replied, producing the papers. "The interstate commerce commission wants to know how you killed off all competition. You public-service corporations are in for a hard winter."

Heavy Cost of Bad Weather

It has been figured that a day's continued frost or snow in England results in the idleness of 1,000,000 workmen.

LIGHT BOOZE.
Do You Drink It?

A minister's wife had quite a tussle with coffee and her experience is interesting. She says:

"During the two years of my training as a nurse, while on night duty, I became addicted to coffee drinking. Between midnight and four in the morning, when the patients were asleep, there was little to do except make the rounds, and it was quite natural that I should want a hot cup of coffee about that time. I could keep awake better.

"After three of four years of coffee drinking, I became a nervous wreck and thought that I simply could not live without my coffee. All this time I was subject to frequent bilious attacks, sometimes so severe as to keep me in bed for several days.

"After being married, Husband begged me to leave off coffee for he feared that it had already hurt me almost beyond repair, so I resolved to make an effort to release myself from the hurtful habit.

"I began taking Postum, and for a few days felt the languid, tired feeling from the lack of the coffee drug, but I liked the taste of Postum, and that answered for the breakfast beverage all right.

"Finally I began to feel clearer-headed and had steadier nerves. After a year's use of Postum I now feel like a new woman—have not had any bilious attacks since I left off coffee."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

RESULTS ARE SURE

Country Certain to Adopt Progressive Principles.

Colonel Roosevelt Calls Attention to the National Platform of the Party on Labor—Much Has Been Accomplished.

Colonel Roosevelt in a recent address outlined anew the principles of the Progressive party as follows:

No amount of government activity will in any way atone for lack of individual efficiency and initiative in private life. But governmental activity is often necessary in order to give free play to individual efficiency, at the same time that wrongdoing is checked. In our national Progressive platform we summarized as follows what we hope to accomplish for labor. We pledged ourselves to work unceasingly in state and nation for:

"Effective legislation looking to the prevention of industrial accidents, occupational diseases, overwork, involuntary unemployment, and other injurious effects incident to modern industry;

"The fixing of minimum safety and health standards for the various occupations, and the exercise of the public authority of state and nation, including the federal control over interstate commerce and the taxing power, to maintain such standards;

"The prohibition of child labor;

"Minimum wage standards for working women, to provide a living scale in all industrial occupations;

"The prohibition of night work for women and the establishment of an eight-hour day for women and young persons;

"One day's rest in seven for all wage-workers;

"The eight-hour day in continuous twenty-four hour industries;

"The abolition of the convict labor system; substituting a system of prison production for governmental consumption only, and the application of prisoners' earnings to the support of their dependent families;

"Publicity as to wages, hours and conditions of labor, full reports upon industrial accidents and diseases, and the opening to public inspection of all tallies, weights, measures and check systems on labor products;

"Standards of compensation for death by industrial accident and injury and trade diseases which will transfer the burden of lost earnings from the families of working people to the industry, and thus to the community."

Bit by bit we are bettering the various measures to achieve these ends through hostile legislation. In the end we shall accomplish all we have thus outlined, and then we shall go on and accomplish much more along the same general lines.

The only safe course to follow, as regards the tariff, is that which the Progressives have advocated, to stand openly and frankly for a protective tariff, not as a matter of preference to any one industry, but as a matter of principle to be extended with fairness and justice to all industries. This tariff should not be constructed along the methods employed by the present tariff, nor in its predecessor, the Payne-Aldrich tariff, both of which in opposite directions were almost equally vicious. It should not be constructed as a matter of politics by bargain and sale among congressmen and among powerful special interests. —Theodore Roosevelt.

A Billion-Dollar Market.

Our opportunity to establish greatly expanded trade relations with the Latin-American countries to the south of us is conceded to be excellent, but it is an opportunity that requires active and intelligent effort for its development. Never before has there been such an inviting opening for the building up of business enterprises in that quarter on a permanent basis. For a time the competition that has won a great many of the prizes which we have felt belonged to us will be in a state of practical paralysis. After this convulsion has subsided and there has been time to emerge from the industrial demoralization which has already become so serious among our rivals, this competition will revive, but by that time we should have acquired a footing which to a great extent can be maintained.

Readiness Is Imperative.

There is nothing inconsistent between a national policy of prudent defense and a national policy of maintaining peace with all nations. The United States can and does refrain from making war, even under extreme provocation. But it cannot prevent war being made upon it whenever it may be in the interest of any nation to force such a war. The wise injunction of George Washington is emphasized by the war now going on. "In time of peace prepare for war."

No Nation Exempt From War.

Reliance upon the conviction that no enemy will ever invade and occupy any portion of the United States or its possessions is a dangerous rule. War can come in a night. If anything has been proved during the last few weeks, beyond any question or quibble, it is the fact that no nation can safely regard itself as exempt from war. It may be the most peaceable nation in the world, but its own good will is not supreme. Its enemies may decide for it—outside nations that had been its friends of yesterday.

IN STERLING LIVES A GIRL

Who Suffered As Many Girls Do—Tells How She Found Relief.

Sterling, Conn.—"I am a girl of 22 years and I used to faint away every month and was very weak. I was also bothered a lot with female weakness. I read your little book 'Wisdom for Women,' and I saw how others had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and decided to try it, and it has made me feel like a new girl and I am now relieved of all these troubles. I hope all young girls will get relief as I have. I never felt better in my life."—Miss BERTHA A. PELOQUIN, Box 116, Sterling, Conn.

Massena, N. Y.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I highly recommend it. If anyone wants to write to me I will gladly tell her about my case. I was certainly in a bad condition as my blood was all turning to water. I had pimples on my face and a bad color, and for five years I had been troubled with suppression. The doctors called it 'Anemia and Exhaustion,' and said I was all run down, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound brought me out all right."—Miss LAVISA MYRES, Box 74, Massena, N.Y.

Young Girls, Heed This Advice.

Girls who are troubled with painful or irregular periods, backache, headache, dragging-down sensations, fainting spells or indigestion, should immediately seek restoration to health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Both Valenciennes and Malines, two of the latest towns to come into prominence in the western theater of war, have now little association with the production of lace beyond giving their names to the famous varieties. At Valenciennes, indeed, the manufacture has been discontinued, but the place has an alternate fame as the birthplace of Froissart, the historian (nearly six centuries ago) and of Watteau, the artist (230 years ago).

SMALL WARS MEAN BIG POEMS

Greatest Battle Hymns Have Not Been Inspired by Titanic Struggles Like the Present One.

The greatest poems have been written about little wars. The Iliad was written around a siege carried on by a handful of barbarian chieftains against a city of the second class. The battle of Chevy Chase was a border skirmish following upon a cattle-stealing expedition. And Kipling's imperial muse is at her best when she sings of petty wars with colored tribesmen. Britain's far-flung battle line was far flung against Dervishers and Afrids; it was seldom brought into collision with field intrenchments and siege artillery. Little war, or else big wars in anticipation of retrospect, these are the rich soil for the poet.

A great war in the actual, the fate of an empire truly at stake, may make poets out of the common crowd, but subdues the poet to the level of the common crowd. There is a solemn tone about Kipling's latest verse which has its effect. Only it is not exhortation we wanted, but exultation; not an appeal, but a clarion call. When an entire nation is aflame the poet is apt to find his mission rather perfunctory.

ALMOST BALD WITH ECZEMA

R. F. D. No. 2, Johnson City, Tenn.—"Some time ago my head became covered with small sores which they said was eczema. They were red and inflamed and when I would comb my head they would break and run a yellowish matter. My hair was coming out by handfuls until I was getting almost bald. My hair was so dead and dry it seemed as if it would break off.

"I put on —— and —— and several other remedies without getting any help. I got a cake of Cuticura Soap and some Cuticura Ointment and used them. In a short time the pimples dried up and my hair stopped falling out and is thick and glossy. I am cured." (Signed) J. W. Fisher, Jan. 1, 1914.

"Przemysl."

"Przemysl" is one of the few really simple proper names that have secured notoriety in the Russian invasion of Galicia. It is pronounced "Pzhem-is-l," with the accent on the "pzhem." Just how easy this is one may appreciate by considering Przemyslany, in the first syllable of which the "r" is sounded, thus: "Przhe," with the Austro-Hungarian variation of "miscellany" following. In pronouncing "Przemysl" you should carefully hold a "p" between your teeth while pronouncing "ahem" (which is a soft, mushroom, dumdum variety of "shem") and just as you are about to eject it deftly insert the "p" in the outer hook of the "z;" thus: "Pzhem." Nothing can be simpler.

Approaching, but Not Close.

"When I left Havre on my way back to England," says Representative Gardner of Massachusetts, "600 French soldiers lined up on the dock and sang 'God save the King' in English. By the nine gods of war! as our own General Bingham would say, this incident, taken in connection with the Belgians stepping to the front chanting 'It's a Long Way to Tipperary,' seems to indicate the approach of the much-touted brotherhood of man."

Girl Made Victim of Hoax by Mischievous Friends Went Home in a Fury.

One day several of my girl friends called to see me. We started to make some candy when I discovered that we didn't have any chocolate in the house and said that I couldn't possibly make it without "a speck of chocolate."

Mary, one of the girls, said: "Why, what kind of chocolate is that—couldn't you use any other kind?"

One of the girls gave me a pinch and I said: "Oh, no, I couldn't use any other kind. It's a new kind. You telephone the grocery and order some, Mary, and we'll start the candy. Now be sure and order 'Aspecka.'"

"So we filed to the kitchen and left Mary to telephone. We sat in the kitchen holding our sides with suppressed laughter while she called up one store after another trying to get "Aspecka chocolate." She finally gave up in despair and then we told her. Needless to say, she went home in a fury, as mad as a wet hen. She barely spoke to us for weeks after that.—Chicago Tribune.

Strong Man's Weakness.

Speaking of great feats of strength Franklin H. Lane, secretary of the interior, recalled an incident that happened in a western state.

One afternoon an elderly woman visited the penitentiary, and on pausing before a certain cell was told that the inmate had been imprisoned for stealing a piano.

"I am very sorry to see you here," remarked the woman turning to the convict. "Is it true that you stole a piano?"

"Yes, ma'am," was the frank admission of the convict. Then he added: "I did it in a moment of weakness."

"In a moment of weakness!" gasped the elderly visitor. "Mercy me! I presume that had you your usual strength you would have walked away with the whole house!"

Found He Was Mistaken.

A man from the country, in charity one will say from the country, although he may have been a Bostonese, entered a New York restaurant the other evening, and while waiting to be served, gave his attention to an electric fan revolving just above his head. It was a high pressure fan, noiseless, and almost, if not quite, invisible because of its rapid motion. The stranger gazed at it for some considerable time and was heard to mutter: "I don't believe there is anything there at all." With that he put up his hand to confirm his belief. Immediately there was a yell that almost threw the place into a panic. The man sprang into the air, rushed out of the door and, as he disappeared, was heard to say: "I monkeyed with the buzz-saw, all right."

Mothers Tell of Mother's Friend

Experience is or should be our best teacher. Women who have obeyed the highest and noblest of all sacrifices, the struggle for the life of others, should have a better idea of helpful influence than those who theorize from observation.

At any rate when a prospective grandmother urges her daughter to do as she did—to use "Mother's Friend," there is reason to believe it the right advice.

"Mother's Friend" is an external application for expectant mothers. Its purpose is to furnish pliancy to the muscles, to take away the strain on the cords and ligaments, to relieve the tension of nerves and tendons so apt to provoke or aggravate nausea, morning sickness, twitchings of the limbs and so on.

Although, in the nature of things, a woman would use "Mother's Friend" but but rarely, yet so effective has it been found that this splendid remedy is on sale in most drug stores throughout the United States. It has been prepared by Bradfield Regulator Co., 406 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., and advertised by us for over forty years. This is a fine record for such a special remedy and the grateful letters received to-day are just as appreciative as were those of years ago notwithstanding that methods are supposed to have greatly advanced. Ask at the drug store for a bottle of "Mother's Friend." It is worth while.

BIDS WANTED.

Notice is hereby given that at a regular meeting of the Commissioners Court of Chilton county, Alabama, held at Clanton, Alabama, on the 14th day of September, 1914, a resolution was adopted providing for building or constructing a public highway from Clanton to the line of Chilton and Shelby counties near South Calera, by way of Thorsby and Jemison in Chilton county, along or near the line of the present highway between said points.

Said Road to be built by grading, chirting or graveling, the work to be done by contract, and said contract to be let to the lowest bidder under seal bids to be deposited with the Judge of Probate on or before the 26th day of October, 1914.

Said bid shall set forth the number of miles in length, and the kind of road whether graded, chirted or graveled, and the charge for each kind. Said bids shall be made upon plans or specifications to be provided by J. B. Converse, civil engineer, of Selma, Ala.

The payment for the building of said highway to be made by the county, by issuing county warrants payable in annual installments from one to three years; all persons offering to bid upon said contract for the building of said road or any section or number of miles of same, may deposit their bids in sealed envelopes marked bids for county road work, and addressed to Commissioners court on or before 12 o'clock the 26th day of October, 1914, at which time said bids will be passed upon by the Court; the Court reserving the right to reject any and all bids. Contractors bidding will be required, as evidence of good faith in making bids, to deposit with said bid a certified check for $750.00, or to deposit same with the Judge of Probate on or before said bids are opened and passed upon by the Court.

E. B. DEASON, Judge of Probate.

Business Man Praises Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy

Successful Merchant After Investigation Found a Remedy That Restored His Health.

"This is Thanksgiving day in the state of Pennsylvania, and I want to devote a part of it in writing a letter to you. On the 26th day of November, '10, I was stricken with heart trouble. My family physician called it Angina Pectoris. I had from one to five attacks in 24 hours, in the latter part of December, 1910. I wrote to the Miles Medical Co., for information concerning my case, and in reply I received a very kind and instructive letter, which I handed to my family doctor, and he told me to use your Remedies in connection with the medicine he gave me, so I did. I used five bottles of Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy and seven bottles of Dr. Miles' Nervine. I was confined to the house for about four months. The action of my heart is now, and has been normal for the last six months. I can truly recommend Dr. Miles' Nervine and Heart Remedy to do what they are intended for, if used according to directions. I thank you kindly for your advice in answer to my monthly reports. I am now sixty-seven years of age, have been in the mercantile business for thirty-five years and lived retired for the last thirteen years." A. B. HOLLINGER, Lincoln, Penna.

Editor Union-Banner:—Please give me a short space in this week's paper.

Times are looking rather gloomy now for the farmer who is in debt; but we should not give up. Let us try again and, possibly we can bring about better times some way.

I am glad Mr. Herrod has came out and explained himself to the people as he has.

Now, boys, let's not have the road warrants. Let's come together and stop it. We can do it if we will stand together and not submit to having such stuff run gver us. It seems that the time has come that we cannot live without standing together. If we would tell them what we would do for them, and then do what we say, we would have better times. We farmers have to bear the burden of all of it. Farmers can hardly pay the taxes that are demanded now and liye. We should stand together and demand better things if it causes blood to be shed. Come boys, in November, and lets see if we can't make some shanges in the management of affairs.

WAR

And Its Effect on Business

As a direct consequence of the war in Europe, Southern farmers and business men have found it expedient to co-operate, and call on the federal government, to safeguard the interests of the South.

Patriotic business men have pulled shoulder to shoulder with the cotton growing farmer. Representatives in Congress, and high government officials, have signified a willingness to do all in their power to bring about stable conditions.

There is now every indication that our people have risen to the occasion and that they have the situation well in hand.

For which the L. & N. rejoices.

The L. & N. hopes the lesson will not be lost on the people. The L. & N. has suffered from the loss of revenue, due to the war. But we have continued to operate trains and supply the same high class service as was supplied in times of prosperity.

The people found it necessary to band together, to call for federal aid, for the common good. No individual firm or corporation objects.

In times like these the demagogue and detractor are silent. They are impotent. They do not rise to the emergency.

It is the brains of the South, the business ability, the conservatism, the true patriotism, that is exerting itself.

The L. & N. knows that the memory of the people is short. But we indulge the hope that the next time the L. & N. is attacked, is forced to appeal to the courts for protection, and to the people for fair treatment, that the people will not forget.

Our service is unexcelled. Our disposition is to co-operate. Our effort is for mutual prosperity.

THE UNION-BANNER

VOL. 3 THE UNION 11th Year CLANTON, ALBAMA, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 15 1914 THE BANNER 21st Year NO. 27

THE MOST PEACEFUL NATION IN THE WORLD

Is asked to pay a War Tax of $100,000,000 by Free-Traders.

The most peaceful nation in the world is to be asked to pay a war-tax of a hundred million dollars. The United States is not at war, and is not in reality a sufferer from the European war.

The necessity for this tax is not created wholly by the war in Europe, or even mainly by the war.

The deficit in the income of the United States Government is due partly to the reduction in the amount of imports into this country, but also largely to a reduction of the tax upon imports into this country.

The reduction in the amount of the imports the party in power at Washington is not responsible for, but the reduction in the amount of the tax on imports the party in power at Washington is responsible for.

The reduction in the amount of foreign imports is not a disadvantage. On the contrary, it is in many respects a distinct benefit to our country. The reduction in the amount of income from these imports is obviously a disadvantage, and a distinct disadvantage at this time.

It would appear therefore, that the party in power at Washington was not responsible for such benefits as there are in this present situation, but was and is responsible for the disadvantages of the situation.

Why cannot the Democratic party frankly confess that its Free-Trade theories are a mistake and are now proving to be a mistake, and have always proved to be a mistake?

Why cannot the Democratic party, which has many claims upon popular confidence, abandon the visionary and impractical policies which will, if persisted in, forever deny its popular confidence and suppport?

War or no war, the Democratic party's tariff policies were proving failures.

Before war was declared in Europe, or even contemplated, the balance of trade had shown immensely against this country. Our export balance had decreased over a quarter of a million dollars in seven months.

Gold was being exported in quantity. The income tax had proved sufficient to compensate for the reduction in the tariff revenues.

Foreign goods are coming into our country, perhaps not in sufficient quantities to raise an adequate governmental revenue under the reduced rate of taxation, but certainly in snsficient quantities to deprive our American laborers of employment.

American men out of employment were parading the streets.

American men in bankruptcy were putting up their shutters.

American factories were closing and discharging their workmen, and, instead of America shipping more goods abroad than before the reduction of the tariff, America was importing more and shipping less, with the balance of trade going more and more to our disadvantage.

Then comes the European war and, through no effort or merit of our own, European goods are withheld from our markets, and our home markets are again open to our home manufacturers.

Another consequence of this European war is the opening of foreign markets to our products.

Markets which were formerly supplied with goods from England and France and Germany and Austria will not be supplied from those nations, and must be supplied with goods from the United States.

The advantage of markets is clear and conclusive. Markets are merely the demand for our products. Without the demands there cannot be a sustained supply, and with enlarging demands there must ever be enlarging supply, increasing production, increasing employment and increasing prosperity.

We should have kept our home markets with legitimate protection.

We could have gotten enlarged foreign markets with judicious reciprocity.

We did neither.

But what we failed to do for ourselves the war will do for us.

Yet, to take full advantage of the opportunities which the European war offers to this neutral nation, those chances should be made as permanent as possible by intelligent legislation and diplomatic negotiation.

If home markets are desirable and advantageous, as they obviously are, let us retain them for American producers by a tariff admittedly for protection.

If foreign markets are advisable and advantageous, as they clearly and surely are, let us retuin them and enlarge them for our American manufacturers by reciprocity treaties.

A tariff for revenue only has proven to be a tariff for insufficient revenue only.

A tariff for judicious protection would prove a tariff for sufficient revenue as well.

If a frank policy of judicious protection intelligently coupled with reciprocity were adopted by the Democratic party, the business men of America could proceed confidently and competently to take advantage of their present unexampled opportunities.

They would know that those opportunities and advantages would not be temporary but permanent.

They could build factories, not to operate for the period of a war lasting only a few months, but for periods of years, guaranteed by the fostering care of a wise and farseeing government.

There would then be no need for continuel levies of new taxes.

There would then be no occasion for parades of unemployed or business proceedings into bankruptcy.

There would then be no need for foreign wars, or such regretable calamaties to others, for us to glean a prosperity which should naturally be our due.

With our home markets secured through legitimate protection and foreign markets obtained through intelligent reciprocity our production would be immense and our prosperity correspondingly great.

Then, with a merchant marine to carry our products to all parts of the world and a mighty navy to protect our ships and our shores, America could be in the dominent position which the enterprise and intelligence of its people, is not of its Government, entitle it to hold.

Why cannot the Democratic party abandon its theories which have proved fatal?

Why can it not cease forever taxing our producers, forever restricting, restraining and retarding our production? Why can it not embark upon a new and enlightened policy of intelligently encouraging our production, of adequately transporting our production and of constantly enlarging and retaining the markets for our production at home and abroad?

—American Economist.

Please allow me space to urge that all the farmers come together at Clanton on the 17th of this month and ask the Commissioners to divide our road tax and apportion it correctly among the several districts. We want all the Commissioners to meet us at the court house on that day and hear what we want them to do. It seems that such a body of gentlemen would not mind to come together and hear the wishes of the people set forth.

Let everybody come and ask them to do this, and if they wont do this, let's ask them to come down, and we will try to put in some who will hear and listen to the voice of the people on some things. Everybody come and let's try them once more.

Death of Mrs. Sallie Dunlap

Mrs. Sallie Dunlap, mother of Mr. W.D. Dunlap of near Highland, died on the morning of the 22nd inst. She had been ill for some time, and somewhat feeble but her condition was not suspected to be at all dangerous.

On the 20th she was rendered speechless and helpless. She remained conscious but helpless and speechless, and a few hours before the end came she fell into a deep sleep, and passed away peacefully.

The deceased lady was born and reared in Mississippi, but had lived in this county for more than fifty years. At her death she was in her seventy-sixth year. For a long time she had been a devoted member of the Baptist church, and was a lady of high moral worth, and enjoyed the respect and confidence of many friends, who will mourn her untimely death. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. M. J. Parrish at Highland.

SOME HINTS TO THE VOTERS OF CHILTON

Editor Union-Banner:—Please allow me a small space in your paper to say a few words to the voters of Chilton county. I have had the pleasure of attending several speakings during the campaign. I never saw as much interest shown in a campaign before since I have been old enough to take any interest in politics. This makes me believe that the people are tired of Democratic rule. It seems that the Democrats have no issue in this campaign; they have tried to make Judge Reynolds the issue. I think when a party tries to make some private citizen an issue in a political campaign, they are getting to low ebb. Why don't the Democrats meet the issue as it confronts the voters of this county? The Chairman of the Progressive Campaign committee has asked the Democrats to meet them in joint discussions over the county to discuss the issue now before the people. I would like to hear a Democrat make a speech and detend the present administration of the county, state and nation. If the Democrats believe they should be elected, why don't they go before the people and tell them why they should be elected. It looks like they could point to something they have done in the past and something they want to do in the future. I don't see how a Democrat can have the audacity to ask the voters to support him under the present administration. Last spring when the Democratic Executive committee met to arrange for the primary, they let the bars down asking all qualified voters who would support the ticket in November, to vote in the primary. What happend? Mr. Pinckard who is Chairman of the Democratic Executive committee of this county got a message from Mr. Goodwin, who was Chairman of the Democratic state Executive committee, telling him that he must call the committee back together and put up the bars. Referring him to the law, it stated that if any one voted in the Primary who did not support the Democratic ticket in November, from constable to president, would be prosecuted. And what did Mr. Pinckard do? Did he not call the committee back together and put up the bars?

The Democratic organ of Chilton county, the Clanton Press said that the great Roosevelt of Chilton (L. H. Reynolds) was the boss of the Progressive party. What side does the bossism and ring rule come on? If I were in that gang I would hang my head in shame. Letting the corporation and railroad lawyers say who shall and who shall not vote in a free county like this in the great state of Alabama. What do you think of this? Is that bossism? Some of the candidates who helped do this will put his arm around your neck, with tears in his eyes, begging you to support him. Last April they did not want any Progressive or Republican votes, but now you look so good to them that they want your support. In their primary they said you shall not help; now we say we will not.

Before closing my letter I cannot help but say that I believe we nominated as good men for the office as we have in Chilton county; men whom I believe will do the wishes of the people. Mr. Harris goes before the voters of this county with the strongest recommendation of any man who was ever in the race for a county office. In the primary of last April Mr. Harris received every vote cast in his home Beat, which was 110. A Beat which speaks louder than words can express. Mr Waldrup has been weighed in the balance and found sufficient. R. J. William is a conservative man, always found fighting for the cause of the common people and his party. W. E. Thomas will make Chilton county a good and efficient Representative. I hope to see the Progressive ticket elected by the largest majority that any ticket has ever been elected in the county.

I believe that if Kilgore, Goodgame, Pounds and Riggins will just keep fighting the battle for the Democrats, we will have one thousand in the majority.

I notice that Mr. Jones, the Democratic nominee for sheriff, is giving out his cards, asking for your support, but doesn't say what ticket he is on. Last spring before the Democratic primary, his cards read, "B. E. Jones, candidate for Sheriff, subject to action of the Democratic primary." Beware, voters and don't be fooled.

In conclusion, I wish to ask all the Progressive voters to fight on: the victory is ours.

I want the colors of the Progressive party to wall in old Chilton as never before.

It there's anything I can do, call on me at your service.

Respectfully,

J. L. Gore.

Political Conditions in Beat 16

Editor Union-Banner:—Please allow me space to say a few words in your paper about some of the happenings of Beat 16 lately.

Behold, the great guiding star of tne Democrats made his appearance in this section a short while ago. As in times long ago when the star by night and the cloud by day, led the wise men to Bethlehem to see the new born king, he is attempting to lead the people into something or other, but it is hard to tell what it is, unless it is to voting the Democratic ticket.

When he first appeared in the community he said he was going to discuss the subject of woman suffrage. And he also said that he was going to have a joint discussion with Judge Reynolds, (in order to get a crowd to come out and hear him.)

At the beginning of his address he stated that he was a Socialist. From there he went to many various kinds of discussions and criticisms of persons, principles and parties. It was soon evident that his audience was not much in sympathy with what he said when someone stole out into the darkness and set aloud the cry that somebody's team had broken loose. In an instant the great Socialist-Democratic star was left with only two or three listeners.

But before he sat down he said he was going to vote for the Democratic nominee for Sheriff, thereby making it plain, as he has in other places, that he is stumping the county for Mr. Jones. We like Mr. Jones all right as a man, but when it comes to politics, he is on the opposite side of the fence from

STATE MEETING OF FARMERS PLANNED

Ford Issues a Call—Many Present Petition for Extra Session.

Montgomery, October 10.—O. P. Ford, president of the State Farmers' Union sent sut a call for a general mass meeting of the people of Alabama interested in the cotton situation. The situation in Alabama will be discussed by members of the conference, and a petition will probably be presented to the Governor for an extra session of the legislature to consider relief measures.

Beat 16.

We are amused at the way this great Socialist is leading the Democrats in this county. That party must have gotten somewhat low in its own estimation to allow such leaders to go out and wage its fight. But let them have it. Every step they make is bringing them nearer to their fateful destiny. It has come to the place that not only the official acts of the Democratic administration are detrimental to their party, but the very efforts of their leaders are doing them harm.

He paid the greatest tribute to Judge Reynolds, by saying that he and Roosevelt were the rottenest politicians in the country. I have thought for some time that Judge Reynolds was the greatest man in the county, and if he can be compared with Roosevelt, we shall have still more evidence for our belief.

I wish to warn everyone to be careful of the many doctrines and so-called issues that are being scattered over the county by this infernal mixture of democracy and socialism. Let us not be led astray by any of it. We know what is right, and who will do to depend upon; so let's sit steady in our boat, and keep our eyes fixed upon yonder shore, where we can land free from the oppression of this onesided affair called Democratic government.

I think we can salely say that Beat 16 will support the Progressive ticket straight, with the possible exception of less than half a dozen votes.

With best wishes to the Union-Banner and its many rerders, I am for Reynolds and Roosevelt first, last and all the time.

RECEIPTS FROM SALE OF LIQUOR

Licenses in Eight Counties Yield $2,021,247.04—Jefferson Gives State $929,411.11.

STATE CAPITAL NEWS ITEMS

Doings of the Various Departments of the Commonwealth Given for Our Readers.

—Montgomery.

Receipts from the sale of liquor licenses in eight counties of Alabama since the present local option laws became effective until September 1, last, were $2,021,247.04, according to a statement prepared by Examiner of Public Accounts J. T. Gorman. These receipts accrued from the sale of licenses in Colbert, Cullman, Jefferson, Mobile, Montgomery, Pike, Russell and Madison counties, and have been apportioned among the State, and the counties and cities in which liquor has been sold.

Examiner Gorman's statement shows that Jefferson county yielded the largest returns from the sale of liquor licenses, the round sum of $929,422.36 having been collected in that county. Mobile county comes second in the list, with $438,119.80, and Montgomery third, with $316,140 collected.

In the apportionment of the fund since 1911, the state has received $297,123.8. The counties have received $663,455.85. In addition to these amounts, $19,130 has been paid out in commissions to probate judges and $89,612.58 in salaries to excise commissioners.

Thomas Succeeds Walker.

Judge E. Perry Thomas of Eufaula was appointed by the governor as Judge Richard W. Walker's successor on the court of appeals. Judge Thomas has been on the court court of appeals since 1912, but in the April primary was defeated for renomination by J. B. Brown of Cullman, who will probably succeed Judge Thomas following the November election.

The vacancy on the court of appeals, caused by the promotion of Judge Walker to the office of United States circuit judge, was sought by three applicants in addition to Judge Thomas, Judge Edward deGraffenreid of the supreme court, whose term will expire in January, being the closest contestant in the race. Other applicants were Judge J. H. Ballentine of Huntsville, judge of the Madison law and equity court, and Judge W. H. Taylor of Uniontown, formerly a chancellor of his district.

Judge Thomas has been a conspicuous figure in the political and civil life of Alabama for years. He has been engaged in the practice of law since 1893, was mayor of Clayton from 1899 to 1902, and was a member of the state senate from 1902 until 1910. He made a race for lieutenant governor on the ticket on which the present governor was elected. Judge Thomas' appointment is expected to give general satisfaction among the lawyers of the state. His endorsement for the office two years ago was signed by the leading members of the bar of the state, and a similar demand was made for his appointment in the present instance.

Says "Squatters" Destructive.

The annual report of J. W. Martin, commissioner of state lands, submitted to the state printer, states that less than 100 acres of state lands contain marketable timber owing to the rapacity of squatters and others who have made their homes on these properties.

Existing laws declare the occupant of 20 years standing on state property the owner of the property has reduced the state properties more than one-half, according to the report.

According to the report the law states specificially that grand juries shall be charged to investigate violations of the trespass law. Mr. Martin charges that no judge, to his knowledge, has ever included any advice of this nature in his charge to this body and that as a consequence the state lands are overrun with unworthy tenants who dispose of the timber and market the available minerals.

Not in Favor Special Session.

Governor O'Neal has been urged by a large number of business men to call a special session of the legislature in order that legislation forcing the uniform reduction of cotton acreage may be adopted. The governor has replied to the petition of these citizens that the legislative body are so limited in this respect that the expense of a special session is hardly justifiable. This matter, he stated, would be brought to the attention of the legislative body at the regular January session.

Brassell Appointed Solicitor.

L. H. Brassell of Andalusia was appointed solicitor of the Twelfth Judicial circuit to succeed the late R. H. Parks. Governor O'Neal, in appointing Mr. Brassell, stated that he knew of no man better qualified for the position. Mr. Brassell was highly endorsed for the position.

Crenshaw Succeeds Brassell.

Allan Crenshaw of Andalusia was appointed successor to L. H. Brassell as solicitor of the city court of law and equtiy of Andalusia.

To Promote School Legislation.

With a view to collecting data to be used in the promotion of advanced school legislation in Alabama at the coming sesion of the legislature, Superintendent of Education William F. Feagin has addressed a letter to the various county superintendents asking them to lend their best efforts toward filing their annual reports as soon as possible. By sending in the reports promptly the department of education will be enabled to issue its annual report earlier than usual this year, and will thereby be able to place fresh material in the hands of the lawmakers, according to a circular letter sent out by Superintendent Feagin.

That a determined fight for the passage of new laws that will better educational conditions in this state will be waged at the next session of the legislature is indicated by the letter sent out.

Two important measures will have the active support of the department during the next session. One of these will be a measure providing for local taxation for school purposes while the other measure will provide for compulsory education under certain conditions. These will be the two most important measures urged, but there will be much other legislation which it is believed will improve conditions.

Reduced Acreage Urged.

Capt. R. F. Kolb, state commissioner of agriculture, who returned from Washington, where he attended the Southern Food Congress, stated emphatically that the plans of forcing cotton upon the market in payment of debts will further demoralize the market in this commodity and that the only solution of the problem is the reduction, compulsory if necessary, of the cotton acreage in Alabama for 1915.

He states that the probable loss to Alabama alone in forced selling of cotton at from $15 to $25 below the actual price of production amounts to more than $20,000,000 per annum.

Captain Kolb could offer no plan of immediate relief. He stated that the congress which he attended had drafted resolutions encouraging the calling of special sessions of the legislatures and the enactment of laws compelling the reduction of cotton acreages throughout the south that even if this were done the existing conditions would remain the same.

Clarke County Books O. K.

An examination of the books and records of Clarke county officials, conducted by Examiner of Public Accounts J. T. Gorman, shows the following officials indebted to the county and state through technical errors to the following amounts:

C. A. Coater, sheriff, $185.82; . B. Doyle, former tax assessor, $80.80; W. M. Mobley, former tax commissioner, $266.26.

The examination disclosed the fact that H. C. Hawkins, the present collector, had drawn $1319 by error and that he has already returned upwards of $775 of the amount to the treasury.

Examination showed that the following amounts had been paid into the treasury upon discovery of error:

Clayton Fosine, probate judge, $5; Connie Garrett, clerk of court, $160.20; C. A. Coater, sheriff, $44.80; H. C. Howmins, tax commissioner, $72.85; T. L. Head, superintendent of education, $15.10. The books show further that former Tax Assessor J. B. Doyle owes the state $82.52.

The books of W. M. Mobley, G. G. Warren and J. G. Cunningham, ex-Tax Assessors, and J. B. Malone, treasurer of the school fund, were found correct. All of the errors are purely technical.

Make Bold Escape.

Two negro convicts from Jefferson county picked the locks which secured their handcuffs and jumped through the open windows of a passenger train a short distance below Clanton, Ala. The train was stopped, but the men made their escape.

The negroes were Archie Reese, sentenced to serve 20 years for murder in the first degree, and Will Brown, sentenced to serve 13 years for robbery.

Officials at the convict department were displaying a small pin, with which the negroes picked their locks. Mr. Austin said he had no intimation that there was about to be an escape until he heard a commotion and turned and saw the negroes' feet disappearing through the windows. He said the train was running about 10 miles an an hour. He was en route to the State penitentiary from Birmingham.

Sponsors and Maids.

Commander John H. Wallace, Jr., of the Fourth Brigade, U. S. C. V., dispatched a letter of John L. Moulton, commander of the Alabama Division of the Sons of Veterans, informing him that the following ladies had been appointed by him to represent the brigade at the annual reunion at Mobile, October 24: Miss Elizabeth Cooper, Huntsville, sponsor; Miss Georgia Lowry and Miss Elizabeth Mowry, both of Huntsville, maids of honor; Mrs. Benton M. Hall, of Huntsville, matron of honor.

Receipts Are Compared.

Receipts of the state convict department for the year ending October 1 were $193,692.15, an increase of $21,157.69 over the previous year. Hartwell Douglass, president of the convict bureau, is preparing his annual report to present to the governor. Receipts of the state pure food and drug department, for the year, were $22,171.03, a decrease of $2,835.60 over the previous year. C. H. Billingsley, head of the department, attributed the loss to the ruling of the attorney general.

ANTWERP TAKEN BY THE GERMANS

Last and Strongest Citadel of Belgium Falls Before the Rain of Shell of the Germans.

HOPE OF ALLIES BLASTED

London.—Antwerp, the last and strongest citadel of Belgium, has fallen before the rain of shells of the Germans.

The civilian population in a large part has fled, the seat of the Belgian government has been moved to Ostend and the Germans are in occupation.

Because of the chaotic conditions during the past few days in the beleagured city and the interruption of telegraphic communication, there has been much delay in the transmission of news from Antwerp to England. Nevertheless, England has been expecting and discounting the fall of the Belgian position and newspapers are speculating on what stragetic use the Germans will make of it now that it is in their hands.

The battle line in France is now so long — forming as it does a rough curve of 350 miles, from Lorraine to the Belgian frontier—that the battle of the Aisne and the operations before Antwerp have become so closely knit as to be from the military piont of view, inseparable.

The allies' hope to deliver a crushing blow against the German army in France before the occupation of Antwerp by the enemy is now, of course, a thing of the past. The German right wing under General Von Kluck, apparently is still intact, and the official communication given out in Paris recorded no change in the situation, merely emphasizing that there was sharp fighting in the region of Roye, nearly 100 miles south of the northern extremity of the fighting line, where opposing bodies of cavalry were clashing almost within sight of the North Sea.

The dispatches attempting to analyze the German plan of compaign with Antwerp in their hands, declare that the German purpose is to sweep over northern France with the object of taking possession of the channel ports, and thus bring the warfare nearer England. It is said that German newspapers are predicting the use of this northern Belgian position as a base for operations against England.

Of one thing there is no doubt—Antwerp suffered terribly from the bombardment and losses among the civilian population have been heavy. The city was crowded, not only with its normal population of more than 300,000 persons, but with other thousands who had sought refuge there on account of the German invasion. All stories coincide in relating the terrible suffering and mental torture of these unfortunates struggling to leave the danger zone. Many are said to have been marooned by the destruction of a pontoon bridge over the River Scheidt. While the vast bulk of refugees are burdening Holland, thousands later will come to England, where other thousands are already being cared for.

Just how much damage has been done to Antwerp, particularly to edifices of historic interest, it will take some time to determine. Some refugees say that the Cathedral of Notre Dame has been badly damaged, while others say this is not so.

All reports agree that the Germans entered the city by the west suburb of Berchem.

With Antwerp taken the Germans will now be able to detach the considerable force used during the siege of the city and transfer these men to their right wing, near the French-Belgian frontier, which has been sorely pressed.

The morale of the fall of Antwerp is not minimized in England. The city was called by Napoleon "a pistol pointing at the heart of England." The seaport long has been one of the greatest of Europe.

It is estimated that there are no fewer than 400,000 Germans in Belgium today.

There was nothing new in the eastern arena of the war. Reports that the Austrian city of Przemysl is on fire lacks confirmation. The Austrians insist that the Russians before this position are being repulsed.

Bombs Dropped on Paris.

Paris.—A score of bombs, launched on different quarters of Paris by two German aviators, killed three civilians and injured 14 others. The property damage was small.

PAPAL STATE SECRETARY DEAD

Cardinal Domonic Ferrata Passes Away.

Rome.—Cardinal Dominic Ferrata, papal secretary of state, is dead. The death of the cardinal, although not unexpected, greatly affected the pontiff. His comment was: "God's will be done but it takes from me a dear friend and my right hand." The secretary of state passed away, surrounded by faithful friends. His last remark was, "I am so tired. I go to join my Savior."

NEWS ITEMS OF ALABAMA

Alabama conference will meet at Andalusia December 2.

Perry county has 1404 voters and of these 39 are negroes.

New town of Allentown has been started near Tuscumbia.

At Tuscumbia 1000 bales have been ginned and only 168 sold.

More cotton has been ginned in Alabama this year than was ginned last, to the same date.

The discovery of America was celebrated throughout the state October 12 by observation of "Columbus Day" as a state holiday and with honors to Christopher Columbus.

Fire in Huntsville destroyed the Tulane hotel, three livery barns and the property in the block at the northwest corner of Holmes and Washington streets, causing a loss estimated at $24,000.

A dispatch from Washington says: Bitter personalities were exchanged in the house between Representative Mann, minority leader, and Representative Heflin of Alabama during the discussion of a woman suffrage amendment offered by Mr. Mann to the Philippine independence bill.

Headquarters committee of the Alabama Anti-Saloon league will meet in Birmingham October 17, to consider and map out plans for the prohibition legislative campaign. League leaders say that no program for the coming session of the Alabama legislature will not be announced until after this meeting of the committee.

The county commissioners of Madison county have issued a call for a special election to be held during the next few weeks for the purpose of allowing the voters of Madison county to vote on a proposed bond issue of $70,000 of 5 per cent. bonds. If the bonds are authorized they will be sold to provide funds to pay debt held against new court house.

Persons interested in the Alabama Division of the Southern Cotton Growers' Association have started a statewide campaign with the intention of presenting to the people the necessity of an extra session of the legislature and the adoption of laws prohibiting the growing of cotton next year and levying a tax on all cotton sold for a certain period. W. H. Seymour of Montgomery, president of the division, is one of the leaders of the movement. O. P. Ford, president of the Alabama Farmers Union, has called a state convention in Montgomery October 21, for the consideration of methods for the relief of the farmer. Meetings were held and resolutions adopted by citizens of Dadeville, Jasper and several other towns and cities, asking the governor to call the legislature together in extraordinary session.

County apportionment of public school funds for the present scolastic year was made by Superintendent of Education William F. Feagin. The amount available for all educational purposes is $2,263,515.48, which will be spent on the 774,976 children of school age in Alabama on a per capita basis fo $2.75. The amount to be spent for educational purposes during the present year is $68,673.04 in excess of the amount spent last year, but represents a per capita decrease of 9 cents over last year, due to the increase of 47,679 in the number of children of school age in Alabama. In the county apportionment, Jefferson heads the list with $220,475.75. Montgomery county will receive $83,281, and Mobile $70,790.50.

Of the $20,000,000 recently appropriated by Congress for rivers and harbors, Alabama will receive approximately $915,500, according to the allotment made by the engineers of the war department and announced officially by Secretary Garrison. Of this $750,000 is specified for "Black Warrior, Warrior and Tombigbee rivers." The eight items for Alabama as apportioned by the engineers are as follows: Choctawachee river, Florida and Alabama, $20,000; Escambia and Conecuh rivers, Florida and Alabama, $5000; Mobile harbor, $62,500; Mobile bar, $10,000; Alabama river, including Coosa river up to Wetumpka, $50,000; Black Warrior, Warrior and Tombigbee rivers, Alabama and Tombigbee river, Alabama and Mississippi, $750,000; mouth to Demopolis, $9000; Demopolis, Ala., to Walker's Bridge, Miss, $9000.

Colbert county Confederate pensions amount to $2429.

People from Montgomery and other cities of Alabama were present at the dedication of the public school at Bolling, a town recently established 50 miles south of Montgomery, on the Louisville & Nashville railroad. The school opened with a faculty of six teachers, including the principal and her assistants.

Judge W. I. Grubb, of the federal court ,will go to Huntsville October 26 to hold the fall term of court in that city. The grand jury for all the district held its sessions in Birmingham a short time ago.

CORRESPONDENT WITH GERMAN ARMY DESCRIBES CONFLICT ON THE AISNE

By RAYMOND E. SWING.
Correspondent of Chicago Daily News.

With Right Wing of the German Army in France.—Five miles ahead are the trenches, 200 yards apart, where the British and German troops are taking their heroic parts in this bloodiest and hardest fought battle of modern times. Occasional explosions from big guns can be plainly heard.

I have just returned from an automobile ride which brought me near enough to the firing line to see shells exploding on the horizon. First there would be a great flash lighting up the evening sky, followed by a thunderous discharge. I was not allowed to drive nearer.

British Behind Rock Defenses.

The positions on both sides are excellent. The British troops at this point are mainly behind rock defenses, but the Germans have worked their way so close up that accurate fire on both sides means death to the soldier who carelessly protrudes his head. One of the diversions of the Germans is to put a cap on a rifle, hoist it above the trenches and draw the immediate and unerring fire of the opponents.

The soldiers in the trenches for days and nights have had a terrible experience. Recently they were lying in water under the exploding shrapnel and receiving food only at night, when black bread, wine and sometimes soup were passed to them under cover of the darkness. On the German side for many days the wounded lay in the trenches until night before they could be removed.

Now the weather has improved and conditions are better. About three miles behind the trenches artillery is stationed, dropping shells and shrapnel upon the trenches and the gun positions of the opponents.

Flashlights Reveal Foe.

My impression is that such fighting can continue unremittingly and that here at least the Germans will perhaps only attempt to hold the lines while some other portion of the German army breaks through, either on the far right wing or at Verdun. The British troops made several attempts at night charges two nights ago. They left their trenches and advanced on the German positions, but the movement was suddenly revealed by a German flashlight, machine guns were quickly brought into position and an entire regiment of Englishmen was mowed down by the deadly fire.

For two days I have been a guest of the general commanding this corps, who has his quarters in a beautiful French chateau. It is ideally situated in large grounds, richly provided with game, which the staff officers have hunted these last few days during a slight pause in the fighting at the front. Before the castle are artificial lakes, the grounds giving the impression of a small Versailles.

Interested in U. S. Attitude.

I was welcomed warmly by the officers, all of whom were interested in learning the attitude of the United States. The impression prevailed among them that the American government had assumed a protectorate over German interests in China.

We dined together in the great salon, the walls of which were hung profusely with valuable oil paintings. The menu was none too diverse, but it was plentiful, with wines in abundance. I sat beside the city commandant, who told me of the situation in the city.

The castle itself is filled with costly treasures. There is an especially beautiful coin collection and there are also old engravings of priceless value.

The chateau was crowded with officers. I had lodgings in the library, sleeping on a mattress on the floor before a cheerful fireplace in a room the antique furniture of which would make any connoisseur envious.

In the front hall of the chateau is a telephone switchboard, where two soldiers sit with receivers at their ears, making notes of reports from the firing line.

Outside is a scene of ceaseless activity. Every moment automobiles drive up the wide roadways, officers dismount, answer the salutes of the orderlies, go inside, emerge again hastily take their places in the automobiles and drive away quickly.

Horsemen in small detachments come and go and soldiers on bicycles or on foot are in constant circulation from early in the morning till late at night. One never forgets that this is one of the brain centers of the battle going on five miles ahead.

Tobacco Delights Fighters.

There was especial delight over the arrival a short time ago of a dozen automobiles heavily laden with gifts for the soldiers, such as tobacco, newspapers, warm clothing, chocolate and little luxuries of all sorts. What delighted the soldiers most was the arrival of the tobacco, for the supply was long ago exhausted and cigars and cigarettes were unpurchasable.

Soldiers had been offering 25 cents apiece for cigars and were unable to get them. I had brought a considerable supply along, which I gave away. At first the soldiers helped themselves sparingly with unwilling politeness.

"Go ahead and take a lot," I said.

With trembling hands they filled their pockets.

"For our comrades, too?" they asked.

"When my comrades see these," said one, "they will leap so high," indicating a jump high overhead. I have never before seen such joy as these soldiers displayed.

Great Cry for Newspapers.

The second great cry was for newspapers. All along the trip from Germany by automobile we were everywhere asked for newspapers, the soldiers crying out for them after the speeding car. This need is understandable, as the army at the front knows practically nothing of what is going on in the world.

Wherever we halted we were surrounded by men asking for news and we had the pleasure of telling many hundreds of soldiers the first information of the heroic deed of the German submarine U9, which sank three British cruisers.

One of the diversions at the front is shooting at French aeroplanes. For the first time since the beginning of the war I obtained reliable information about the activities of the French and British flyers. At this point the aeroplanes are particularly plentiful and one of these hostile machines flies every morning about eleven o'clock, so regularly that its pilot is called the "lunch flyer." When he appears he is greeted by the airship guns.

I had the unique experience of seeing a French flyer under fire. The first intimation that he was near was a loud explosion from a cannon near by. Far and high up in the sky I saw suddenly a round ball of white smoke where the shrapnel had exploded. Near by was the flyer looking like a black speck.

Flies Away Under Fire.

Another explosion, another white ball and the aeroplane close by. A third, fourth and fifth boom came, each followed by the appearance of a white ball of smoke, but each time the flyer was still there. After ten shots had been fired there was a row of great round clouds of smoke stretched half way across the sky with the black speck of the aeroplane in the lead, and gradually mounting higher, away from the dangerous fire.

In ten minutes $3,000 worth of explosives had been shot away without bringing down the air scout.

Special Shrapnel for Air Shots.

The shrapnel fired at flyers is constructed differently from ordinary shrapnel, which describes a parabola, and is timed to explode over the enemy and send down a shower of shot from above. These aeroplane shrapnel send the shot straight ahead, and so probably every one of the shells I saw exploding sent some bullets through the wings of the aeroplane.

If one of these shots shatters the motors or wounds the flyer or the observer the shell has accomplished its purpose, for since the Germans have taken their position here no flyer of either army has been shot down, though practically no machine has returned from a reconnoissance trip without its wings being punctured.

Hate But Respect British.

Throughout the army wherever I talked with officers and men, I found bitter hatred for the English, but warm praise for their fighting capabilities.

Especially effective has been the English artillery, which the Germans say astonished them by its accuracy. One reason for this is that the region of France where we are has been used for maneuvers and the enemy knows the exact range. Nevertheless there is no sparing of praise for the good marksmanship. The English here have some naval guns which have done great damage.

English soldiers have also astonished the Germans by their powers of resistance and accurate rifle fire, but the Germans say that the English strength lies mostly in the defensive.

As much as the English are hated so much are the French respected. Everywhere the officers speak well of the French.

"They fight a gallant fight and observe the rules of war," say the Germans. "They are a worthy foe."

3,000 GERMANS DIE IN FIVE FIERCE CHARGES

London.—Details are just available of the heroic attempt of Prussian guards to cut the railway connecting Reims and Verdun.

This attempt failed and the Germans were in danger of being caught between the French infantry and cavalry. It was at this moment, while the greater part of the German troops were retiring in the direction of Reims, that a regiment of Prussian guards threw itself desperately upon the lines of the French cavalry.

Not once but five times did the devoted regiment hurl itself against the solid French front. After the fifth charge there were only a hundred men left surrounding their flag. With signs of reluctance they gave the signal of surrender, and it was then found that nearly all of the hundred were wounded.

In the course of this engagement the guards lost 3,000 men, it is stated.

GERMAN SOLDIERS CAPTURE ANTWERP

AFTER HOLDING OUT FOR 11 DAYS TOWN SURRENDERS — BEST FORTIFIED IN THE WORLD.

BELGIANS BLOW UP FORTS

Belgians March Out of Town, Leaving Only a Small Garrison—Will Try to Join Allies—Best of Forts Inadequate.

London.—Antwerp and the forts surrounding the city are in complete possession of the Germans, but the greater part of the Belgian army has escaped.

It took the Germans just 11 days to capture the strongest fortress in the world.

The fall of Antwerp is evidence that even the most powerful forts are no match for the colossal howitzers the invaders have successfully employed against every fortified place that stood in their way. These huge guns open gaps through which the besiegers find an entrance for their field artillery and infantry.

The Germans, after shelling the city itself for many hours, making it untenable, entered the town through the suburb of Berchem, to the east. They had made a breach in the outer line of forts, some of which were destroyed by their big guns and others blown up by the defenders. The Germans followed similar plans in dealing with the inner belt of forts and at the same time threw shells into the city, which set afire many places.

The inner forts, like those further out, soon succumbed to the enormous shells.

A few forts continued to hold out. The Germans, according to their own official report, were in complete possession of the city and fortress. When they arrived they found that the Belgian field army had anticipated them and, like the king and royal family, had escaped.

The death roll, resulting from the attack on the defense of Antwerp, has not been compiled and probably the full details never will be known, but all accounts describe it as being terribly heavy. The Germans, although their big guns cleared a path for them, had to sacrifice many lives in crossing the rivers and canals and in driving out the defenders, who held the entrenchments until the last.

The stubbornness of the Belgians and of those who went to their assistance cost them dearly, also, so that both sides will have long casualty lists. There is no reliable information as to the loss of life in the city and the damage there.

Crowds of refugees arrived in London. Most of them left Antwerp before the surrender, and their accounts of the attacks are confused. The Belgians themselves, besides destroying forts, blew up steamers at the docks and set fire to the petrol stores and everything useful to the invaders. They also took away what the transports could carry.

GERMANS CHECKED AT GHENT

Force of 20,000 Germans Said to Have Been Repulsed—Germans Make Fierce Attack on Arras.

From the Battle front, via Paris.—Saber and lance came into play many times here. The French, British and German hussars, lancers, dragoons and cuirassiers in enormous numbers came into contact near Lille. There were no brilliant charges by long lines of horsemen to record, but the British squadron in khaki and the French in their light and dark blue uniforms often crossed swords with the blue-gray clad Germans.

There is not an inch of ground hereabouts which does not show traces of the awful character of the battle. The town of Albert is a mass of ruins. Roye has disappeared under constant bombardment. It was the center of the German effort to break through the allied lines.

The German artillery had taken advantage of many quarries in the vicinity, where they placed guns which were beyond the reach of the French artillery.

Reconnoitering parties frequently came in conflict. In these engagements the soldiers would take shelter behind the many bodies on the field. But nothing occurred which could be called a general battle.

The vicinity of Arras, however, was the scene of vigorous encounters between infantrymen, who engaged in close fighting with the bayonet after the artillery duel ceased. At some points along the line numbers of Germans offered to surrender if given food.

Portugal May Declare War.

London.—In a dispatch from Amsterdam the correspondent to the Exchange Telegraph company says that the Bureau Weinzehr, a semi-official news agency, asserts that a declaration of war on Germany by Portugal is expected in Berlin at any moment.

Germans in Courtrai.

London.—The correspondent of the Times at Ostend reports that 5,000 Germans have occupied Courtrai, on the River Lys, 26 miles southwest of Ghent, and near the French border.

OFFICIALS MOVE TO OSTEND

Fighting of Violent Character Occurs Near Audenarde—Warned of Bombardment, Germans Go Back.

Amsterdam.—The Nieuw Dan Den Dag says that the Belgian government was moved from Antwerp to Ostend.

The Nieuw Dan Den Dag says the German commander of the forces besieging Antwerp sent an officer carrying a white flag into the city to announce that the bombardment of the temporary capital would begin soon. Many refugees left for Holland, and the government was transferred to Ostend.

London.—An official statement given out in Antwerp and telegraphed here by the Reuter Telegram company's correspondent, says:

"A very violent engagement was fought on all lines. The situation is unchanged."

London.—An Ostend dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company says:

"Numerous skirmishes occurred between the advance posts in the environs of Yyres (in Belgium, 29 miles south of Ostend) and in the southern part of West Flanders.

"The Germans threw themselves on the forts and intrenchments."

A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company from Ostend says:

"Several ministers with the personnel of the ministries have just arrived here."

A dispatch to the Central News from Amsterdam says:

"A message received here from Ghent says fighting of a violent character has taken place between Audenarde (15 miles southwest of Ghent) and Leupeghem (a small town about a mile south of Audenarde).

"After an hour's engagement the Belgians received re-enforcements and threw back the Germans with heavy losses."

GERMANS BRING UP CAVALRY

Unexpected Offensive Move Is Taken in Vicinity of Lille—Antwerp Is in Peril.

From the Battle Front.—German cavalry made its reappearance on the scene of action in great force here, thus disproving the reports that all of its horses had been rendered useless, owing to an epidemic of the glanders.

The allies' extended front has met with vigorous counter attacks on the part of the Germans, who seem to have weakened their position on the center of the battle line in order to throw heavy masses of men against the right and left wings. The allies, although forced back short distances at some points on their left, generally have been able to hold their own.

The eastern wing also was the scene of severe combats, but there the battle was between infantry and artillery and the allies were able to push forward. In the center, where the infantry had been deeply entrenched since the commencement of the battle, the French and English commanders took the opportunity to relieve many regiments which had been on the advanced firing line. Two brigades of British troops, chiefly Highlanders, had relief for 13 days. They had burrowed so well that their casualties were unimportant, but the men were thoroughly exhausted from continued watchfulness and the incessant boom of the guns.

It is reported at the front that the Germans took 200 civilians with them when they departed from Roye.

German Shells Do Little Damage.

London.—The Daily Telegraph's correspondent in France says:

"For nearly three weeks the casualties among the British troops have been insignificant. The big German shells do comparatively little damage."

Rome.—Prince William of Wied, former ruler of Albania, according to advices received here from Berlin, in an address to his company of Uhlans, said he hoped through their bravery to reconquer on the battlefield the crown of Albania.

WAR OFFICES CENSOR NEWS

Curtain of Secrecy Is Kept Between Public and Operations in France. Report That Antwerp Has Fallen Is Denied.

New York.—The war chancellories of the allies and the Germans have not seen fit to lift the curtain of secrecy high enough for the public to obtain an insight into the conditions which prevail along the battle line in France.

"There is nothing to report," says the French war office, "except that there has been a lively engagement in the region of Roye, where we have captured 1,600 prisoners."

Of the situation in the east the Austrian general staff, in a dispatch coming by way of Berlin, reported a complete break-up of the Russian invasion in Hungary and said that the Russian emperor's forces had been cleared from a portion of the Carpathians.

The Russians, in their turn, declared that near the East Prussian frontier in Russian Poland they still were pressing the Germans hard and at several points had gained successes over them.

While one morning newspaper in London has been informed "on good authority" that Antwerp has fallen, neither the British official press bureau nor the Belgian minister are able to confirm the report.

The last advices from Belgium had the Germans still hammering away with their artillery against Antwerp. One dispatch said 200 big German guns were in operation there. Ostend advices reported thousands of refugees arriving in that city.

A Berlin dispatch says that King Albert of Belgium, who has been reported to have left Antwerp at the head of a portion of his troops, has been slightly wounded.

British aeroplanes again have visited Dusseldorf, Germany. A British official report says an aerial squadron succeeded in blowing up a Zeppelin airship shed in Dusseldorf and destroying a dirigible balloon in it. The three aviators engaged in the raid escaped but lost their machines.

NO CHANGE IN THE VOSGES

Berlin Statement Admits Fighting on German Right Wing Has Been Without Decision.

London.—A Berlin dispatch to the Reuter Telegram company contains an official statement, given out at general headquarters in Berlin:

"The engagements on the right wing in France have not led to any decision. The attacks of the French in the Argonnes and from the northeast front of Verdun have been repulsed."

Paris.—The fiercest fighting of the battle of Seven Rivers has occurred on the left wing of the allies. In the northerly positions assumed by the rival armies on the extended line now cavalry forces hurled to Von Kluck's relief by the German general staff, heavily supported by infantry, have been hurled with terrific force against the British and French lines, only to rebound from the vigor of the defense and themselves in turn forced to suffer attack by the allies with equally determined energy.

At one point the German cavalry succeeded in breaking through the French lines, but the break was at an angle of the French defense works and the Germans found themselves in such a precarious position that many hand-to-hand conflicts resulted before they were enabled to extricate themselves.

GERMANS LOSE IN POLAND

Part of Army Is Driven Back on Thorn. Left Wing Enveloped—Germans Claim Gains.

Rome.—A dispatch to the Tribuna from Petrograd says the Russians have driven the Germans from Wloclawek (Russian Poland, 35 miles southeast of Thorn, East Prussia) and have fortified themselves within a few miles of the fortress of Thorn.

The German left wing in Poland, according to the dispatch, is said to have been partly enveloped.

London.—The official press bureau issues the following announcement of additional casualties: Officers, 4 killed, 7 wounded, 2 missing, 8 prisoners of war.

Ask To Withdraw Troops.

Paris.—A dispatch to the Havas agency from Petrograd says: "The newspapers here say Russia has been asked by Persia to withdraw her troops from Azerbaijan, northwest Persia, but has declined to acquiesce.

Bombs Dropped on Zeppelin Hangars.

Amsterdam.—A Central News dispatch from Cologne says that a hostile aeroplane bombarded the Zeppelin hangars in that city. The sheds, however, were not damaged.

RED GLARE LIGHTS UP SKY

Bombardment of Antwerp Shakes Houses 20 Miles Away—Big Siege Guns Used.

Bordeaux.—News has been received here that the king of the Belgians marched out of Antwerp at the head of a portion of his army.

London.—An official German dispatch received here from Berlin by the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company says:

"It is reported from Dutch sources that fierce fighting occurred in the Nethe district, Province of Antwerp.

"The Germans approached in a northerly direction from Forts de Wavre and de Waelhem and commenced a bombardment of Antwerp from these positions.

"Early in the morning shrapnel shells had caused great damage in many places, showing that the investing force is close to the city.

"The whole of the Belgian field army has been concentrated in the district between Antwerp, Lierre (nine miles to the southeast of the city) and the River Scheldt, in which are fighting is proceeding.

London.—The bombardment of Antwerp has been so violent that houses at Rosendaal, a Netherlands town more than 20 miles distant, have been shaken visibly, according to a telegram from that town to the Central News by way of Amsterdam.

Wounded civilians have arrived at Rosendaal and the Dutch government has ordered all trains to proceed to that place to be held in readiness to transport the refugees and injured. Thousands of refugees have already arrived.

Throughout the entire night, the message adds, a red glare illuminated the sky.

BIG BATTLE IN PRUSSIA

Germans Were Re-enforced from Koenigsburg—Profit by Marshes—Germans Replace Austrians.

Petrograd. — Fighting on a large scale has already commenced in East Poland. A dispatch gives following details: The situation on the frontier of East Prussian, fighting battles daily, our army continues to advance, driving the enemy before it. The tracks of the retreating Germans are strewn with bodies of horses. We have captured three armored motor cars and some heavy field and machine guns.

After the failure at Sopozkin the Germans attempted to stay our advance near the village of Mazevice, but were flung out of their positions because of heroic attacks of the Russian troops. Our progress is ever accelerated by parties of German prisoners, continually met with, looking completely exhausted. Among them are many youths between 16 and 17 years. It is easy to see that the Germans are employing their last resources.

ALLIES RETAKE LOST GROUND

French Also Claim to Have Advanced in Center—German Cavalry Is Held in Check.

Paris.—The official communication issued by the French War Department announces that the ground previously lost by the French between Chaulnes and Roye has been retaken, and that on the center the French have advanced on certain points. The text follows:

"Except on the two wings, where the Germans have been repulsed, there has been nearly complete calm along the front.

"On our left wing the German cavalry has been held in check; to the north of Lille it has been driven back.

"Between Chaulnes and Roye the ground previously ceded has been retaken.

May Reopen Dardanelles.

Petrograd.—M. Sazonoff, Russian foreign minister, announced that the powers comprising the triple entente (Russia, Great Britain and France) are taking steps to secure the reopening of the Dardanelles.

Rome.—According to a dispatch from Athens it is reported there that Albanians are massacring Christians in Albania, following the change of the Albanian government, and that no effort has been made by the government to protect them.

Sick Women Attention

Is it possible there is a woman in this country who continues to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial after all the evidence that is continually being published, which proves beyond contradiction that this grand old medicine has relieved more suffering among women than any other one medicine in the world?

We have published in the newspapers of the United States more genuine testimonial letters than have ever been published in the interest of any other medicine for women—and every year we publish many new testimonials, all genuine and true. Here are three never before published:

From Mrs. S. T. Richmond, Providence, R. I.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—"For the benefit of women who suffer as I have done I wish to state what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I did some heavy lifting and the doctor said it caused a displacement. I have always been weak and I overworked after my baby was born and inflammation set in, then nervous prostration, from which I did not recover until I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The Compound is my best friend and when I hear of a woman with troubles like mine I try to induce her to take your medicine."—Mrs. S. T. RICHMOND, 199 Waldo Street, Providence, R. I.

A Minister's Wife Writes:

CLOQUET, MINN.—"I have suffered very much with irregularities, pain and inflammation, but your wonderful medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, has made me well and I can recommend the same to all that are troubled with these complaints."—Mrs. JENNIE AKERMAN, c/o Rev. K. AKERMAN, Cloquet, Minnesota.

From Mrs. J. D. Murdoch, Quincy, Mass.

SOUTH QUINCY, MASS.—"The doctor said that I had organic trouble and he doctored me for a long time and I did not get any relief. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised and I tried it and found relief before I had finished the first bottle. I continued taking it all through middle life and am now a strong, healthy woman and earn my own living."—Mrs. JANE D. MURDOCH, 25 Gordon St., South Quincy, Mass.

Write to LYDIA E. PINKHAM MEDICINE CO. (CONFIDENTIAL) LYNN, MASS., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

COTTON PRICES NOW AND IN 1913

In explaining, or attempting to rather, the difference of prices on cotton in this country and Liverpool, the Clanton Press last week cited some quotations, and produced some figures, which they stated made an allowance of the difference of about three or four cents in prices for the cost of shipping to England. They started out by saying that The Union-Banner, by asking them to explain the difference of these prices, was attempting to mislead the people. We cannot see how in the world they can accuse us of misleading the people in the matter, when we only asked them to explain. Where the opportunity to mislead the people comes in is in giving the answer, and again, the Press took the cork under good and deep.

We would like to submit a comparison of Liverpool and New York cotton quotations now and before Democratic free trade went into effect, something as follows:

On October 8th, 1914, Liverpool cotton was quoted at 5d, or about 10 cents per pound. On the same date, New York Cotton was quoted at 6 1-2 cents. This is a difference of 3 1-2 cents in favor of Liverpool. On June 24th, 1913 (before free trade and low tariff was enacted) Liverpool cotton was quoted at 6.72d, or about 13 1-2 cents. On the same date New York cotton was quoted at 12 1-2 cents. This is a difference of one cent per pound in favor of Liverpool.

By the above comparisons you can see that in June 1913, before the free trade and low tariff policies of the Democrats were enacted into law, Liverpool was paying one cent per pound more for cotton than New York. Now Liverpool is paying 3 1-2 cents per pound more than New York.

The Clanton Press says it takes this much difference to ship the cotton to England. Then why didn't it take that much to ship it in 1913? If it could be shipped to England for one cent per pound in 1913, why can't it be shipped for that amount now, instead of 3 1-2 cents per pound?

This extra 2 1-2 cents per pound is not being taken up by shipping charges to England. It is put on by the speculator, simply because he has the chance to do it; and the southern farmer is being hoodooed out of what is really and justly his own, thereby.

Who is responsible for these things? Who was responsible for the conditions that prevailed under the Protective government that preceded Wilsonism? It was the Republican administration, wasn't it? Why? Because they were in control of the government. Then who is responsible for the conditions that exist now? It is the Democrats, isn't it? Why? Because they are in power.

If the Clanton Press was so anxious to get the true blue facts before its readers last week, why didn't they go back and compare the records of the cotton situation as it was under Protection and free trade seperately? That is the only way to reach a fair conclusion in the matter.

But perhaps they were by this, as they were the speeches at Cane Creek, and the matter of Chilton county being in debt.

WHICH PARTY SHOULD RULE?

The Democcratic party is asking the votersof the country to keep it in power at Washington. It is seeking the indorsement of the nation upon its acts since March of last year when it came into complete control of the machinery of the Government. It is asking the people to forget the record which it has made. That is the sum and substance of the request, for to remember that record is certain repudiation of the party and its acts.

Democracy came into power and found excellent business conditions, a general prosperity of the people and full employment of labor. It substituted for those things, business stagnation, idle freight cars and more than a million men out of employment. It found business confidence, and changed it into fear for the future. It found stability, and transformed it into unrest.

Between the year ot 1900 and 1910 was the last decade of Republican control of the affairs of government. During that period the manufacturing capital of the country increased from nine billions of dollars to over eighteen billions; the value of manufactured products from thirteen billions to twentyone billions; the value of the materials used in manufacture from six and a half billions to twelve billions.

During the Republican decade the number of employes engaged in manufacture increased from five millions to seven and a half millions; the wages and salries paid to employes of manufacture from two and a half billions of dollars to four and a half billions. The number of savings bank depositors went up from six millions to nine millions; the amount of their deposits from two and a third billions of dollars to four billions. Our export trade increased two hundred and fifty millions of dollars in value. The value of our farm property was doubled.

That is what Republican administration did for the United States. What has Democratic administration done? By the first of this year Democratic policies were in action and their methods understood by the business world. The new tariff law was in operation, and new laws to regulate trade announced. The period from the first of January to the first of July, when the European war had no effect upon our own conditions, is therefore, a fair period to take as a test of the state of the country under Democratic rule.

During that period of six months the commercial failures in the nation increased in amount over seventy per cent., and banking failures sixty per cent. Railroad earnings fell off nearly ten per cent, in gross amount, and the number of idle freight cars, a sure barometer of trade, increased over two hundred per cent. The balance in the general fund of the Treasury decreased twelve per cent. The gold shipped from the country increased one hundred and forty per cent. The period used for this comparison is the first six months of 1912, a time when the country was under Republican rule, and before the Presidential election of that year had unsettled the future.

These are the facts in the case. They measure the difference to the country between the domination of the two parties. They tell the story of the change that came with Democratic victory. Which party does the country prefer to have as manager of its affairs? That is the question of this year. How can there be any answer save the return of the Republican party to power and a consequent return to the good times of the decade when it ruled with wise and constructive hand? —Philadelphia Press.

CHILTON COUNTY IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION

An enthusiastic meeting was held at the City school building last Friday for the purpose of organizing and planning the work of the Clanton branch of the Chilton County Improvement Association. Mrs. Marshall, the county nurse, acted as Chairman and the following officers were nominated: President Mrs. E. Pinckard; Vice-President, Mrs. H. T. Pipes; Secretary, Mrs. Hugh Jones; Treasurer, Mrs. W. M. Adams.

School improvement, sanitation, beautification of the town, etc., are the lines of work which will be adopted, and it is hoped that every lady in Clanton will become a member of the association and lend her influence. Efforts will also be made to establish a rest room here for the use of ladies who come to trade.

The President and Secretary are already at work, trying to enroll a large membership, and we trust all the ladies in town will be present at the next meeting, Tuesday afternoon, Oct. 19, at 3:30 p. m., in the school building.

EXPENSIVE LIVING AND CHEAP COTTON

It is a notable fact nowadays that the price which the farmer gets for his cotton is enormously low, even below the cost of production, and what is still worse, still going downward; and at the same time the price of flour and other foodstuffs are soaring skyward, beyond the reach of many who are daily stairing panic and starvation in the face. It would not be so bad to take a small price for cotton, if the cost of other things were down in accordance.

The reports that are being sent out by some are that flour is high because there is so much of it being consumed by the abnormally large demand of Europe, occasioned by the war. But it was shown recently at the eighteenth annual session of the national Grain Dealers Association at Kansas City, that according to reports by the various members and committees, all the conntries of Europe were buying around ten per cent less grain than usually, except England, which was buying practically the same as in previous years.

There must be something crooked about this matter some where. It is being said that the price is high because there is such a great demand for grain, while at the same time the reports of this Association show that there is even less grain being shipped to Europe than usual.

Only one solution presents itself for the matter: the grain speculators must have combined to hold the prices up. They could do so very easily if they so desired, unless interfered with by the government. It seems that the national administration might wisely investigate this, and if they cannot help us raise the price of our cotton, at least aid some in getting our foodstuffs lower to correspond with the cotton.

The South is by far the most determined democratic section of the country. It seems that Congress depends on it (the South) to vote Democratic just from force of habit, whether they get any benefit out of it or not. This is the reason they did not send us aid for the cotton muddle. This is the reason they have treated us to round after round of other empty promises. That is the reason they are going to let us suffer at the hands of the men who have the northern wheat crop under their thumbs.

They expect us to take the medicine by the old rule of practice and instinct, without regard to the benefits or disadvantages imposed. The people of the South have been doing this for years, and they will continue to do it so long as they vote the taken-for-granted platform of the free trade pirates of this nation.

MR. DUDLEY ASKS FOR AN EXPLANATION

Regarding the letter from Mars Hill last week, in which Mr. J. N. Scott said he had learned that Mr. Goodgame and Mr. Riggins made a favorable report to Mr. Felix Dudley, of conditions in Beat 2, after their speech at Mars Hill, Mr. Dudley asks us to print the following:

"I wish you would state in your paper that Mr. Scott's information regarding reports to me from Mr. Goodgame and Mr. Riggins is wrong. They made no such reports to me. I heard them conversing openly about the matter on the streets. I have nothing to do with their campaign; and furthermore, if they made reports to anyone, I suppose it must have been to those who sent them out."

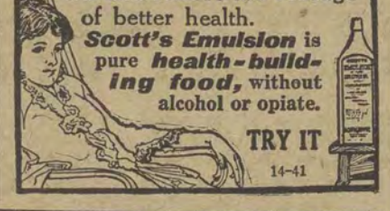
UNION GROVE

Dear Editor:—Please give me a small space in your valuable paper to say a word. Health of this community is fairly good just at this writing.

The farmers are very busy trying to gather their crops and getting ready to sow wheat and oats. My friend I have never before heard so many good old farmers talking of sowing wheat; we believe that this is the right idea. It seems to me that the southern farmers could raise their own flour at home. We have the soil and can buy the seed and if we will do this I tell you good old home raised biscuit is mighty good, and it will beat no biscuit at all mighty bad.

My friend, what do you think of general conditions any way? Weve got no market and weve got no money and no credit. But listen, I can tell you what we have got; beat 12 has got some of the sickest Democrats you've ever saw. Something has gone wrong: on last general election day I believe we had about thirty Democrat voters present in beat 12, and I believe on the 3rd, day of November 1914 they can't reach or number more than fifteen. The soup must be getting thin in this section. Just wait boys till after the joint debate next Saturday and we can take new courage and thicken our soup. Boys lets try and go to Clanton next Saturday. I would be glad to know that every American citizen in the county would be present at that meeting. I feel sure that we will have both sides of the question discussed, for Im quite sure Mr. Roy Sawyer will be there to defend his side of the great question.

Listen my friends, how is it that we haven't had any speaking at this place? I guess the speakers think they said enough at Mineral Springs to satisfy all the people of beat 12. I contend that L. H. Reynolds made his best speech to the people of Beat 12. It seems that Mr. Reynolds and Mr. Middleton put the whole question before the people just as it confronts them to day.



We want to congratulate the men who are the nominees of the Progressive party for the way and manner in which they are conducting them selves during this campaign. They are very plain and careful in telling the people where they stand and what they stand for. My friend, I believe that weve got some men this time who are willing to serve the common people and I believe that these men are with the majoriety of the people on any sound question. Now in conclusion I want to say that I am ready to go to the polls on the 3rd, day of November and help to elect our ticket by the largest majority that we ever elected a ticket in this county.

I remain as ever a Progressive voter. A Farmer.

Collins Chapel Community Fair

The citizens of school district no 46 have decided to hold a community fair at Collins Chapel school house, Saturday, October 24, 1914.

This is some what of a new move for old Chilton, but it is one that promises great things in the way of community development. It is intended to bring out all the community resorces and to show what has been produced in the home, school, and on the farms without special effort. In other words it will be an exhibit of normal products instead of a display of things that have been specially prepared over a long period of time. One of the best things about this fair is that it costs nothing.

At a meeting of the citizens held in the school house on September 28, a committee was appointed to outline plans which are as follows:

Every citizen of the district is expected to bring to the school house Friday afternoon or Saturday morning some products of the home or farm, for exhibit. No one must get the idea that what he has is not good enough to exhibit, nor must (if he cares for the honor and good name of his community) fail to bring something

There will be only honorary first and second prizes given. Committees will be in charge of the different departments to arrange and classify the exhibits. The departments are as are Animal and Poultry, agricultural, orchard and garden, domestic science, flower department, arts and crafts, and historical relics.

Besides the judging and awarding of the prizes there will be speaking (speakers to be announced later) athletic contests, fire lighting and water boiling contest. Dinner will be served on the ground.

See circulars for the partial list of articles that may be used as exhibits.

ASTHMA AND HAY FEVER A GUARANTEED RELIEF

"I have arranged with Alred Drug Company so that every sufferer from Asthma, Hay Fever or Bronchial Asthma in Clanton can try my treatment entirely at my risk," Dr. Rudolph Schiffmann announces. He says: "Buy a 50-cent package of my Asthmador, try it, and if it does not afford you immediate relief, or if you do not find it the best remedy you have ever used, take it back to Alred Drug Company and they will return your money, cheerfully and without any question whatever. After seeing the grateful relief it has afforded in hundrers of cases, which had been considered incurable, and which had been given up in despair, I know what it will do. I am so sure that it will do the same with others that I am not afraid to guarantee it will relieve instantaneously. The druggists handling Asthmador will return your money if you say so. You are to be the sole judge and under this positive guarantee, absolutely no risk is run in buying Asthmador."

Persons living elsewhare will be supplied under the same guarantee by their local druggist or direct by Dr. R. Schiffmann, St. Paul, Minn.

To the Patriots of America—

In the name of George Washington, Tom Payne and Patrick Henry, I ask, what need have of a "War Tax?" Why, bless your your innocent soles, fellow countrymen, it is the greatest sham that was ever packed off on an unsuspecting people. A one hundred million dollar "war tax," and this country not at war with any nation on earth. So why in the Sam Hill and forty little red-eyed nigger devils do want to call it a "war tax?" If the cash in the National Treasury is running short, and we all knew it was running low before a gun was fired in Europe, then let Wilson's Congress do the sensible and patriotic thing by cutting down expenses all the way from the White House to dog whipper and then if they find there isn't enough cash in sight to grease the extravagant old machine, let Wilson go out in the open market like a man and sell bonds as Cleveland did twenty years ago when Free Trade tariff had bankrupted the Treasury just as it has been doing since the present Free Trade law went into effect last year.

A hundred million dollar "war tax" and the steel mill all running on less than half time during the past year. Don't that strike you as statesmanship with a big S.

A hundred million dollar "war tax" and cotton never above 12 cts. all the past summer.

A hundred million dollar "war tax" coming, and a hundred thousand idle freight cars reported before the war broke out.

A hundred million dollar "war tax" and the price of living going up and wages and cotton coming down.

A hundred million dollar "war tax" on us and the Democrats and Catholics running this country. Americans, how do you like it?

County Health Officer's Report

To the Honorable Probate Judge and Commissioners of Chilton County, Ala:

Gentlemen:

I beg to submit my report for the month of September. As required by law, I inspected the county jail and poor house, and found both to be in good condition.

All the doctors have reported births and deaths except the following: Dr. A. M. Woolley, Jemison; Dr. J. J. DuBose, Stanton; Dr. F. C. Smith, Thorsby.

All midwives have reported, and all coffin dealers, except J. M. Langston, Jemison.

Vital statistics are as follows: Births; white 51, colored 11, total 62. Deaths; white 12, colored 11, total 23.

The following cases of infectious diseases have been reported and carefully looked after: typhoid fever, 5; scarlet fever, 4.

Respectfully,

The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of "THE MAN HIGHER UP," "HIS RISE TO POWER," Etc.

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

SYNOPSIS.

Mark Truitt, encouraged by his sweetheart, Unity Martin, leaves Bethel, his native town, to seek his fortune. Simon Truitt tells Mark that it long has been his dream to see a steel plant at Bethel and asks the son to return and build one if he ever gets rich. Mark applies to Thomas Henley, head of the Quinby Iron works, for a job and is sent to the construction gang. His success in that work wins him a place as helper to Roman Andzrejzski, open-hearth furnaceman. He becomes a boarder in Roman's home and assists Piotr, Roman's son, in his studies. Kazia, an adopted daughter, shows her gratitude in such a manner as to arouse Mark's interest in her. Heavy work in the intense heat of the furnace causes Mark to collapse and Kazia cares for him. Later Roman also succumbs and Mark gets his job. Roman resents this and tells Mark to find another boarding place. Five years elapse during which Mark has advanced to the foremanship, while his labor-saving devices have made him invaluable to the company. In the meantime Kazia has married one Jim Whiting. Mark meets with an accident which dooms him to be a cripple for life. He returns to Bethel intending to stay there. He finds Unity about to marry another man and wins her back. Unity urges him to return to his work in the city. Mark rises rapidly to wealth and power in the steel business, but the social ambitions of his wife make their married life unhappy. The big steel interests are secretly anxious to get hold of stock in the Iroquois Iron company, supposed to be worthless. Timothy Woodhouse seeks financial assistance from Mark and the latter buys Woodhouse's Iroquois stock at a small figure. Henley forces Quinby to let Mark have stock in the Quinby company. Mark finds Piotr making a socialistic speech on the street and the boy shows that he is still bitter against Mark. Mark finds Kazia, who is divorced and is now a hospital nurse, caring for Roman who is near death. Mark is advised by his physician to stop taking drugs and take a long rest.

"It did," he answered. "But you didn't invite it. You weren't the sort of girl that needed to invite it—you aren't that sort of woman now!" Eyes, no less than tongue, were eloquent of his admiration; but she was looking away. "But most women wouldn't be so ready to forgive. They would remember only hurt vanity. I'm at your feet for your charity. I've seen little of it in my life."

"Have you looked for it?"

"No. Nor had it. Nor valued it—until now."

"And now?"

"Why now I—need it."

Somehow the confession, an unconsidered remark that, however, had the ring of sincerity impulsive sayings are apt to have, seemed to establish even more firmly their intimacy. It nerved him to his next remark.

"Kazia, don't you think you could tell me what has happened to you during all these years?"

"You'll be disappointed," she began abruptly, "because there isn't much and it's commonplace enough. I married Jim and lived with him a year. Then I left him. Not because he wasn't kind—he was, in his rough way. But he was shiftless and he drank too much. He had no ambition and—I wasn't happy with him, so I left him, though I knew it hurt him."

"A woman can do that," he interrupted quickly.

"Some women do it, you mean. I've always been ashamed, though I never went back to him. Later, I got a divorce. I went to live with Uncle Roman, but Piotr, who had hated Jim, made it so unpleasant I had to leave. He hated me, too, I think."

"Or loved you, in Piotr's peculiar fashion. But go on."

"After a while I found work in a tobacco factory, rolling cigars. Not the kind you smoke, but cheap vile things. It—it wasn't nice."

"I've heard of those holes," he muttered. "You there—why—"

"I was one of many," she went on. "In two years I was sick and in the hospital, a heavenly place where there was ventilation and nothing to do and good things to eat. I used to pray I'd never get well.

"There isn't much more. I didn't have to leave the hospital. One of the internes took an interest. He had influence and helped me to register as a nurse. I've a knack for surgical work, and since I passed my examination I've always had cases. For the rest, I'm not educated. I've merely read a little, here and there, as I've had time.

"That's all and not what you seemed to expect. Just cruel selfishness in the beginning and a little luck afterward. Which is not the success you worship."

"But I see more than that. I read between the lines." Long afterward, recalling this scene, he remembered her quick questioning glance, but then he gave it no thought. "I see the courage to make a fight, the will to rise and being equal to the opportunity when it came. And I've heard that the really charitable are never so to themselves."

"Oh, if you will—" She broke off with a shrug. "Let us talk of something else."

When at length he broke the silence, his voice was a caress. "I wouldn't have you different. What you've lost is nothing compared with what you've gained."

She turned her heard slowly toward him. For a long minute their eyes held. Then with one accord they looked away. Not the heart of a boy of twenty could have beaten more violently.

As they drove on, the silence became awkward, self-conscious. Neither seemed able to break it.

Rounding a curve in the tortuous driveway, they met a landau, a beautifully enameled affair drawn by high-stepping horses in elaborate silver-mounted harness. In it sat two women. They bowed to him, the younger with a pointed smile.

Kazia heard him mutter: "I had forgotten!"

"Who was she?"

"The older? That was Mrs. Thomas Henley, of whom you may have heard."

"Yes?. But I meant the other."

"That," he answered in a dry constrained voice, "was Mrs. Mark Truitt."

"That makes it unanimous," he said shortly.

It had ceased to be the pleasantest time he had had in years. A heavy cold cloud had settled upon their intimacy. Why dream of the possibility of a mighty primitive passion! It was not possible. . . . But it was a characteristic of the man to want most the things farthest away, the things forbidden.

"We've gone far enough," she said. True words, however she meant them! "And it is getting too cold for you. Let us turn back."

He made no protest.

He swung the team around and drove toward the hospital; at a reckless pace, that he might not have to talk. He had no wish for commonplace speech with her. From other speech the habit of self-repression saved him.

But not wholly. For as they were nearing the hospital, he drew the horses down to a soberer galt.

"When," he asked, "will you drive with me again?"

"Not again."

He had known, even before she spoke, what her answer would be. And he knew—so had she given it—that it was irrevocable.

"I wonder why you came today."

"I'd been thinking of you. And I was—curious. To see what sort of man you had become."

They swung into the hospital grounds and up to the entrance. Over her protest he descended to help her to the ground. He took a queer pleasure in the pain the needless little service gave him.

He sought her eyes. "Was it only curiosity, Kazia?"

Her answer was not in words. Slowly she mounted the stairs to the doorway, and turning, looked steadily down upon him. Her face was white, but her eyes were lustrous—and unspeakably sad.

"Kazia—"

"Good-by."

He had had the answer he wanted. But he received it with a heart as heavy as lead. He wanted her as he had desired nothing since life began. And he could only stand and, helpless, see her leave him.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Sundered Bonds.

Dinner, on the rare occasions when the Truitts dined together and alone, was marked by a careful formality that was but a thin disguise for their mutual dislike. At no other time, save by hastily cured accident, were they apt to confront each other. The quarrel of the night of their first invitation to Henley's house had never been healed. Each had gone a separate way, ignoring as far as possible the other's existence.

With Unity the dislike had been genuine. She believed that when her easy husband had so suddenly and definitely put an end to her supremacy, she had been robbed of a right that she, a woman and therefore a superior finer being, should enjoy. Fear, of him and of what the man she now perceived him to be might do if unduly provoked, kept dislike alive and hot.

With him it had been rather contempt for her airs and vanities, for the uselessness to which, even in a woman, he could not become reconciled. But on this night it was both contempt and a rising bitter resentment that heightened the emotional tumult.

She chose this hour to lay aside the cold, somewhat theatric hauteur it was her wont to assume before him. In its stead she donned an air of triumph, of smiling aggressiveness that he was quick to connect with their meeting in the park. She criticized the knot of his necktie. Several times she contradicted him wantonly.

Unity, too, rose and, following, overtook him in the firelit drawing room.

"You are rude. I wish to speak with you."

"I'm going up to my study."

"You're supposed to have given up work, I believe."

"I wish to be alone."

"Now, perhaps. You weren't alone this afternoon in the park."

"I didn't want to be then. What is that to you?"

"A wife has some right to consideration, I think."

"A wife—yes. You'll hardly claim the title."

"Do you deny it to me?"

"A wife has something to give her husband. But you— What is it you have to say? By your manner I judge you think it important."

"It is. You're too ill to work, but it seems not too ill to go driving in the park with striking looking women."

With an effort he kept his voice cold. "And you object, is that it?"

"I do."

"Very well. You've registered your protest. Is that all?"

"No, it is not." She leaned sharply forward, forgetting to pose and to smile, the delicate prettiness of face eclipsed by a cloud of vixenish temper. "It is not. I have some self-respect and regard for our position, if you haven't. Do you suppose a husband means nothing to me but a name?"

He glanced hesitatingly toward the door, meditating retreat. Then, with a grim tightening of his lips, he returned his gaze to her.

"You really want an answer? Then, I had supposed a husband means to you a name—and a check book. With inexhaustible leaves."

"So you begrudge me the money I spend! You grow—"

"Your expense account, fully met, is the best answer to that, I think."

"But I want more than money. Do you think a little money—a little paltry money—can repay me for your neglect and selfishness?"

"So you scorn money? It's news to me. But I think you've nothing to complain of."

"Nothing!" she cried. "Is it nothing that I have to go everywhere alone, always having to listen to whispers behind my back of my husband's foolish attempts to play the man about town? You see, you couldn't keep your escapade of last year from me. Or that you've turned the old set against me by cheating poor Timothy Woodhouse out of his last property?"

He winced and flushed painfully at that. She saw and believed she had pierced his armor. She rose again, that she might deliver her final thrust most effectively.

"Do you call it nothing that you, who have no time or thought to spare your wife, brazenly flaunt your women in public, on the streets and in the parks, for all the city to see and gossip about?"

He was standing rigid, both hands gripping his cane, his gaze fixed unwaveringly on her. The tightened lips had become the merest line.

"If you refer to Mrs. Whiting," he began at last steadily, "you will please use more respectful terms."

"You reprove me on her account! This," she cried tragically, "this is too much. I suppose this Mrs. Whiting—if that's her name—is your mistress—perhaps I should say, your latest mistress."

"Why, you—"

The storm burst, choking back speech, but finding an outlet through his eyes. He reached out swiftly and caught her hand in a cruel clutch, crushing the soft useless member until her rings bit into the flesh and she cried out in pain.

"Let me go," she gasped. "You're hurting me."

He released her and sank back into a chair.

"I think we've come to the end of our chapter, Unity. But I'll give you—us—one more chance."

"You'd think I were a criminal!"

"We both are—but let that go. Heretofore you've made our life. And you've failed. Since our first month we've never been really happy, at least in each other. Now let me choose. Let's go away somewhere—"

"To New York or abroad?"

"Not to New York or abroad. To Bethel or some place where we can

"Even You Couldn't Be So Brutal—" live a quiet, decent, natural life. Let us begin over again and try to recover what we've lost—or rather what we never had."

"You are absurd!"

"Is it absurd for a man to ask his wife—you've claimed the title—to share the life he wants and needs?"

"You forget to consider what I would have from such an arrangement."

"You would have me."

She answered with a contemptuous shrug. "I will do nothing so silly. You ask too much."

"Ah! You're franker than I thought you could be. I'm glad you're frank." He rose, looking curiously down at her. "If you look back, you'll find I've never asked you anything until now. I've been content to take—at least, I've taken—only what it suited your whims to give me. And you've given exactly nothing."

"And what," she flung back, "have you given me?"

"From another woman that might be a crushing retort. I've given you very little. But, as it happens, it's been all you wanted. You wouldn't take, you never wanted, the only worth while thing I had to give." He paused again, his manner hardening. "However, all that is ended. I go away tomorrow morning. I don't think I shall ever see you again."

Even then he might have relented, if she had given him excuse. But she gave him no excuse.

"You're asking for a divorce?"

"Yes."

"I suppose," she sneered, "you want to marry that woman, your mistress."

He held himself under rigid self-control. "She isn't my mistress, though I love her. She was the girl I gave up years ago out of loyalty to you."

There was nothing lovely about Unity Truitt just then.

"And now you want to renew the broken romance. Very pretty! But," she laughed in vindictive pleasure in her fancied ability to thwart his desire, "you shan't have her. I don't choose to be a divorced woman. And I know you can't get a divorce without my consent."

"I think you will consent," he said quietly.

"I will not. I don't choose—"

"The choice is with you, of course. But you must understand it. You're through with me in any case. But if you consent to the divorce, I'll make a settlement that will satisfy you. If not, I will make only the allowance I think you've earned."

She went pale at that, the one threat which could reach her. "Why," she gasped, "you couldn't do that. Even you couldn't be so brutal—"

"Choose."

"But you couldn't. You—I must have time to think—"

"You must choose now." He was inflexible.

She sat transfixed, beginning to comprehend the reality of his purpose. Her confidence suddenly melted. Fear shone in her eyes. She rose, and with a piteous pleading gesture, too frightened to be conscious of her hypocrisy, she went to him.

"Why, Mark—Mark, dear! You can't mean that. You couldn't cast me off like this. Why, we're husband and wife and—I know I haven't been fair to you, but I can't let you go. Let me make up this last year to you. Let us go away, as you say, and begin over. We can be happy—"

The stammering incoherent cry halted, silenced by the unrelenting quality of his steady eyes. The outstretched hands fell limply to her sides. She shrank back a step from him.

"I believe—you do—mean it."

"I'm waiting for your choice."

After a little it came, gaspingly.

"I have no choice. I—I must consent."

He turned away and without another word or glance for her, limped heavily out of the room.

CHAPTER XIX.

Bond Though Free.

The Truitt divorce sensation had reached and passed its height.

One day, when the decree was scarcely two weeks old, a man alighted from an incoming express train. He did not look like a roue or the villain of a famous scandal; he himself did not know that he had been heralded in such a role. His doctor would hardly have recognized him. He was still thin and the cane had not been discarded, but he was clear-eyed and healthily bronzed and the limp was far less noticeable than at any time since the accident.

Six months he had spent in the northern wilderness, living in the open, sleeping under the stars, with no company but his own thoughts and a taciturn half-breed Indian. But they had not been lonely months, nor did he think them wasted. For they had brought him to what he was pleased to call a new birth.

The first news of the Truitts' separation had evoked scant interest from the gossips. But as the time set for the trial approached it began to be whispered about that more than the usual stale story of domestic disagreement lay behind the affair. The whisper became an audible chorus. It was a dull season in a year when no important election impended, there was a dearth of spicy news; the newspapers avidly seized this chance to give flavor to their columns. From some source, which might have been identified as Unity's lawyer, reporters were furnished material for innumerable suggestive rumors. Vague but deftly worded innuendoes of Truitt's cruel treatment of his wife appeared, of his sly profligacy, of the one strikingly handsome woman who had captivated his fancy and whom it was supposed he would marry after the divorce. From Truitt, who had completely disappeared, came no denial. His flight and silence were taken as an admission of guilt.

At the trial, to be sure, the testimony was a distinct disappointment. It proved merely commonplace desertion and touched but lightly on only one short-lived period of dissipation during which Truitt, at certain midnight suppers, had shared with other men the more or less interesting company of sundry nameless women. The public, deprived of the scandal for which its mouth had been watering, decided that Mrs. Truitt had been overly magnanimous in thus sparing her husband and let its heated imagination supply the lacking details. Truitt entered no defense and a decree was quickly handed down. Mrs. Truitt at once sailed for Europe.

He hailed a cab and gave the name of a club that to cabby brought visions of a liberal tip. In a few minutes the destination was reached and the passenger descended to the pavement. At that moment a woman, whom he recognized as one of Unity's familiars, approached. He lifted his hat and bowed. She looked squarely at him and passed on without greeting. Red surged into his cheeks.

"Cut!" he muttered. "I suppose Unity's given her version of our smash-up. Unity would."

He paid his fare and entered the portals from which no rich man had ever been excluded. At the desk a well dressed and usually very polite young clerk so far forgot himself as to look his amazement.

"Mr. Truitt! I supposed you were out of town. I thought—" He stopped in confusion, remembering that it was no part of his business to think.

Mark looked hard at him. "You thought?"

"I thought you were out of town," stammered the clerk.

"I was. And now I'm back," Mark answered dryly. "So I think I'll arrange for rooms here indefinitely."

Nor was this all of the city's greeting to the returned wanderer. The rooms arranged for, he turned away from the desk, to come face to face with a man whom he had used to like and who, he had reason to believe, had not been without interest in him.

"Are You Going to Add to the Scandal by Marrying That Woman?"

"Why, hello, Baker!" Mark held out a friendly hand, with a genial smile that was part of his new resolve.

Baker took the hand, but released it quickly. "Ah! How are you, Truitt?"

"Bully. Just back from a long stay in the woods. Dine here with me tonight, won't you?"

"Thanks, no. I'm probably not dining here. Excuse me. Some men I must see—"

Baker broke hastily away, passed a few words with a nearby group and went out. The ruse was obvious. Mark, feeling as though he had received a blow in the face, stared after the retreating figure. The genial smile faded. Then he went to the rooms he had engaged. Passing the group that had helped out Baker's ruse, he was conscious of their furtive curious glances.

Arrived in his rooms, his first act was to have back newspaper files sent up to him. For two hours he read how, while he was winning back health in the wilderness and planning a life of amity with his fellows, his name had been bandied about on the tongues of slander and gossip. As he read in the light of what had just happened the amazing accumulation of suggested filth, only here and there brushing the outer edges of fact, utter bewilderment filled him. Shirley's brief communication, making mention of "some talk," received at the edge of the wilderness, had not prepared him for this.

"It's all a pack of dirty lies," he cried. "How could these men, who've seen me go in and out every day, believe it? What rotters they must be themselves to be able to believe it! By God! I'll—" He stopped, with a sudden feeling of dismay. "Why—why, I can do nothing."

He was helpless.

"Then I am not free! She has put a mark on me that a lifetime can't rub out. Must we pay forever for our mistakes? . . ."

One evening, when his residence at the club had continued about three weeks, the affair came to a climax. He was entering the grill for dinner. At the sound of his name from a nearby group of diners, he halted involuntarily.

"That's all well enough," one of the diners was saying. "A club's a club and, of course, we have to allow a certain latitude. Still, when it becomes the refuge for a man so notorious we couldn't have him in our homes—" The speaker was checked by a warning kick.

Mark, sweeping the group with eyes from which the mask had momentarily fallen, met Baker's embarrassed gaze. With a contemptuous smile, he passed on to his own table and ordered a dinner which he made such show of eating as inward rage and pain allowed.

His coffee and cigar had just been brought when Baker crossed the room and stood by his table.

"Truitt—" he began uncertainly.

"Well?" Mark's upward glance was not welcoming.

"May I sit down for a minute?"

"Aren't you afraid of catching the plague?"

"I'm more afraid of being kicked for my impertinence."

"I understand," said Mark grimly, "I'm a pretty tough customer, but I don't commit assaults in public. Sit down."

Baker sat down, looking earnestly across the table at Mark. "Look here, Truitt. There are things on both sides of your fence I don't approve. But I particularly disapprove of this Pharisee business. I felt like a cad when you caught us over there. I want to apologize for my part in it, though it wasn't a speaking part."

"All right." Mark lighted his cigar. "You've done your duty."

"But this is a little more than duty. I—" Baker hesitated. "Oh, hang it all! Some things become so painful only plain speech serves. You don't need to be told of the stories going around. Lately it's occurred to me that you've been letting us take them at face, without trying to contradict them. That's the thing I'd do myself—if I were in the right. But it can be carried to extremes. Have I your permission to say that the stories are—let us say, overdrawn?"

"You have not. Life's too short to enter into a contest with rumor."

"But your silence—"

"Is my affair," Mark answered gruffly, rising. "You may say to your meticulous friend that I'm about to resign from this club."

Baker, too, rose, looking at Mark keenly.

"Oh, come, Truitt," he began, "that's—"

But Mark cut him short. "At least it will save him and his sort the necessity of setting a precedent that would decimate the club. Good evening."

Henley, who had been out of the city when Mark returned, came back soon after the latter took up his residence in the hotel. Mark approached him with the inward shrinking that preceded every new meeting just then.

"You've picked up physically," Henley remarked after a cool handshake.

"Six months in the woods accounts for that."

"I'd think, if it was doing you so much good, you'd have stayed."

"In other words?"

"In other words," said Henley, "why did you come back now?"

Mark laughed hollowly. "I didn't know I'd become a notorious character."

"How, in heaven's name," Henley exclaimed, "did you let yourself get caught in a divorce court scandal? I'd have thought that you, of all men, if you had to play the fool, would at least have used finesse."

So even Henley believed the rumors!

"At any rate, no one but myself is hurt."

"That's not true. Every one who had anything to do with you is more or less hurt. The company is reflected on. I," Henley concluded with an air that declared the indictment to be complete and unanswerable, "I am besmirched, because we're known to be in so many things together."

"That," Mark returned coldly, "can be easily cured. We can wind up our affairs. And I'm ready to resign from the company."

"You can't cure the fact that we have been together. And you can't resign. Are you going to add to the scandal by marrying that woman?"

"What woman?" Mark's voice was cool and steady.

"The one that turned your head and your wife was smart enough to discover."

"You've heard names, then?"

"No," growled Henley. "She's as mysterious as the rest of your didoes."

"As mythical, you mean," Mark answered in a voice that did not betray his relief. "There was no woman."

"What! You mean these stories aren't true?"

"You'd seen me almost every day for years. You might have guessed that."

"But last year—those women—"

"An experiment in idiocy—nothing worse. There were no women, except at arm's length."

Henley surveyed him keenly. "Then how did these stories get out? But you needn't answer. I can guess. A woman is never clever except when she's up to mischief.

"However," he went on, "this puts a different face on the matter. As you say, I might have guessed the truth." This, for Henley, was abject apology.

Mark shook his head. "My resignation holds just the same."

"Are you going to let a little talk drive you out?" Henley demanded.

"It isn't that. I had decided before I knew of it. I'm tired of the scramble. I want—peace." Mark laughed discordantly. "And I'm getting it with a vengeance."

"As much as you'll ever get it," Henley returned promptly. "I know what you want. Who doesn't? Some time or other every man wants, or thinks he wants, peace. And if we had it, we'd want to die. I told you once before—things are. Accept them, fit yourself to them, forget theories that lead nowhere. Pick out the thing you want most and fight until you get it. Then fight to keep it. Besides, you aren't a misfit. The trouble with you is, your strength is your greatest weakness—you've too much imagination. And you're not a well man yet. Go back to your woods until you're cured. Then you'll feel the itch to get into the scramble again and break a few heads."

But Henley the philosopher had done. He resumed his usual crisp manner.

"Moreover, you can't resign. The new agreement with the men comes up next year and the Quinby company faces the fight of its existence. We'll need every good head we've got. And if that isn't enough, your withdrawal would leave me to fight Quinby alone. And—I made you, don't forget that. You've got what you wanted out of the company and me. You can't drop out easily now and shirk the responsibilities."

"You say, can't?"

"I say, can't. You've got a sense of obligation, haven't you?"

"If I have," said Mark grimly, "it's the last proof that I am a misfit."

Heavy Pasturing Condemned.

Heavy pasturing of alfalfa is not advised. The number of animals per acre should be so regulated that two or three small cuttings of hay may be taken from the field. This is necessary to insure tender green growth for grazing. When little buds begin to shoot at the base of the stalk the alfalfa should be cut. In a very few days a fresh new growth makes its appearance. Overpasturing, without occasional cutting, also tends to injure the crowns of the plant and eventually destroys the stand.

Watermen and Uniforms.

Watermen—who were also firemen—enjoy the distinction of being the first public servants who ever wore a uniform. "Long before our army and navy adopted any distinguishing garb," writes Mr. Guy Nickalls, "Thames watermen were known by their uniform and badge, a plaited coat, knee breeches and stockings and hat, according to fashion, but always a plate on the arm, either of the Waterman's hall to denote that they had the freedom of the river and were licensed, or the badge of their employer. Any person rowing or working any boat, wherry or other vessel, who had not served seven years as apprentice, incurred a penalty of £10."—London Chronicle.

PUBLIC HIGHWAYS

ROADS AS CROP PRODUCERS

Government Studies Show How the Agricultural Output of Country Depends Upon Its Highways.

That an improved road will increase vastly the productiveness of the area through which it runs has now been satisfactorily demonstrated by studies conducted by the United States department of agricultural in Virginia. Conditions in Spotsylvania county were investigated with particular care and the results have proved suprising. In 1909, the county voted $100,000 to improve 40 miles of road. Two years after the completion of this work the railroad took away in 12 months from Fredericksburg, the county seat, 71,000 tons of agricultural and forest products hauled over the highways of that town.

Before the improvement of the roads this total was only 49,000 tons annually; in other words, the quantity of the county's produce had risen more than 45 per cent. Still more interesting, however, is the increase shown in the quantity of the dairy products. In 1909 these amounted to 114,815 pounds, in 1911 to 273,028 pounds, an increase of practically 140 per cent in two years. In the same time shipments of wheat had increased 59 per cent, tobacco 31 per cent, and lumber and other forest products 48 per cent.

In addition to this increase in quantity the cost of hauling each ton of produce was materially reduced. In other words, the farmers not only produced more, but produces more cheaply, for the cost of transportation to market is of course an important factor in the cost of production. From this point of view, it is estimated that the $100,000 spent in improving the road in Spotsylvania county saved the farmers of that county $41,000 a year.

In the past two years the traffic studies of the federal experts show that approximately an average of 65,000 tons of outgoing products were hauled over the improved roads in the county an average distance of eight miles, or a total of 520,000 "ton-miles." Before the roads were improved it was estimated that the average cost of hauling was 20 cents a "ton-mile;" after the improvement this fell to 12 cents a "ton-mile," or a saving of eight cents. A saving of eight cents per mile on 520,000 "ton-miles" is $41,000 a year.

Because this saving, in cases of this character, does not take the form of cash put directly into the farmer's pocket, there is a widespread tendency to believe that it is fictitious profit, while as a matter of fact it is just as real a source of profit as an increase in the price of wheat.

In Dinwiddie county, Virginia, for example, where peanuts are one of the staple crops, the average load for two mules on a main road was about a thousand pounds before the road was improved. After its improvement the average load was found to be 2,000 pounds, and the time consumed in hauling the larger load to market was much reduced.

IDEAS ON ROAD IMPROVEMENT

Speedways, Joy-Ride Trails or Highways for Pleasure Traffic Not Wanted by Farmer.

Sanity has overtaken the advocates of better rural highways. In the old days the good road advocate dreamed of nothing less than macadam, and his visionings ran often to brick-paved paths and concrete country lanes. All the rural world rolled smoothly by over traffic ways that would cost anywhere from $5,000 to $15,000 per mile. That was before the farmer had really entered into the movement and before the small town merchant, the rural banker, and the county seat cities had begun to think about good roads in terms of dollars and cents. Twenty years of agitation has brought us face to face with the fact that the taxpayer does not want speedways, joy-rider trails or roads for pleasure traffic, says St. Louis Republic. The man on the farm wants a good firm, well drained highway that he can use at any and all seasons of the year, and he does not want to be bankrupted or driven to the poorhouse in getting it.

Laying Pullets.

Pullets very often are slow at starting to lay owing to becoming too fat. In growing pullets there should be more nitrogenous and less carbonaceous food given them.

Importance of Movement.

Of the 2,000,000 miles of public roads in the United States only about two hundred thousand miles have been given a hard surface. This shows the importance of the good roads movement.

Poor Highways.

Poor highways lessen the profit of labor, increase the cost of living, burden the enterprise of the people, dull the morality of our citizenship and hold down the educational advancement of the country.

CALOMEL MAKES YOU SICK! LISTEN! CLEAN LIVER AND BOWELS MY WAY

Just Once! Try "Dodson's Liver Tone" When Bilious, Constipated, Headachy—Don't Lose a Day's Work.

Liven up your sluggish liver! Feel fine and cheerful; make your work a pleasure; be vigorous and full of ambition. But take no nasty, dangerous calomel, because it makes you sick and you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver, which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel crashes into sour bile like dynamite, breaking it up. That's when you feel that awful nausea and cramping.

Listen to me! If you want to enjoy the nicest, gentlest liver and bowel cleansing you ever experienced just take a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone. Your druggist or dealer sells you a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone under my personal money-back guarantee that each spoonful will clean your sluggish liver better than a dose of nasty calomel and that it won't make you sick.

Dodson's Liver Tone is real liver medicine. You'll know it next morning, because you will wake up feeling fine, your liver will be working, your headache and dizziness gone, your stomach will be sweet and your bowels regular.

Dodson's Liver Tone is entirely vegetable, therefore harmless and cannot salivate. Give it to your children. Millions of people are using Dodson's Liver Tone instead of dangerous calomel now. Your druggist will tell you that the sale of calomel is almost stopped entirely here.

WHAT HE REALLY DID SAY

Remark Might Almost Be Construed as a Slur on a Most Noble Profession.

One morning Gifford met his old friend, Hall. After they had greeted they did under pretense of studying each other, Gifford said:

"Say, Will, I heard today that your son, Thomas, was an undertaker. I thought you told me he was a physician."

"Oh, no," replied Hall, positively, "I never told you that."

"I don't like to contradict you, old friend," insisted Gifford, "but, really, I'm positive you did say so."

"No, you probably misunderstood me," explained Hall, "I told you he followed the medical profession."—Exchange.

SKIN ITCHED AND BURNED

R. F. D. No. 1, Box 164, Bridgewater, N. C.—"I was suffering with a skin trouble which began after a spell of sickness six years ago. It was mostly on my body and I could not rest for the itching and burning. It began like a nettle rash, then it would break out in pimples all over me. I would sting and burn and itch all over and I scratched until I was almost raw. At times I could hardly bear anything to rub against the parts that were affected.

"I do not know how many remedies, soaps, etc., I tried but none did me any good. Then I tried Cuticura Soap and Ointment and they seemed to be the very thing that I needed. I only used them four weeks and they completely healed me." (Signed) Mrs. H. L. Patton, Jan. 31, 1914.

Go to Jerusalem to Die.

That Jewish immigrants have so well adapted themselves to local conditions in Jerusalem as to "practically monopolize a greater part of such trade as exists" is stated in a consular report on Jerusalem. It is impossible to give an exact estimate of the population of Jerusalem, and although it is believed that it figures at 110,000, 95,000 might perhaps be a more correct estimate. It is, roughly speaking, composed of 13,000 Christians, 12,000 Mohammedans and 70,000 Jews, many of whom are immigrants from Russia.

It is remarked that in spite of the emigration of many Jews to escape military service there has still been a marked increase in this section of the population on account of the continuous influx of aged Jews, who come with the intention of ending their days in Palestine.

NOT EVEN AN ACQUAINTANCE

American Girl Surely Had Reason for Complaint Against Impertinence of Accoster.

You remember how in the piping days of peace, when something simply had to be done to make talk, there was a hue and cry about American girls in Berlin and the dreadful things they did under pretence of studying music. Here is a story of one of them which the New York Evening Post Saturday Magazine's special war correspondent has sent over with the explanation that it was all he could get past the censor at this time. A Berlin paper reports that a quiet street in Charlottenburg was suddenly alarmed by shrill cries of "Police! Police!" A great crowd promptly collected about the person responsible for the disturbance, an excited young woman, obviously American.

"Arrest this man, officer," she said as soon as a policeman appeared. "I am Miss Ellington from Cincinnati, U. S. A., and he had the impertinence to speak to me."

The policeman, guided by the young woman's accusing finger, picked out the culprit.

"The man is a stranger to you?" he asked.

"An entire stranger," replied Miss Ellington. "I have only been taking violin lessons from him for six months."

Dangers to the Eye.

Mr. Louis Bell, the electrical illuminating expert, and Dr. F. H. Verhoeff, an eye specialist, have published in Science their opinion that the alleged dangers to the eye from ultraviolet radiation of sunlight and various artificial lights amount to nothing at all. They admit that there have been many "sensational attacks" upon modern illuminants as dangerous by reason of injurious effects of ultraviolet or actinic rays, but these have "entirely neglected any quantitative relation between the radiation and its supposed pathological effects." Very little of these rays can penetrate the cornea, and the crystalline lens cuts off completely those that straggle through toward the retina. Protective glasses are useful only, they conclude, in cutting off dazzling lights and undue heat.

The New Language.

Here is our esteemed contemporary World Speech again celebrating that accomplished international language, Ro, which is "easy easy for the Japanese, Chinese or Hindus as for the Latin or Teutonic peoples." No doubt, and as easy for us as Japanese, Chinese, Etruscan and Basque. But listen to a bit of ro dialogue:

"Gi tada, aci flaw? (Good morning, how are you?)

"Sito ec, abi lic. (Thank you, I am well.)

"Asi we resk abo? (Do you understand me?)

We do not; but api mugcal hab awoz mehu? How many legs has a lobster?—New York Sun.

He was taking her for a ride in his new motor car.

He seemed to be absent-minded and dreaming.

"How time flies!" he exclaimed at last with a deep sigh.

"When is the next installment due?" she asked with a significant glance at his car.

And the very next evening he went out for another ride in his car, but with a girl who didn't know so much.

For old sores of any kind apply Hanford's Balsam. It will reduce the inflammation and the sore will gradually disappear. Use it for the hard cases. Adv.

"I'm certain he loves me," said the suburban girl.

"How's that?"

"It is a four mile walk to town. He misses the last car about twice a week, but he still keeps coming."

HEAL YOUR ECZEMA QUICKLY WITH RESINOL

What a Cold Can Do

Many a fatal case of kidney disease starts from a simple cold or chill. Congestion clogs and weakens the kidneys. Uric poisons collect, damage the kidneys and cause backache, rheumatic pain, headaches and urinary disorders.

When doctoring a cold, think of the kidneys. Drink water freely to help flush out the poison. Take Doan's Kidney Pills to relieve congestion of the kidneys, give up a heavy meat diet and take plenty of rest. Nature will assist in the cure. Doan's Kidney Pills are used with success and are publicly recommended all over the civilized world.

An Alabama Case

S. M. Brown, Sr., 712 S. St. Andrew St., Dothan, Ala., says: "I was so bad with kidney disease that the doctors held out no hope of my recovery. I was confined to the house two months, hardly able to move. My body swelled terribly and I was so miserable that death would have been welcome. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and improved in a week. In two months I was a well man and I have never had a sign of kidney trouble since."

In Bavaria and some other parts of Europe the Monday before Lent was at one time known as Blue Monday. The churches were decorated with blue, and the day was kept as a holiday by classes whose ordinary avocation required them to labor on Sunday. As this led to violent disturbances the custom was legally abolished.

STINGERS

From "The Yellow Jacket."

The Republican motto in war and in peace: "Buy of Americans first."

It is easy to be a Democrat; there's no need to stand on a platform.

The Democratic party is the heaviest tax ever laid on American enterprise.

When the woman suffragists go to war it will be easy to get the men to respond to the call to arms.

Wilson's tariff bill has had twins—one of them 3,000,000 men out of work, and the other the $100,000,000 war tax.

We don't see why the blue blazes the Democrats are worrying over their platform. Did you ever hear of a democrat standing on a platform?

If our President has to tax the people $100,000,000 for funds to run the government in time of peace, what kind of war President would he make?

If Wilson h adn't spent that $865,859,075 of the peoples' tax money for a salute, there wouldn't be any need of the war tax to-day. And the salute never was delivered.

The difference between a dead man and the Democratic party is that a dead man has to render an account of the deeds done in the body when he dies; and the Democratic party alway dies when its deeds are made known.

Some Democrats raise a howl over the $100,000,000 war tax, but they didn't say a blooming word when Woodrow and Willyum Grapejuice spent $865,859,075 of Uncle Sam's good money for a Mexican salute that never was fired.

BIDS WNTED.

Notice is hereby given that at a regular meeting of the Commissioners Court of Chilton county, Alabama, held at Clanton, Alabama, on the 14th day of September, 1914, a resolution was adopted providing for building or constructing a public highway from Clanton to the line of Chilton and Shelby counties near South Calera, by way of Thorsby and Jemison in Chilton county, along or near the line of the present highway between said points.

Said Road to be built by grading, chirting or graveling, the work to be done by contract, and said contract to be let to the lowest bidder under seal bids to be deposited with the Judge of Probate on or before the 26th day of October, 1914.

Said bid shall set forth the number of miles in length, and the kind of road whether graded, chirted or graveled, and the charge for each kind. Said bids shall be made upon plans or specifications to be provided by J. B. Converse, civil engineer, of Selma, Ala.

The payment for the building of said highway to be made by the county, by issuing county warrants payable in annual installments from one to three years; all persons offering to bid upon said contract for the building of said road or any section or number of miles of same, may deposit their bids in sealed envelopes marked bids for county road work, and addressed to Commissioners court on or before 12 o'clock the 26th day of October, 1914, at which time said bids will be passed upon by the Court; the Court reserving the right to reject any and all bids. Contractors bidding will be required, as evidence of good faith in making bids, to deposit with said bid a certified check for $750.00, or to deposit same with the Judge of Probate on or before said bids are opened and passed upon by the Court.

E. B. DEASON, Judge of Probate.

Whole Family Benefited By Wonderful Remedy

There are many little things to annoy us, under present conditions of life. The hurry, hard work, noise and strain all tell on us and tend to provoke nervousness and irritability.. We are frequently so worn out we can neither eat, sleep nor work with any comfort. We are out of line with ourselves and others as well.

A good thing to do under such circumstances is to take something like to relieve the strain on the nerves. Mrs. J. B. Hartsfield, 82 Plum St., Atlanta Ga., writes:

"I have on several occasions been vastly relieved by the use of your medicines, especially the Anti-Pain Pills, which I keep constantly on hand for the use of myself, husband and two sons. Nothing in the world equals them as a headache remedy. Often I am enabled by the use of one or two of the Pills to continue my housework when otherwise I would be in bed. My husband joins me in my praise of the Anti-Pain Pills and Nervine."

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills

are relied upon to relieve pain, nervousness and irritability in thousands of households. Of proven merit after twenty years' use, you can have no reason for being longer without them. 11

WHAT WAS NEAR A SERIOUS CONSEQUENCE

The following report has come to us of a recent occurrence that happened, and came near entailing serious consequences:

Two parties were out over the county making speeches for the Democratic ticket, and stopped with a certain man near Jemison to spend the night. The report says that they had some Democratic spirits to "boost up the boys." They also had with them a certain quantity of "skeeter skute", fly lotion, or something of the kind.

It seems that late into the night, as they were dreaming the sweet dreams of victory, they were moved to possess themselves enternally of some of the "booster" they had brought along. By some curious mistake (?) one of the fellows who had stopped to spend the night, got hold of the "skeeter skute" and funnelled it down before he realized what it was.

Greatly frightened at the possible serious consequences of the peculiar beverage he had imbibed, this fellow gave the alarm to the man of the house, beseeching him for help. But the result was not so bad as was apprehended. It only had a moving unsettled effect, and was soon over.

Special Session County Union

A special session of the County Union is called to meet with the farmers, business and professional men of the county, at the court house in Clanton, on Saturday, Oct. 17 at 10 a.m., to discuss and consider the Bankhead plan of financing the present cotton crop. We have the assurance that the Federal government will not aid in the movement and it becomes the duty of the cotton states to take the matter in hand.

The Attraction.

A rather eccentric man, calling on a family blessed by an observant little son, wore kid gloves that had been cleaned. The little boy, seeming to be much attracted by the visitor, stayed close at his side. "You like to stand by Mr. Blank and hear his funny stories, don't you, Jimmie?" presently asked Jimmie's father. "I don't care about his stories," replied the honest youngster, "but his hands smell just like our automobile."

Cotton Report

There were 4178 bales of cotton ginned in Chilton county from the crop of 1914, prior to September 25, 1914, as compared with 3975 bales ginned prior to Sept. 22, 1913.

The above statistics are from the report made to Director Wm. J. Harris of the United States census bureau, by Mr. R J. Jones, special agent of the department for Chilton county.

Joyful Anticipation of Motherhood

There is apt to be a latent apprehension of distress to mar the complete joy of expectation. But this is quite overcome by the advice of so many women to use "Mother's Friend." This is an external application designed to so lubricate the muscles and to thus so relieve the pressure reacting on the nerves, that the natural strain upon the cords and ligaments is not accompanied by those severe pains said to cause nausea, morning sickness and many local distresses. This splendid embrocation is known to a multitude of mothers.

Many people believe that those remedies which have stood the test of time, that have been put to every trial under the varying conditions of age, weight, general health, etc., may be safely relied upon. And judging by the fact that "Mother's Friend" has been in continual use since our grandmother's earlier years and is known throughout the United States it may be easily inferred that it is something that women talk about and gladly recommend to prospective mothers.

"Mother's Friend" is prepared only in our own laboratory and is sold by druggists everywhere. Ask for a bottle to-day and write for a special book for expectant mothers. Address Bradfield Regulator Co., 407 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

A BLUNDER AND AN EXTRAVAGANCE TAX

The Democrats should acknowledge their failure, restore protective tariff

No one questions that more revenue is needed. No one can doubt that an empty treasury is staring the nation in the face; two years of Democratic blundering and extravagance could produce no other result.

But the fact that the treasury is empty is no excuse far administration dishonesty; it is no excuse for seeking to get money by inequitable means, or under false pretenses; it is no excuse for placing additional burdens of direct taxation upon an already overburdened people.

The treasury is empty. Let us know why it is empty. Let us try to determine the cause or causes before we undertake to apply a remedy.

President Wilson and his apologises assert that the proposed emergency revenue, amounting to over $100,000,000, is needed because of the European war.

This is absolutely contrary to facts. The government's figures of imports and exports show a progressive decline in customs receipts from the time the Underwood-Simmons Tariff went into effect; and with an income tax yielding nearly $50,000,000 less than it was expected to yield the Democrats were face to face with the necessity of finding new sources of revenue before the European war was thought of.

The war is merely an excuse. The Democrats are using it to cover up their sins.

As a matter of fact the proposed emergency revenue tax is not a war tax at all, but a Democrat ic blunder and extravagance tax.

Mr. Wilson arrived at his deficit of $10,619,538 for the month of August last year, when the Republican Protective tariff was still tn effect.

How much of that falling off was due to the war and how much to the tariff?

We have the figures for New York, Philadelphia and Boston, and these figures show that while the decrease in the value of imports during the month of August was approximately $11000000 the income from customs duties decreased $8,600,000

In these three cities, therefore the war caused a loss of about $3,600,000 in the month of August, while the changes in the tariff caused a loss of approximately $5,000,000.

In view of these facts, how can any man honestly contend that he decrease in revenue which e emergency tax is intended to pply is due to the European r and not to the Underwood ff?

his is a way to meet the situ- n and to meet it quickly. Let Democrats introduce a bill ring tariff duties to the point hich they found them, in- sing them if necessary to se- the needed revenue.

t them put a higher tax than on sugar, for instance. Sug- ow comes in practically free is to be entirely free in 1916. he tariff was taken off sugar cording to Mr. Wilson, to ben- t the consumer. But sugar nt up instead of down in price d now costs nearly twice as uch as it cost under the Payne- ldrich Tariff. Who benefits? The sugar trust, which is enbled to import sugar free of duty, or nearly so, and then sell it here and in England at war prices.

The result then of this extraordinary piece of legislation is to increase the price to the consumer, subject the domestic sugar industry to ruinous competition and put millions of dollars formerly paid into the United States treasury into the pockets of the sugar trust.

We challenge Mr. Wilson or any of his apologists to give a single reason why the American sugar trust should be permitted to import sugar practically free of duty and then sell it in England at war prices.

Under the Republican protective tariff sugar netted the government approximately $60,000,000 a year.

Why not restore this tariff, or even double it, as an emergency measure—a war measure, if you will?

There is only one reason why not, and that is a political one.

In retnrning to the protective tariff, the Democrats would acknowledge the failure of their tariff theorios and the wisdom of the protective system.

The pill is a bitter one. They will not take it voluntarily. But it should be forced down their throats.—American Economist.

A Resolution by Mr. J.S. Dennis

Editor Union-Banner:—Please give me space to submit to the committeemen of the several Beats, the following resolution, and ask them to submit it to the people of their communities. and send a report ot same to Mr. M. D. Foshee, chairman of the campaign committee.

Following is the resolntion:

Whereas, there is a general depressed condition of business in this county, state and nation, debts all due, no sale for cotton, and taxes are very high, and some of the county officials are now advocating putting the county in debt to build certain roads, believeing that such acts are unbusiness-like, and against the best interest of the people of this county, and further believing that all tax money should be placed on the roads that need it most, therefore, be it

Resolved, that we condemn the acts of any and all of the county officials who advocate and vote for a debt of any amount upon the tax payers of the county.

Respectfully,
John S. Dennis.

Editor Union-Banuer:—With your permission, I will get down a little news from this section of Chilton.

The health is very good except Mrs. William Gothard. She had a stroke of paralysis some time ago, but is improving now.

As a rule the farmers are behind with their cotton picking, as a result of too much rain. The boll weevil has made its appearance here also, but too late to do much damage to this crop.

The people are beginning to realize the necesity of raising more foodstuff on their farms and less cotton,

The Sunday school and Sunday evening prayer meeting are progressing nicely.

Bull Moose Day Held at Clanton

Splendid Demonstration by Bi Gathering of Voters.

For several months in this county it has been in the wind that the strength of the Progressive forces was gradually in creasing. All indications have pointed that way for some time.

The Democrats have felt the sand of their foundation giving way beneath them. They have been conscious of their weakening grasp on the will and favor of our citizenship. But last Saturday brought on the deluge.

It marked the climax. It was the point where their utter helplessness clashed against the strength of their enemies, and truly it may be siad that they were brought face to face with the awful humiliation of defeat.

The disposition of the great crowd of voters that attended the joint debate at the court house, between Mr. Rushton and Mr. Sawyer on the Democratic side, and Judge Regnolds and Judge Longshore on the Progressive, added great courage to the fight the Bull Moose organization has been making in this county, and admittedly "crapped the wings" of the already stranded ship of Democracy.

Those arguments which the Progressives have been putting before the people of this county could have no better substantiation than that given them by the voice of the people at this meeting. The ayes for the Progressives arose in one solid body filling to overflow the great court room where the meeting was held; the ayes for the Democrats arose only four strong.

The gist of the speech of Mr. Ray Rushton for the Democrats was an indirect admission of the corruptness of the party, as compared with its days of virgin purity, and a pathetic appeal to the voter to come back and help to get her cleaned up again.

Judge Longshore and Judge Reynolds made splendid speeches, heartily in accord with the tenor of the people and their interests, and received the endorsement of the audience, both by vote and constant applause.

A Message to the County Tax Payer

Editor Union-Banner:—Just a few words to the voters. I will not give any reasons why we should not vote the Democrat ticket: the happenings within the past few months is an evidence that the Democratic party has made a complete failure in the nation.

Let no one decide that our majority will be large enough without him; we will all be needed in the district and state.

It seems that the Democrats want to elect tneir man for sheritf mighty bad. When they consider our nominee for sheriff, Mr. H. A. Harris, and know that he has made a success as a farmer, school teacher, and merchant and that he received the highest complimedt in the primary, in which he was nominated, that any man in the county has ever received, they think things are pretty tough for them.

Let's be on the look out for the Democratic circulars and mis-statements which will come out too late as usual for our fellows to reply to.

SIX HURT IN AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT SUNDAY

Machine turned over and caught three under it—others thrown out.

As a result of a frightful auto accident Sunday when a car driven by Mrs. L. J. Duncan turned over on the road south of town, six persons received more or less painful and serious injuries.

The party consisted of the following ladies and children, who were out for an afternoon ride: Mrs. L. J. Duncan and children, Lucian and Elizabeth, James Wade, Misses Corita Wilson, Evelyn Waller and Ada Faircloth. James Wade was the only one who escaped without a single bruise.

As the car rounded a curve down the hill at Mr. J. N. Dennis's place, the driver lost control and the great speed caused the machine to turn completely over. It stopped in an upright position in the ditch beside the road, with one rear wheel completely demolished, and the motor still running.

Miss Waller and James Wade were thrown clear off the car into the air, and landed several feet away in the open field. They were less injured than any of the others.

Miss Wilson, Miss Faircloth, and Elizabeth Duncan were caught in the ditch under the car, thereby sustaining the most serious injuries of any.

Mrs. Duncan did not lose her position at the steering wheel, and besides a slight bruise on the head, was hurt only by a cut on the hand from the broken glass of the crushed wind shield. Lucian, who was riding in the front with his mother, received only a painful cut on the leg.

Assistance reached the scene in a very few minutes, and the unconscious victims were soon removed from the wreck. Physicians were summoned, and the injuried were brought to town and given medical attention.

It is not thought that any of those hurt are in danger of fatalities. All are up except Miss Faircloth. She will in all probability not recover for several weeks.

WALLACE WRITES WARDENS LETTER

Game Commissioner Would Put Stop to Nefarious Practice of Alleged Sportsmen.

STATE CAPITAL NEWS ITEMS

Doings of the Various Departments of the Commonwealth Given for Our Readers.

—Montgomery.

State Game and Fish Commissioner John H. Walace, Jr., has addressed a communication to the county game and fish wardens directing their attention to the fact that just before the closed season expires on quail many pretending to be sportsmen will seek to take these birds. He invokes in his letter of special instruction strict vigilance to the end that these men may be promptly apprehended and speedily convicted. He urges the game gardens to keep in close touch with their deputies in every part of their respective counties so that all violators of the game and fish laws in any regard may be brought to justice.

Mr. Wallace also addressed an urgent request to the various probate judges of the state in which he asked the active co-operation of the gentlemen to the end that the sale of hunters' licenses this year be largely increased. In his letter Mr. Wallace said as follows:

"I am sure that you are fully appreciative of the vast economic value of birds and game, and the imperative importance of their conservation. A hunter who has a license will observe the law and will report violators, while those who hunt without licenses, contrary to law, will violate the law and will likewise shield offenders."

"Taxation Laws Archaic."

Declaring that the taxation laws of the state are archaic and unjust and asserting that no proper system of taxation can be devised without fundamental changes in the constitution, the governor of Alabama, in an eloquent speech here before the newly organized Tax Reform League, pledged his hearty support and co-operation to the league in the work it has undertaken and invited all suggestions looking to a reform of the present system.

The governor asserted that the most paramount need of Alabama is a new constitution, declaring that not only to the taxation laws need revision but the educational system as well. He quoted figures to show that more than one-half of the money that is paid into the state treasury every year goes for the purpose of education and old soldiers.

Regarding new tax laws, the governor recommended to the league, first, constitutional changes, enabling the taxing authority to put a uniform rate of taxation upon all real estate, a uniform rate upon all real property, and a uniform rate upon all intangible property. He further recommended the abolition of the back tax commissioner and the appointment of a tax commission which would have the power to name nine or ten salaried experts, who would meet with the commission and make assessments. He declared that the people of Alabama are willing to pay taxes if they have the assurance that they are treated fairly.

Insurance Agent Arrested.

State Fire Marshal Austin announced the indictment in Sumter county of C. F. Hislop, accused of defrauding citizens of that section out of $1000 in insurance premiums alleged to have been collected on fire policies of a fake Texas company, which were not delivered. Hislop was traced to Mississippi and arrested.

Warrants to Demonstration Agents.

Farm demonstration agents' warrants were mailed from the state department of agriculture offices. The state pays three-fifths of the salaries of these demonstrators and the amount released each month is in excess of $2,500. The national government pays the remaining two-fifths.

Four Governors to Greenville.

Two former Governors, one Governor, and one Governor of the future will be at Greenville October 30 for "Governors' Day" at the farmers' institute and celebration. Governor O'Neal assured the committee that he would attend, unless pressing business called him, and it is practically certain that B. B. Comer and William D. Jelks, former Governors, and Charles Henderson, Democratic nominee for Governor, will be present. All State officials will be at Greenville during one day of the institute.

Conecuh Man Given Liberty.

Grady Sellers, serving a life term for the murder of Leander Feagin in Conecuh county eight years ago, was paroled by Governor O'Neal following the recommendation of the Board of Pardons, trial solicitor and many citizens of the community in which the crime was committed. Wade Oliver was hanged for the same offense several years ago and before going to his death swore Sellers was not a party to the crime. Affidavits were presented to the governor to this effect.

Asks Curtailment of Demands.

L. E. Jeffries of Washington, general counsel of the Southern railway, appeared before the state railroad commission and, in a candid statement regarding the financial condition of his road, asked that there be a curtailment of the demands upon its revenues until such time as business conditions may warrant.

Mr. Jeffries stated to the commission that as a result of the general business depression due to the European war the resources of the Southern railway had been greatly reduced, statements of the company showing that for the week ending September 21 last the gross revenues of the company, as compared with the same week of last year, had fallen off the sum of $139,356; that for the week ending September 30 such decrease amounted to $166,228, and that for the week ending October 7, the gross revenues of the company had decreased $245,868.

The general counsel of the Southern railway appeared before the commission in behalf of Fairfax Harrison, president of the company, at whose request Mr. Jeffries sought a hearing with the railroad commission. Mr. Jeffries will also go to the commissions of the other states through which the Southern operates and lay before them and other governing bodies the needs and the conditions of his company.

Mr. Jeffries stated to the commission that while the revenues of the company had been steadily going off, the operating expenses have been continually increasing. He filed with the commission a statement from which it appeared that the operating expenses of the company, out of every $100 earned, had increased from $64.40 in 1911 to $69.44 in 1914; that the taxes paid by the company had increased form $3.41 in 1911 to $3.68 in 1914, and that in 1911 there was carried by the company to its surplus account, out of every $100 earned the sum of $8.82, while in 1914 there was carried to such surplus account only the sum of $6.52.

At the conclusion of Mr. Jeffries' address, the railroad commission gave him a written statement to the effect that the commission several weeks ago had taken cognizance of the financial condition of the railroads, and that, at present, no further orders would be made by the commission looking to further improvements unless of an imperative nature.

All the members of the commission were present at the meeting, and all signed the statement granting the temporary relief desired by the Southern railway.

Verdict Obtained by Chance.

Because the verdict of two years imprisonment imposed on him by a Randolph county jury was the result of the defendant's poor hand in a game of chance, Monroe Clifton was paroled by Governor O'Neal after serving twenty months of the sentences imposed.

Clifton was tried in Randolph county at the spring term of Circuit Court in 1913. The jury retired and on the first ballot eleven stood for acquittal and one for conviction. The one was obdurate and the jury decided to prepare two slips of paper bearing the words, "Guilty" and "Not guilty." Thes slips were put into a hat and a juror drew from the hat the one marked "Guilty." Clifton served twenty months of his sentence of two years when some friends secured affidavits telling of the lottery in which Clifton had lost.

Other successful applicants for executive clemency are as follows:

Charles Barker, sentenced from Cherokee county to fifteen years for second degree murder in 1911.

Mark Knight sentenced from Conecuh county to life imprisonment for murder in 1893. In this case the pardon board states there was much doubt as to the guilt of the defendant.

Lee Grant, sentenced from Clark county to forty years for second degree murder in 1895. This petition bore the signature of the presiding judge the prosecuting attorney and many reputable citizens of the district where the crime was committed.

George Harmon, sentenced from Bibb county to eight years far assault with intent to murder in 1910.

Andrew Busick, sentenced from Blount county to five years for second degree murder in 1913.

Lets Contract for Road.

State Highway Engineer Keller returned from Ozark and reports the letting of the contract for the construction of a State-aid highway between Ozark and Ariton. Work upon the project will be begun immediately.

Negro Convict Escapes.

Robert McKleroy, a negro, doing ten years from Jefferson county for robbery, escaped from the Monroe county turpentine camp. A reward of $50 is offered.

Plant Less Cotton.

W. H. Seymour of Montgomery, President of the Alabama Division, Southern Cotton Association, is pleading with farmers in all counties of Alabama to make a pledge that no cotton will be planted next year. Mr. Seymour claims farmers should inaugurate the plan without the command of the Legislature, but believes the State Legislature should pass laws immediately which would prevent from growing cotton those who will not listen to logic and argument.

WANTED THE SWILL

Republicans in the Role of Political Tricksters.

Ready Enough to Take Their Share of "Pork Barrel," But Make Things Appear Otherwise in Congressional Record.

When the river and harbor bill passed the house, some weeks ago, carrying about $53,000,000 of actual appropriations, and authorizations for additional projects for which appropriation must be made in the future, Congressman Frear declared that the measure really involved an ultimate expenditure of about $91,000,000.

He was not very far from the facts.

But despite his analyses of the frauds in the bill, despite his warnings and protests, the measure passed without any serious objection by either Republicans or Democrats.

Republicans were getting their full share of the pork, and wanted it to pass. They made no fight on it.

Then the bill went to the senate; the opposition made there a splendid fight, and at length compelled a complete reorganization, which cut the bill to $20,000,000. In this shape it went back to the house.

Then came the display of cheap politics. From the Republican side came a motion to reduce the bill's total to $5,000,000, for maintenance only.

The Republican strength voted for this amendment; the Democrats against it. A record vote was made; Republicans appear in the patriotic posture of trying to save $15,000,000 more, while Democrats appear solidly lined up at the trough to get that swag.

Very cheap and nasty politics. The same Republicans who were ready and anxious to grab the original $90,000,000 worth of pork, when they thought nobody was looking; who gladly united with the enemy in making way with their share of the loot; who had no ear for warnings or protests, but who wanted the swill just as much as the Democrats did—these Republicans now manage to put into the Record a rollcall on which they will tell the country that they tried to save $15,000,000 more, but the Democrats wouldn't let them do it.

Nothing lies so effectively as the Record—when it's manipulated right. —Washington Times.

The New Politics.

The Progressive party represents a new attitude of mind toward politics. It means a facing front, an abandonment of outworn issues and outworn methods, an honest meeting of modern problems by modern methods.

This attitude of the party, reflected by such leaders as Roosevelt in the national field, Allen and Murdock in Kansas and Sager in Missouri, is bound to win in the long run because it is right. The flintlock, as Colonel Roosevelt said in Kansas City, Kan., recently, can't hold its own against the modern high power rifle. The old political methods fail to meet the situation. They must give way to new methods adapted to modern conditions.

Putting the Situation Plainly.

We Progressives are trying to give to the plain men and plain women of the nation the power to run their own government. That is why we are trying to secure the initiative, the referendum and the recall.

We have a constructive, a sane program of social and political reform which we advocate in the interest of the wage worker, and we ask you working men, you business men, you farmers, not only to support this program for itself, but to support it because in addition thereto we propose to give into your own hands the power to deal directly with any matter that to have at heart, when your representatives prove false to you.—Theodore Roosevelt.

A Barometer.

The receptions given Roosevelt on his western tour furnish an accurate index of the character of the Republican party and its candidates in the states he visited. In Kansas, Illinois and Indiana, where the reactionaries still dominate the Republican party, his receptions were ovations scarcely less demonstrative than he received in the days when he was a candidate himself.—Sioux City Tribune.

Sees Things as They Are.

Colonel Roosevelt refers to the peace treaties that are being negotiated at Washington "by the bushel full," to quote his own words, as mere scraps of paper unless backed up by suitable defensive preparedness on the part of this country to see to it that their terms are respected. The colonel is of the opinion that the millennial dawn is some distance in the future.

People Themselves to Blame.

The great cause of public extravagance in the main is popular numbness. A share of the people are frankly in favor of the distribution of fat appropriations. A larger share is friendly to the "pork" that is expended for their benefit, but inimical to that conferred on other sections. Anyhow it seems bound to go on until the public comes to itself and marks for defeat those of its representatives who go in for "the old flag and an appropriation."

ARE IN THE FIGHT TO WIN

Henry J. Allen's Splendid Definition of the Attitude of the True Progressives.

Henry J. Allen, carrying the Progressive flag, recently made a flying motor trip through Osage county, Kansas. In five cities, covering a distance of 60 miles, Mr. Allen scattered the message of "justice, law and order," new rule for county government, minimum wage scale for women, factory inspection, child labor laws, national prohibition and national equal suffrage as advocated by the Progressive platform.

"What is it to us," Mr. Allen said, "whether, in this splendid fight we help the Democrats or injure the Republicans? The men who quit the Progressives and went back to the grand old party when the fighting became hard and the chance for office seemed to grow less, have missed the whole purpose of this movement. They never had the vision; never knew what we were trying to do.

"When I started into this fight some of the people would come to me and say: 'Allen, I would like to vote for you and Murdock if I thought there was any chance of your election.'

"'For mercy's sake,' I said, 'take something for your backbone. We are in this fight to win.'"

TIME TO FORGET OLD ISSUES

An appeal to the Republican voters of New York, signed by Nicholas Murray Butler and two respectable associates, on behalf of a senatorial candidate, was published as an advertisement in New York newspapers the day before the primary. "He comes of a long line of Republicans," says the appeal. "His grandfather was killed in the Battle of the Wilderness, while his father and two uncles served in the Union armies."

It is characteristic of both the old parties to base an appeal on issues long past. Republicans are still asking for votes on the ground that their fathers and grandfathers were opposed to the extension of slavery in the territories, and Democrats are pointing out the virtues of Jefferson and Jackson.

Isn't it time to face front and vote on the men and issues of today instead of on the men and issues of sixty or a hundred years ago?

Evils Will Be Abolished.

In the old days of convention rule the evils of the long ballot were not so noticeable, because the party bosses kindly did the work of the voters in selecting the nominees. The people were required merely to make a choice on election day of one of the two or possibly three machine-made tickets. Even that task was simplified by the device of the party column and the party circle, so that each voter was enabled to support a long list of nominees by making two little marks with a pencil in a circle at the top of the ballot.

When the people demanded and secured the right to make the nominations themselves, under the direct primary system, the folly of the long ballot became clear even to the least observant. That in itself is a great gain. Voters suffering from political anesthesia brought on by party bossism were in no position to have knowledge of existing political evils. Now they are awake and the evils will have to be abolished.

"Going-Out" Party.

The Illinois State Register, a Democratic newspaper, concludes its comment on the present senatorial situation in this fashion: "Republicans in this state know Roosevelt's strength among progressive Republicans. They recall that in 1912 the head of the Republican ticket—Mr. Taft—ran a very poor third. This fact, with Roosevelt again on the war path, places before Sherman and his group of generals the specter of third place for Sherman in the big triangular senatorial race with Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Robins. Little wonder they are raving mad. Imagine what it will mean to the Republican party of this great and once Republican state for the Republican senatorial candidate to finish third. The G. O. P. is truly a going-out party!"

Colonel in "Wet" Denial.

Col. Theodore Roosevelt sent a message to William E. Johnson of the Anti-Saloon league at Portland, Ore., denouncing as untrue reports that he had declared against state-wide prohibition, which is an issue in Oregon this year.

"I have made no statements of any kind or sort against state-wide prohibition," said Colonel Roosevelt.

Omission Was Wise.

The Democratic textbook is devoted to what the president has done. The compilers evidently felt there was little to be said for congress.

Not Convinced as to War Taxes.

In Mr. Wilson the country has great confidence. It was not, however, wholly convinced by his message that new internal taxes were immediately necessary. Other expedients seemed possible. The nation can borrow on easy terms. It need not sell long-term bonds. Short-term treasury bills might be issued. And more economy in expenditure might be practiced. That is the fact that will be found to have bitten into the average voter's mind.

GHENT ONCE MORE IN HANDS OF GERMANS AFTER DESPERATE FIGHT

London.—The Chronicle's correspondent, Martin Donohue, under date "In Belgium, Monday night," says:

"Ghent is once more under German occupation. On Saturday and Sunday a heroic effort was made to save the city from the consequences of a fresh German visitation. The fight around Melle on Saturday turned to the advantage of the defenders, as did that on Sunday. The combatants were within 100 yards of one another's positions. Hundreds of wounded were lying unaided and uncared for in the immediate front of the two opposing armies. The Germans' rifle fire during the night had been continuous. They fired on every one approaching their lines, and did not discriminate between combatants and noncombatants.

Retreat Decided On.

"It was a critical moment. There was not much time for reflection, and after a careful review of the situation a general retreat was decided upon. The Germans appeared to be in great strength, but the defending force was holding on undismayed by the fury of the German infantry assaults, supported by heavy artillery.

"There were no trains from Ghent towards the coast towns, but vehicles of every description, from dogcarts to ramshackle horse wagons, were requisitioned, and the inhabitants of Ghent fled with some show of confusion from the enemy approaching their gates. By midnight the last citizen who could scrape together money to hire a vehicle of any kind, the last soldier, and a large proportion of the wounded had quitted the city, taking the road to Bruges and Ostend.

"The streets of the city were silent and deserted, and the Hotel de Poste, which had been used as a residence by the headquarters staff and the correspondents, was practically empty.

Red Cross Nurses Brave.

"There are 12 wounded in the hotel attended by two nurses of the Belgian Red Cross society, who bravely refused to quit their charges, even when the doctors and stretcher bearers abandoned their posts and vanished from Ghent. The wounded were in a feverish state of excitement. Somehow, the news of the evacuation reached their ears, and they implored the nurses to have them transported elsewhere, for not one of them relished the idea of falling wounded into the hands of the Germans.

"It was in vain we sought aid from the city authorities, who were more or less distracted at the prospect of a fresh German incursion. They frankly said they had no aid to give and no doubt they were right.

Fears for Brother.

"At 6 a. m. the wounded were still in the hotel, fretting at the long delay. No vehicle, not even a dog cart, was obtainable, and Germans might appear at any moment.

"One of the nurses, Mlle. Baerdemaker, whose brother was severely wounded and was lying in the hotel, had bravely faced the ordeal of the long night vigil, but now she began to show some signs of the emotion that was racking her sisterly heart.

"When things looked the blackest, Mr. Van Hee, the American vice-consul, brought his automobile to the hotel door. He was on his way to Brussels, and had called for a friend who was to accompany him.

"Mr. Van Hee is a big-hearted, sympathetic American, and when he heard of the plight of the wounded, his eyes filled with tears.

"'Bother Brussels and official missions,' he said. 'I will never leave these poor boys to be taken prisoners by the Germans.'

"He was as good as his word. In a few minutes the wounded had been brought down and the consular car made several trips to the railway station. Every man was taken away from the hotel and placed on board a military train which was in readiness to leave for Ostend.

Saves More Wounded.

"Afterwards Mr. Van Hee took his automobile to the military hospital and carried off six wounded soldiers whose wounds precluded them from walking. They had been carried on stretchers.

"Many of the wounded left behind in the military hospital who were able to walk had earlier in the morning made a brave attempt to save themselves.

"Some hobbled forth painfully, supporting tottering limbs with the aid of improvised crutches. Others were helped along by the kindly arm of a lad or a woman who had come forward in answer to the appeal for aid. It was a walk of over half a mile on a paved road from the hospital to the railway station.

"One train filled with wounded did get away from the city before the entry of the Germans, but a second, also loaded with brave fellows who had bled for their country, was left behind and abandoned to the enemy.

"There were no doctors, and but few nurses to assuage the pain of the wounded, and, to add to the horror of it all, there was the unsympathetic foe to gloat over their misery and helplessness."

RELATES HORRORS OF SHELLING OF ANTWERP

London.—Henry Diederich, the United States consul at Antwerp, escaped with his family from that city by motor car. This is his account of the bombardment as told to the Daily Chronicle correspondent:

"For days we heard the sound of heavy gunfire and were told of the fall, one after another, of the outer forts. It soon became apparent that nothing could avail against the great German cannon, and in conjunction with other neutrals we endeavored to mediate with the Germans, to spare, at any rate, some of the most valuable buildings of world-wide interest. But the negotiations failed to lead to a successful result.

"I had intended to remain in Antwerp throughout the bombardment, which we saw was now inevitable, but I was told to clear out of the city, as its destruction was inevitable.

"I did not realize until almost too late the horror which was coming. At 11 o'clock at night we were going to bed, when we were roused by frightful noises in the air, reminding us of previous visits of a Zeppelin.

"Soon we realized that the bombardment had begun, and then I had the most horrible experience of my life.

"I went with my family to the basement and we crouched there all night. The shells, falling every few minutes, came with a dreadful whistling sound, followed by a thunder clap of explosion and collapse of buildings.

"Opposite the consulate is the Home for Old Folks. Its front was torn out by a shell. Some of the debris was scattered over my house, and then a shell came over us, and fell on a two-story building, crumpling it up entirely and setting it on fire.

After this another shell blew out the facade of a house lower down on our street. As the dawn came we were wearied out and the members of my family collapsed utterly from fright and the strain.

"So we decided to endeavor to leave the city. I succeeded in communicating with my chauffeur and got my car, but I did not know where to go, being left with nothing but what we had on and exposed every moment to exploding shells.

"With my wife and daughter and two servants and a refugee's child I crossed the pontoon bridge over the Scheldt. It took us four hours to do this, the streets being filled with every kind of vehicle and a dense crowd of fugitives. The scene was indescribably dreadful, everybody being moved by the same desire to get away from the awful horror.

"From Antwerp to Ghent the roads are a mass of fleeing humanity. As we left we saw vast volumes of smoke arising from Antwerp from the burning buildings and blazing petroleum tanks. Instead of two hours to Ghent it took us three, owing to the traffic. One of the German big guns situated near Vilvorde and a large number of comparatively smaller guns have joined in the bombardment."

Big Guns Not Used on City.

Paris.—The German commander at Antwerp says the famous 16½-inch guns were not used on the town itself. They would have been used, however, had the surrender not occurred when it did. The commandant is sending word to Belgian fugitives in Holland to return as soon as possible. He said the German losses are trifling. He insisted that several thousand English, French and Belgians who have been captured were glad to fall into German hands.

A Dutch reporter escorted by the commandant went through the streets, but saw no sign of Belgian life except a few straying dogs. German soldiers were walking about asking their way. The town is little damaged.

Jews Fight in German Army.

Rome.—Heretofore, although there is no law prohibiting Jews from entering, no Israelite officer existed in the German army. Since this war began, according to news received here, more than one hundred and fifty Jewish officers have been joined to the German army.

Costs Britain $55 a Second.

London.—"This war is costing the country £11 ($55) a second day and night," said Sidney Webb, well known as a political economist, in a lecture at the School of Economics and Political Science, of which he was the principal founder.

TRIO OF FRENCHMEN ARMY IN THEMSELVES

Bordeaux.—The story of how three French soldiers captured two German quick-firers and put to flight two companies of German infantry is related in a letter from the front.

Two corporals and a private soldier, in reconnoitering, crawled within ten yards of the German trenches. Most of the German soldiers were away to get dinner, and the officers were some distance back of the guns.

The three Frenchmen sprang into the trenches and turned the guns on the unsuspecting Germans, who fled, communicating the panic to two companies. French artillerymen who had been watching the proceedings then opened fire and exterminated the Germans.

The same night the two corporals were made second lieutenants and the soldier was made a sergeant major as a reward for their daring.

Not many stockholders' meetings are opened with prayer.

GERMANS SWEEPING THE BELGIAN COAST

PARIS CLAIMS ADVANCES—SAY BRITISH HAVE CAPTURED FROMELLES.

FOUR GERMAN BOATS SUNK

Engagement Takes Place in North Sea. Revenge Sinking of Hawke—Major-General Hamilton Is Killed in Battle.

New York.—While the armies of the allies and the German invaders are preparing their mighty lines stretching from the Belgian coast southward for a great battle, the ships of war in the North Sea again are showing activity. The British have revenged the sinking of the cruiser Hawke by a German submarine, with a swift descent upon four German torpedo boat destroyers, which they sent to the bottom.

Capt. Cecil H. Fox, who was commander of the ill-fated cruiser Amphion, destroyed by a German mine on August 6, was in command of the light cruiser Undaunted and the four British torpedo boat destroyers Lance, Lennox, Legion and Loyal, which engaged the Germans off the Dutch coast. The battle must have been fast, for the British had only one officer and four men wounded, while the official report issued by the admiralty says 31 survivors of the German destroyers are prisoners of war. This would mean that nearly 400 Germans went down with their ships.

In the land fighting the British troops have captured Fromelles, an important position southwest of Lille, on the French left, while the French commander has been receiving aid from sailors of the French fleet on the important strategic position between Ypres and the sea. The French sailors are said to have repulsed a German attack and captured detachments of cavalry and infantry.

That the Germans are trying to move down the North Sea coast to Dunkirk and Calais is certain, but just how far south of Ostend they have proceeded is not known. Reports of fighting in the neighborhood of Dunkirk are not generally credited.

The latest British casualty list includes among the killed Major-General H. I. W. Hamilton, who was closely associated with Field Marshal Kitchener in South Africa and India.

GERMANS BEFORE WARSAW

Russia Preparing for Decisive Battle. Fight Along Vistula Most Important Action.

London.—A dispatch to the Observer from Petrograd says:

"The Grand Duke Nicholas has elected to fight a decisive battle on his own territory.

"Russian troops who had penetrated almost to Cracow have been withdrawn to a line running from the Carpathians, south of Przemysl, thence northward along the San and the Vistula rivers, a distance of more than 200 miles. Fighting all along this wide front has been in progress for several days, with results entirely satisfactory to the Russians.

"It is universally believed that Silesia will be chosen as the arena for a great struggle. The roads are sloughs and the railways too sparse to feed the millions that make the modern army. Already the roads are littered with dead horses and automobiles helplessly bogged. Already the Germans are reduced to commandeering wretched peasant horses in a land where the Russians swept up everything worthy of the name of horse."

PARIS CLAIMS ADVANCES

Heaviest Fighting Is Waged Along Belgian Coast—Objective Point Believed to Be Dunkirk.

Paris.—The official communication issued by the French war office says:

"On the front there has been only cannonading.

"On our left wing progress continues. The British troops have captured Fromelles, to the southwest of Lille.

"On the Ypres canal to the sea our soldiers and marines have repulsed a German attack.

"In Belgium the German troops occupying Western Belgium have not crossed the line running from Ostend to Thorout to Roulers to Menin. There is relative quiet along the greater part of the front. On our left wing there has been no change. In the region of Ypres, on the right bank of the Lys, the allied troops have occupied Felelurbaix, as well as the immediate approaches to Armentieres."

Germans Arrested.

Paris.—Sixty-four Germans, men from 18 to 25 years old, were arrested in Paris. Though being of military age, they had been allowed to remain here under permits issued to such aliens.

Hollweg to See Kaiser.

Berlin.—Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the German imperial chancellor, who went to Brussels, left there for general headquarters to report to Emperor William.

GREAT BRITAIN'S AVIATION STRATEGISTS

MANY FLEEING TO ENGLAND

State of Panic Exists Among Inhabitants of Ostend—Germans Only Twenty Miles Away.

New York.—Ostend is now the center of interest in the contest being waged in the western theater of war. Reports indicate there is virtually no obstacle in the way of the German advance on Ostend and other ports in Northwest Belgium.

Scores of wounded soldiers are being brought into Ostend from Ghent. It is said that the German forces were far superior in numbers and that the allies were obliged to withdraw toward the west. This removed the stumbling block in the way of German progress toward Ostend.

A state of panic exists among the inhabitants of Ostend, for the Germans are known to have a large force within twenty miles of the city. As fast as ships can be provided the residents are fleeing to England, escape by land having been cut off on all sides.

BELGIANS MOVE TO FRANCE

French Provide Temporary Quarters for Government Officials at Havre. King Stays at Front.

London.—A dispatch to the Daily News from Ostend says:

"The Germans are approaching Ostend by three roads—from Ypres by way of Dixmude, from Coutrai through Thourout and from Eecloo through Bruges."

Bordeaux.—It has been decided to transfer the Belgian government to France, in order that it may have full liberty of action.

The foregoing was announced officially in Bordeaux.

Several Belgian ministers, accompanied by a grop of officials, left Ostend for Havre, where the French government has prepared temporary offices for them.

King Albert remains at the head of the Belgian army.

RUSSIANS DENY DEFEAT

Officials Say Przemysl Siege Progressing Nicely—Forts Being Destroyed—Energetic Resistance.

London.—It is officially announced at Petrograd that the siege of Przemysl is progressing, according to a Reuter dispatch from the Russian capital. The Russian artillery is rapidly destroying the forts, which, however, continue an energetic resistance.

The Przemysl garrison, it is further announced, does not exceel 30,000 men.

Paris.—The following official communication, given out in Petrograd, has been received by the Havas agency:

"Operations continue to develop on our front, which extends from the region of Warsaw along the rivers Vistula and San to Przemysl and south as far as river Dniester.

Germany Sends $5,000,000.

London.—The Exchange Telegraph's Athens correspondent says he has learned from a reliable source that $5,000,000 has reached Constantinople from Germany.

Arrive in Havre.

Havre.—The steamer Peter de Coninck arrived from Ostend bearing the members of the Belgian government. The Belgians were received with military honors and given an enthusiastic reception by the crowds on their arrival.

Stock Exchange Will Reopen.

Toronto.—The necessary resolutions were passed for reopening the Toronto Stock Exchange on a limited basis.

SAY LOSSES WERE HEAVY

Both Russians and Austro-Germans Claim Victory—Berlin Says Siege of Prezmysl Abandoned.

London.—The following German official statement was received here by the Marconi Wireless Telegraph company:

"It is reported officially from Vienna that our cavalry has entered the fortress of Przemysl, Galicia, from the west. The enemy, perplexed by the rapidity of our operations in Russian Poland and Galicia, tried in vain to prevent our relief of the fortress by dispatching troops to the west. They were unable, however, to resist the advance of our army.

"The fifth and sixth Russian infantry divisions attacked by us have fled in the direction of the River San.

"A Cossack cavalry division and an infantry brigade in a strong position west of Dynow, Galicia, were defeated after brief resistance."

Petrograd.—The Russian general staff issued the following statement:

"There is no change to report on the East Prussian and Central Vistula fronts.

"South of Przemysl a Russian column engaged and defeated the Austrians, taking seven officers and 500 soldiers prisoners and capturing many rapid fire guns."

GERMANS OVERRUN BELGIUM

Battle in France Continues Without Important Changes—Big Fight Near Arias.

London.—The official press bureau issued the following statement:

"British troops have been engaged with the enemy toward the left of the allied line (in France), with the result that the Germans have been pressed back slightly on their flank.

"The nature of the country in which the fighting has been conducted, being a mining center, makes rapid progress difficult."

Paris.—The official communication issued by the war office says:

"The reports received, which are in very general terms, indicate no important modification in the situation."

Earlier in the day the following official announcement was given out:

"In the Belgian field of operations there were some encounters in the region around Ghent. French and English troops have occupied Ypres.

"First—On our left wings, as far as the Oise, the operations are developing normally.

"Second—On the center pervious reports of the progress of our armies in the region of Berry-Au-Bac have been confirmed.

"Third—On our right wing there is nothing new."

London.—While it fully is expected the Germans will reach Ostend and other ports in the northwest of Belgium, if they have not done so already, they will meet stubborn resistance in their attempt to extend the right wing of their main army through Pas del Calais to the French northern ports. In fact, they have fallen back in this region in the face of the allies' offensive.

Trawler Hits Mine.

London.—The steam trawler Ajax, out of Grimsby, has been blown up in the North Sea by a German mine. Nine members of the crew lost their lives.

Paris.—News was received in Paris of the death of Gen. Rondony, commander of the Third brigade of the French colonial infantry, killed while leading his brigade against the enemy. Two English nurses were killed by a shell while on duty in a field hospital behind the center of the allied armies.

Paris.—A dispatch to the Havas agency from Rome says:

"Cases of cholera are mutilplying rapidly in Galicia, Transylvania and North and East Hungary. The fear is expressed that the disease will prove a serious menace to military operations."

GERMAN ADVANCE IS TOWARD LONDON

OSTEND OCCUPIED BY GERMANS. ONLY 65 MILES ACROSS SEA TO DOVER.

115 MILES FROM LONDON

Marquis di San Guiliano, Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs, Dead. Hard Fight on Left Wing. British Boat Sunk.

New York.—Ostend, the famous Belgian resort on the North Sea, has been occupied by the troops of Emperor William, according to a German official report arriving from Berlin by way of London. If this report is true, the Germans have reached the goal for which they aimed immediately after they captured Antwerp. Their forces now are only 65 miles across the sea from Dover and 115 miles from London. On their way to Ostend the Germans also took Bruges, which previously was reported to have been deserted and where no resistance was expected.

The latest French official report says that the fighting continues vigorously and that in the vicinity of Lille ground has been gained by the allies.

Farther to the east, along the battle line that now stretches from the North Sea to the Swiss frontier, a repulse of the Germans near Malancourt is chronicled.

A newspaper dispatch declares that a German column has been hurled back with heavy casualties by the allies in the Vosges. Another newspaper report has it that the Germans have been driven from Lille.

Fighting is still going on between the Austro-German and Russian armies near Warsaw, and the Galician fortress of Przemysl continues to hold out against the attacks of the Russians.

In the south the Servian and Montenegrin troops claim a victory at Glasinatz, Bosnia, over the Austrians.

Commandants representing all the Orange Free State north of Bloemfontein have placed their services at the disposal of Botha, commander-in-chief of the forces of the Union of South Africa.

The Marquis di San Giuliano, Italian minister of foreign affairs, is dead. The marquis was said to have been friendly to Germany. He was reputed to be opposed to the sympathy in Italy for the allies and the hostility toward Austria. The Italian premier, Signor Salandra, will take temporarily the portfolio of foreign affairs. It is said that the death of the Marquis di San Giuliano will not affect Italy's foreign policy.

In the sinking of the British cruiser Hawke by a German submarine, only one officer and 62 enlisted men of her crew of 400 are known to have been rescued.

Paris Says Estaires, North of River Lys, Is Taken—Advance North of Rheims.

Paris.—The official communication issued by the French war office says:

"The news indicates gains at several points along the front.

"On the left wing, to the north of Lys, we have taken Estaires. On the center, to the north and east of Rheims, we have made an advance of nearly two kilometers (about a mile and a quarter).

"On the heights of the Meuse and in the Woevre region we have made gains to the south of St. Mihiel and near Marchville."

London.—Two great battles, one in Northern France and Belgium, the other in Russian Poland,, both with a front of 300 miles, have reached their height, but the public is allowed only an ocasional glance of their progress through official communications, which frequently are widely at variance.

From the French report it appears that the western battle is going slowly but surely in favor of the allies. Under the pressure of the troops of the allies, the Germans, who started to advance on Calais and other French coast ports, have been forced to evacuate the left bank of the Lys river, which is a considerable distance east of the points their advance guards reached last week. Further east, in the Lens district, and southward between Arras and Albert, where the Germans made their first attempt to work around the allies' left, the English and French have made "notable progress."

London.—A Central News dispatch from Rome says:

"According to a telegram from Constantinople published here, Turkey has informed Germany that owing to a lack of money she will have to demobilize her army."

London.—The Morning Telegraph Rome correspondent telegraphs from Vienna that Bucharest states that an engagement has taken place in the Black sea between the Russian squadron and the Goeben and Breslau.

The "headquarters" committee of the Alabama Anti-Saloon League, at its meeting in Birmingham issued a call for a convention of members of the league for Montgomery January 26 and 27, next year.

After a spirited contest between Birmingham and Montgomery for the 1915 convention of the Alabama Educational Association before the executive committee of the association at a meeting held at the Hillman Hotel in Birmingham, Montgomery was victorious. Following the selection of the next meeting place, April 1, 2 and 3 were fixed as the date of the 1915 convention.

The coroner's jury at Birmingham investigating the gas explosion in Mulga mines of Woodward Iron Company on October 5th, in which sixteen men were killed, returned a verdict blaming the company. The trap door of the mine was broken, it is claimed, and this broke the air circuit and the resulting accumulation of gas exploded when a naked lamp came in contact with it.

At the request of a constituent, Representative Dent introduced a bill at Washington to amend the law under which Alabama is divided between three federal judicial districts. The amendment would take scambia and Conecuh counties out of the Southern distrito and place them in the Middle district. Further, it would create a division in the Middle district to be composed of Conecuh, Butler, Escambia, Coffee, Crenshaw and Covington counties, with headquarters at Andalusia.

Should the Governor of Alabama call an extra session of the legislature for the purpose of considering relief measures for the farmers of the state, he will not advocate the issuance of $40,000,000 of bonds to take up a part of the state's cotton at 10 cents a pound nor will he advocate any other paternal measure. The governor declared that he is seriously considering the cotton problem, and indicated that he might call the legislature into extraordinary session. However, he will not do so, as he has repeatedly declared, until some practical plan of relief has been recommended.

The entomological department of the Alabama experiment station at Auburn has just completed the first general investigations to determine the boll weevil advance up to this date and find that there has been a very extensive movement forward in the northern half of the State, but little if any advance in the southeastern third of the State. It has been impossible in this general examination to locate the line in each county that may be crossed by it. The advance will continue until frost kills the cotton, so that the final line for 1914 may vary widely from that indicated for October 10.

The Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company will ship from the Bessemer yards, 700 tons of export iron for Genoa, Italy. The shipment will go to Savannah, Ga., and will be loaded on a British ship for the Mediterranean port. Al lthe protections of war will be thrown around the shipment and the company will be protected in the event that any damage or loss results.

No man is so illiterate that he cannot teach others something.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets first put up 40 years ago. They regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated tiny granules. Adv.

They say it's good luck to pick up pins, but you can't make the boy who works in a bowling alley believe it.

Her Reason.

Jess—It was a moving picture.—Judge.

War Observer.

"What's the matter; scared o' that boy that's chasing you?"

"No."

"Then what are you running away from him for?"

"I'm not running away. I'm just retreating for strategical purposes."—Detroit Free Press.

His Jargon in Doubt.

"That your cart outside?" asked the chauffeur.

"Ay, it be," replied the village grocer.

The chauffeur gave a superior smile. "I wonder you fellows don't get tired," he said, "joggin' along in them old, ramshackle carts."

"What pleases one doesn't please 'nother," replied the grocer philosophically.

"Should rather say not!" exclaimed the chauffeur. "I s'pose you get used to it. But look at my car outside! I can drive that car over sixty an hour!"

"Which—dogs or chickens?" asked the grocer.

FOUND OUT.
A Trained Nurse Discovered Its Effect.

No one is in better position to know the value of food and drink than a trained nurse.

Speaking of coffee, a nurse in Pa., writes: "I used to drink strong coffee myself, and suffered greatly from headaches and indigestion.

"While on a visit to my brothers I had a good chance to try Postum, for they drank it altogether in place of coffee. After using Postum two weeks I found I was much benefited and finally my headaches disappeared and also the indigestion.

"Naturally I have since used Postum among my patients, and have noticed a marked benefit where coffee has been left off and Postum used.

"I observe a curious fact about Postum when used by mothers. It greatly helps the flow of milk in cases where coffee is inclined to dry it up, and where tea causes nervousness.

"I find trouble in getting servants to make Postum properly. But when it is prepared according to directions on package and served hot with cream, it is certainly a delicious beverage."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 20c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, made a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

Congressman Hobsn has refused to make speeches for any of the Democratic nominees in this state, saying his duties demand him at Washington. However, Mr. Underwood will make speeches, as he is one to be voted on in November.

When the Democratic Campaign Committee called on Congressman Blackmon and Burnett for suggestions, Mr. Burnett said he needed help in Franklin, St. Clair and Winston counties, where the Republicans and Progressives were strong. Mr. Blackmon said he needed help in Chilton Shelby and Cleburn, for the same reason.

We notice some of the daily papers constantly speak of Mr. L. R. Sawyer as the next Representative in the State Legislature from Chilton county. Someone should inform them that we have a Bull Moose candidate in the race; but they will know it after November 3rd. They will also wonder what becam of Roy when they begin to look around for his vote on woman sufferage and other things.

Let our voters not overlook the fact that we have a most efficient and worthy candidate for State Senator from this district, in the person of Hon. P. E. Alexander of Prattville. Mr. Alexander is a very able man, and by all means should be given the seat in the senate to which he aspires. Let the Progressives of this county accord to him all the support that lies within them, and send to the Senate this man who champions the noble elements of government that are embodied in the doctrine of the Progressive party.

The Democrats seems to be somewhat aroused over the accusations by the Progressive speakers that their party is running without any headlight. Wonder if they have thought how it sounds for their candidates for Sheriff to be handing out campaign cards that do not state what party he is running in? Of course this is a privileg of that candidate, to be exercised as he sees fit; but it seems that if he is on the Democratic ticket he should so state it on his card, and let the people know where he really is. He certainly does not want any man to vote for him without first knowing exactly what his party affilliations are.

The Democrats seem to think they have found some argument in the fact that once—ONE TIME—when there was a Republican administration in this country, there was a slightly stringent time in the business affairs of the nation. The only difference between hard times under a Democratic administration and under a Republican administration is that in the former case it is the rule and in the latter it is the exception to the rule. They have only one of the many Republican administrations in this country at which they can shoot the argument of hard-times; and that time was only of short duration, and cotton did not get below 6 3-4 cents. On the other hand there has not been ONE SINGLE INSTANCE in the history of this country when the democrats were in power that we did not have a panic and hard times. Whom would you suspect of going wrong, one who has never done anything but wrongs, or one who, in a lifetime has committed only one act of misconduct?

In explaining the reason the south has not received any aid from the national government, Mr. Curry at Mulberry Monday night said it was because the wisdom of President Wilson was being exercised to keep the country out of debt. He said the great and honest heart of Woodrow realizes that where there is debt, there must be a pay day some time or other. This we all know is true.

But over at Fairview Saturday night Mr. Curry stated that he was in favor of a county debt. Does he not think that there will be a pay day for Chilton County's debts, just as he says there must be a pay day for a national debt? Now how is he to reconcile his two statements? If the Democratic policy in the nation is to stay out of debt, why are they so anxious to sink the county into warrent issues of thousands of dollars? Pay day is coming some time, just as Mr. Curry says; and mark these words, it will be more tolerable for the United States in that day to pay off a debt sufficient to float the present cotton crop, than for Chilton county to pay off a debt of One hundred thousand dollars to build a Birmingham-Montgomery highway through its borders.

Come to Clanton on Friday and Saturday, October 30 and 31, and register for the general election. Don,t forget it.

PEACE ACHIEVEMENTS OF MR. ROOSEVELT.

In his speech at the court house Saturday, Hon. Ray Rushton made the assertion that Mr. Roosevelt belonged to the same class as the Kaiser of Germany, when it comes to military matters and war-making. We were somewhat surprised to hear Mr. Rushton make such a statement, considering the conservatism with which the larger part of his address was marked. He surely must have failed to remember the credits which Mr. Roosevelt have in his favor for actions on peace movements while he was ruler of this nation. The semi-foreign requirements of the Panama Canal, and the government of the Phillippine Islands were managed with ability and success, and such international questions as the Venezula dispute, and the calling of a second Hague Conference added to his standing in European estimation. This was redoubled by his useful service in bringing about a treaty of peace between Russia and Japan, and at the close of his term on March 4, 1909, President Roosevelt was looked upon as one of the greatest and most forcible among the rulers of the world. His several movements in the interest of peace were acknowledged by the award to him of the Nobel Peace Prize. With this he endowed a fonndation for the promotion of industrial peace.

We cannot see how President Roosevlt, with such a record as that behind him can be called militant and fire-eating, and always seeking to stir up some kind of trouble.

Yes, we believe that if he had been President in Mr. Wilson's place, the Mexican question would have been settled long before it was (if we may be sure it is already settled); not saying, however, that he would have assembled his rough riders and marched into the country south of us and demanded settlement, but we believe that his superior experience in international peace and government affairs would have enabled him to reach a more hasty and just as satisfactory conclusion of the matter as Mr. Wilson has done.

Over at Mulberry Monday night the people thought "shore" Mr. Curry had the editor of the Union-Banner up a tree about this Democratic platform business when he (Mr. Curry) exhibited a little green backed book which he said was IT—that which the Union-Banner had offered $500 for—the Democratic platform for the year and campaign of 1914. Of coure Mr. Curry knew what it was he was showing as the 1914 platform, but probably the people didn't; and from the way some of them cheered him, we imagine the speaker winked to himself that he had sunk that point deep into his contemporaries, and "broke it off."

But a few minutes later Judge Reynolds took the floor, and the first subject he took up was the platform matter. He first offered Mr. Curry ten dollars to show him the Democratic state platform. Of course the people were surprised that Mr. Curry did not come forward with his little green backed book he had a few minutes before exhibited, and take the ten dollars; but he didn't.

It was revealed that his little green book was a copy of the Democratic national platform of 1912. In reply to Judge Reynolds Mr. Curry stated that the democrats had made no platform for the past four years in this state; and stated furthermore that they didn't need any new one. Well, we suppose he was right. For what is the use to go make a new one, when they have not carried out the one they have already?

The Clanton Press said last week that they had it, and would produce it if we would put up the $500. Mow Mr. Curry said openly that they didn't have it; so we wonder what must be the pedigree of the one the Press has—the one which they say is the 1914 model, and which they will expose for $500.

Well, they seem by their platform just as they are with everything: so exorbitant and high priced with it that it is entirely out of reach of the common people. It must indeed be a sympathetic and patriotic party that will not put before the common people a platform, unless they are paid large sums of money as prizes. But it is a fact that they have no platform for 1914. Mr. Curry said so at Mulberry. Now will the Clanton Press be as candid and open? Mr. Curry has told the whole thing; the rest of you had just as well acknowledge it too.

The County Fair
OPENS HERE NEXT MONDAY

This year will, according to allindications received by the management, mark the greatest occasion in the history of the Chilton County Fair. Everything has combined wonderfully toward making this all taround the one Fair most worth your time and attention.

Following are some instructions that should be observed by those who contemplate making entries for the contests:

All stock, except milk cows, must be entered for the entire week. Milk cows must be clean milked not earlier than 5 a.m. Wednesday, and entered not later than 9 o'clock. They will be judged that day, and may be carried home Wednesday night.

On Thursday, Miss Tappan, who has charge of the Girls Tomato club work of the state, will lecture on matters pertaining to her department.

The same day Prof. S. L. Chesnutt will lecture on the subject of improved scientific agriculture, along some lines of immediate importance to the farmers of the county.

The Better Babies Coniest Friday will be an incident of immense value and interest. Babies entering contest will be judged by perfection of physical features; prettiness and good cloths will not be considered. Each baby will be thoroughly examined by the county health officer and the county nurse, who will be the judges in the contest.

The amusement features of the Fair could not be more desirable and complete. The carnival company which will exhibit consists of nine good clean and up-to-date shows—Motordrome, large Ferris Wheel, Merry-go-round, lady high diver, and balloon ascension. Everything clean and entertaining. Nothing will be allowed that is not absolutely legitimate.

Chilton County's splendid agricultural accomplishments will be represented fully, and in the best displayed manner.

All heavy articles for exhibition may be placed on the grounds on Friday or Saturday of this week. Light and delicate articles, such as the culinary exhibits, and women's departments will be placed Monday.

THORSBY NEWS

The newly elected Town Council met on Monday night, October 15th, and elected E. W. Butler as Town Clerk, and Alvin Heaton as Marshall.

Mrs. Leila B. Stratton of Lebanon Tennessee National Lecturer of the woman's Christian Temperance Union was in Thorsby October 7th and 8th, speaking at the Baptist church both nights, and at the schools during the day. A branch of the W. C. T. U. was organized in Thorsby, and the following officers were elected: President Mrs. J. J. Stanley, Vice-Presidedt Mrs. S. H. Herbert, Secretary and Treasurer, Mrs. J. A. Pool.

Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Marshall have moved to Thorsby, and will make this their headquarters for the next few months. Mrs. Marshall, in her capacity as County Nurse, examined the pupils in the schools of Thorsby last week. She was able to make suggestions to many of them that may save a good deal of sickness and expense in years to come.

Thorsby Institute Library is open Tuesdays and Fridays from 3:50 to 4:30 p.m. This library is not only for the students, but for all who like good reading material. You will find interesting books and magazines here, also books for the children.

The meeting of the Helen Keller Literary Society last Friday night was a very enjoyable one. The society has been divided into two parts, one called the Crescent, the other the Stars. Each program is a contest between the two sides. So far the Crescents are one point ahead. Much merriment was created by the "stunts" presented by the two sides.

The opening nomber of the Entertainment Course will be given at Bates Hall next Monday night, October 26th.

Chronic Spring Fever

Surprising as it may seem, a lot of people in the temperate zone, with four seasons a year, have chronic spring fever.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

AN ENTERTAINMENT COURSE AT THORSBY

An Entertainment Course will be given this winter at Thorsby under the joint auspices of the Unity-Chilton Baptist High School and Thorsby Institute. The first number on the course will be a concert by tne Beverly Entertainers to be given at Bates Hall on Monday nigh October 26th, at 8:00 p.m. This concert company consists of four young women artists, who provide a varied program of songs, mandolin and guitar pieces, piano selections, and humorous readings. All who attend will be sure of a treat.

The other numbers on the course will be a lecture by Booth Lowery, an entertainment by W. Powell Hale, Elocutionist, and a second concert by the Alkahest Favorites, a company of three young women artists. It is the purpose of the committee having the course in charge to add to this list, if the sale of tickets will justify it, one or two additional lectures by such men as Prof. Geo. W. Mason, of Howard College, and some Professor from the University of Alabama.

This fine course of entertainments is being offered at the exceedingly low price of $1. for Adult Season Tickets, and 50¢ Student Season tickets. Prices for single admission to the concert next Monday night will be 50¢ and 25¢.

CONSUMPTION TAKES 350 PEOPLE DAILY

Over 350 people succumb to consumption every day in the United States.

Science proves that the germs only thrive when the system is weakened from colds or sickness, overwork, confining duties or when general weakness exists.

The best physicians point out that during changing seasons the blood should be made rich and pure and active by taking Scott's Emulsion after meals. The cod liver oil in Scott's Emulsion warms the body by enriching the blood; it peculiarly strengthens the lungs and throat, while it upbuilds the resistive forces of the body to avoid colds and prevent consumption.

If you work indoors, tire easily, feel languid or nervous, Scott's Emulsion is the most strengthening food-medicine known. It is totally free from alcohol or any stupefying drug. Avoid substitutes.

SYNOPSIS.

Mark Truitt, encouraged by his sweetheart, Unity Martin, leaves Bethel, his native town, to seek his fortune. Simon Truitt tells Mark that it long has been his dream to see a steel plant at Bethel and asks his son to return and build one if he ever gets rich. Mark applies to Thomas Henly, head of the Quinby Iron works, for a job and is sent to the construction gang. His success in that work wins him a place as helper to Roman Andzrejzski, open-hearth furnaceman. He becomes a boarder in Roman's home and assists Piotr, Roman's son, in his studies. Kazia, an adopted daughter, shows her gratitude in such a manner as to arouse Mark's interest in her. Heavy work in the intense heat of the furnace causes Mark to collapse and Kazia cares for him. Later Roman also succumbs and Mark gets his job. Roman resents this and tells Mark to get another boarding place. Five years elapse during which Mark has advanced to the foremanship, while his labor-saving devices have made him invaluable to the company. In the meantime Kazia has married one Jim Whiting. Mark meets with an accident which dooms him to be a cripple for life. He returns to Bethel intending to stay there. He finds Unity about to marry another man and wins her back. Unity urges him to return to his work in the city. Mark rises rapidly to wealth and power in the steel business, but the social ambitions of his wife make their married life unhappy. The big steel interests are secretly anxious to get hold of stock in the Iroquois Iron company, supposed to be worthless. Timothy Woodhouse seeks financial assistance from Mark and the latter buys Woodhouse's Iroquois stock at a small figure. Henly forces Quinby to let Mark have stock in the Quinby company. Mark finds Piotr making a socialistic speech on the street and the boy shows that he is still bitter against Mark. Mark finds Kazia, who is divorced and is now a hospital nurse, caring for Roman who is near death. Mark is advised by his physician to stop taking drugs and take a long rest. He gets six months' leave of absence. One day he takes Kazia out driving, and they meet Mrs. Truitt. A bitter quarrel ensues and Mark demands a divorce. He absents himself from the city during the divorce proceedings and makes no answer to the sensational charges brought by Mrs. Truitt. On his return he is treated coldly by many former friends.

CHAPTER XX.

The Red Glow.

Henley did not know what an impetus he had given with his "Pick out the thing you want most and fight until you get it."

Mark had not sought out Kazia. More than he would admit to himself, he had suffered during the weeks of injustice. Suffering had for the time dulled the longing for her. And behind that had been a proud reluctance to offer a love tainted by the tongues of scandal-mongers. But now the hunger for a great love—born on an autumn evening of his youth when he had come upon a frail slip of a girl raptly gazing into the twilight, too much a part of him to be stifled even during the years of fierce blind struggle and disappointment—made itself felt again, downing pride. . . .

He called up the Todd hospital, was told that Mrs. Whiting was not there, but could be reached at a certain number. He called up that number.

The response came in a low voice that even the telephone could not rob of its music for him. His heart leaped.

Kazia!"

There was a pause, then the low voice came again: "Who is that?"

"This is Mark Truitt."

Another wait, so long that he thought the connection had been broken.

"Yes?"

"Is there any place I could meet you—by accident?"

"Is there any reason for an accident?"

"If you think not, there is none. . . . Are you still there?"

"Yes. . . . You can come here." She gave an address.

"This evening?"

"If you wish. . . . Good-by."

He alighted from a car that evening before a big but unpretentious apartment house in one of the city's quieter neighborhoods. Three stories above the street he came to a door on which was her card. He knocked.

She opened the door. For many seconds they stood looking at each other, motionless, speechless. . . . He broke the silence, in a strange greeting that spoke of itself.

"How often I remember you so—on the threshold!"

"I thought it was your step." The rich color surged before the invitation, lent meaning by his greeting. "Will you come in?"

The quiet little sitting room was a caress. He thought he had never found, even in the wilderness, so restful a place.

"I suppose," he said aloud, when they were seated, "it's part of the mystery of personality."

"What is?"

"This room. It's the homiest I've ever been in."

"I'm glad you like it. I've had it for years. I suppose I oughtn't to keep it, because I don't get much good of it except in vacation. But I like to think of it as a place to come back to."

"You're on your vacation now?"

"Yes. I have a long one this year. I take only Doctor Wolf's cases now, and he is abroad for the summer."

He leaned back in the chair to which she had assigned him and watched her under cover of their inconsequential chat.

"Why did you ask me to come here?"

"Because I didn't want you to think—" She paused uncertainly.

"That you believe all you may have heard of me lately. Thank you, Kazia. But I'd have expected you to say that."

Her eyes fell again to the sewing.

"Kazia," he asked directly, after a moment, "has any one ever connected you with my scandal?"

She looked up quickly again. "Why, no. How could they?"

"A mysterious woman has been mentioned. I've been afraid that every one I've had to do with might be smirched with me. I didn't want you—of all women—to be touched."

"Do you care so much about it all?"

"I wouldn't admit it to any one else. But I do care, Kazia."

She was silent, but the dark eyes were very gentle.

He leaned forward and drew her to him. He kissed her again and again. For a long minute he held her so, in silence. . . . Insidious moment, throwing open the gate that he might peer into a golden realm such as even this Joseph had never dreamed!

"You haven't said it," he broke the silence.

"That I love you? Do I need—"

"No." He kissed her again. "Only I can't quite believe it yet. It's worth going through all the trials and disappointments and ugliness—to have this hour."

Much later—it did not seem long—he asked: "Kazia, when will you marry me?"

She did not answer for a long while. Then she gently pushed him away and spoke, slowly, as though all her strength were needed to force out each word.

"I can not marry you."

"You can not—" He stared at her, stunned.

She shook her head, mute.

"But why? You are free."

"I am free—under the law. But I can not."

"You love me, and yet—"

"I can not."

"But why?" he persisted. "You must have some reason." Then he aroused himself. "Though you may just as well forget it. Do you think," he cried, "I've found a real enduring love only to let it go?"

"I have a reason. I—" She broke off, looking away. Her hands clasped tightly in her lap, unclasped, then went out in a little appealing gesture as her eyes came back to him. "It isn't that I don't want to. I—I love you. But—oh, can't you understand? How could the love endure the little trials and frictions, the nearness, the commonplaceness of every-day life together?"

"Ah! I wish you hadn't said that." He was staggered for the moment; to him her reason was not an empty one. But he went on firmly: "That wouldn't be true with us. It's never true where there is a real love to smooth the way. And you and I—we mustn't judge by our past, because we've never found the real love—until now."

"Yes, it is real. I think it is real."

From her wistful voice he thought he had shaken her. He pressed her hard. "Of course, it is. Then, don't you see—"

"No, if it is real, then I can't—I daren't—risk losing it. I haven't had much, ever, except this love—I mustn't lose it. And you don't know—I'm not fine and clever and cultured, like—like the women you've known. You'd see the lacks—" She was becoming incoherent. "Oh, don't try to persuade me. You only make it hard. I've been thinking of this—and of when you'd come—so long! And I know."

But he did try to persuade her. And longing lent him eloquence, as he pictured for her their love, triumphant over the starving years of separation, triumphing again over the vexatious problem of daily intimacy.

Slowly it came to him that she meant her refusal. He released her and drew back, so suddenly that she swayed and almost fell.

"Then it only means that you don't love me. If you did, you wouldn't count the risk."

"If you must believe that," she answered sadly, "you must. But it isn't true. If I could forget the risk, I shouldn't love you as I do."

He laughed harshly, and reaching for his hat, turned toward the door. The dreamed love had gone the way of his beautiful philosophy.

But at the door he looked back. She was standing as he had left her, pale, in her eyes both fear and the glow of the flame he had lighted. The hand, held out to him in involuntary gesture, was trembling visibly.

"Why—do you go?"

"But you said—"

"I didn't say—I wouldn't love you."

He laughed again. "What is love—by itself?"

"We could," pitifully she put forth the suggestion, "we could be friends."

"Friends! I'm no bloodless poet. I want a whole love."

Her hungering look was calling him, drawing him across the room to her. It bade him take her. He took her, wonderingly, dazed by the seeming surrender. In his clasp she seemed to find a new courage.

"Then—then—I will give you a whole love—if you will take me as I am."

"No, no!" he muttered. "Not that, Kazia! I've hurt you enough. And it wouldn't be a whole love. It couldn't be a lasting love. Love can't live except in the light of day."

"Love, if it is love, is its own light."

"But the risk you fear! It would be greater your way."

"This is my risk, not yours." Her arms encircled his neck, drawing his hot cheek down to hers. "And there is no one else. I am alone. No one would be hurt. It wouldn't—it couldn't—be a bigger love if given in the world's way. And it is all I can have, all I can give. Let me have it until—" She ended in a gasp that was almost a sob.

CHAPTER XXI.

Arcady.

He went to sleep that night, fearing the awakening. But as he woke to the summons of the early summer sunshine filling his hotel room, the dreaded reaction did not come. He could think only with tenderness of the woman who had yielded to him, the love that did not haggle, with a sort of awe—and the query, Could he match it?

He arose, and going to the telephone, called her number.

"Is it you?" He heard the eager catch in the low voice.

"Who else could it be?" He laughed. "Kazia, if you should happen to invite me to breakfast—"

"Oh, will you? Come soon. I—I am always waiting for you."

But as he turned away from the telephone, something caught in his throat. "Poor Kazia!" he muttered. "We've cut out a big job for ourselves."

He did not have to knock at her door. While he was still mounting the last flight of stairs, it was thrown open and she stood awaiting him in the little entrance hall. When he took her in his close clasp, she put her hand to his forehead and looked searchingly into his eyes. He was glad that what she saw there contented her.

"Oh, I'm glad," she murmured from his shoulder, "I'm glad you called me up."

"Of course I did. How long did you think I could wait to hear your voice again?"

"I was afraid you wouldn't. If you hadn't—"

"But I did." He kissed her.

Afterward, when the table had been cleared and the dishes washed—he helping with an awkwardness they found very comic—he broached his plan.

"Kazia, have you ever been in the woods?"

"No. But I remember you used to tell me of the hills you came from. I've always wanted to see them."

"Oh, yes, they're beautiful. But men live there. I meant clear out beyond the edge of things as you know them."

So he told her of the wilderness he had visited—of calm pellucid rivers that became noble lakes and then rushed madly down narrow rocky chutes; of vast stretches of untouched forest, pathless to all but the wild things and the lonely, hardly less wild trapper; of its silences and ragings. She listened eagerly.

"Let's go there, Kazia."

The suggestion left her almost breathless for a moment. "Dare we?"

"Why not?"

"Why not?" she repeated slowly. "There would be nothing to fear up there, nothing to conceal. We could stay until I have to go back to work."

"Longer, if you like it. You needn't think of work."

"But I must," she smiled. "I must live—and I'm not a very rich woman."

"But I—"

"Hush!" She laid a silencing hand over his lips.

It was easily arranged. He dropped a note to Henley which led the latter to believe that his counsel had been taken and Mark had gone away to let gossip run its course and die. Kazia had no explanations to make.

They met in Toronto and there took a train together. They alighted far to the north at a rude little lumber town where the smell of fresh-sawn lumber, mingled with the fragrance of balsam, swept down a long narrow lake. After one night in the home of a lumberjack to whose simple mind it never occurred to question the status of his Yankee guests, they started up the lake by canoe with a guide who was to leave them when they had made a permanent camp.

From beginning to end their stay in the woods was without cloud or flaw. The narrow lake narrowed still further into a smooth clear river that wound in and out among ever wooded hills. They passed the region where the cruel ax had swung and scarred; the trees became bigger, the forest denser. Here and there they came to a rapids where the canoes had to be lifted and carried.

Her almost awed perception of each unfolding beauty touched him. On a jutting point they found a deserted little cabin, some trapper's winter abode. There the journey ended. When the hut had been cleaned out, they dismissed the guide with orders to return every three weeks with fresh supplies. . . .

Mindful of his resolve, he planned their days carefully, thinking only that they might be perfect for her.

The man was swept out of himself, out of his groove of thought, as never before. His struggles and victories and disappointments receded; they seemed part of another existence. If he thought of them briefly at all, it was but as a price well paid for his freedom. He did not guess that the habit of thinking minutely for her happiness was slowly prying loose other and firmly fixed habits.

Two moons waxed and waned. The guide came with supplies, and again a second time. On his third appearance, the time set for their departure, Mark without consulting Kazia, sent him back. She did not seem to notice the change in plan.

On the day when the guide should have returned again, he did not come. That evening a storm arose, such as rarely visits even those northern woods. Mark and Kazia were out on the lake for a lazy after-supper paddle, watching the masses of black clouds gather over the hills at the head of the lake. There was a rumble of distant thunder.

Suddenly, overtaking the mountainous vapor, appeared a lower plane of clouds, flying before a wind that struck the water and sent a line of white churning down the lake. They were not far out, but though they paddled swiftly, their light craft was tossing like a cork before they reached shore. They made their landing, dragged the canoe to safety and fled to the cabin just as a wall of green and darkness swept down upon them.

The fury was soon spent. The storm passed beyond the lake. Still they watched, in one of their long silences.

She sighed and stirred, looking up at him. "I wonder—" She paused.

"Yes?"

"Have I hurt you?"

"Hurt me?"

"By loving you. By coming here."

"No," he cried. "How could any one be harmed by a perfect love? And it has been perfect. I can never forget."

His heart ached with a deep poignant tenderness for her. They were silent again. . . . But after a time drowsiness overcame him and he slept.

She did not sleep. Until morning she kept her vigil beside him. Sometimes she would lean over and touch his outflung hand. . . .

When he awoke the sun was well up over the hills. Kazia was standing in the doorway, looking down the lake. She heard him stir and turned. He saw her eyes.

"I believe you haven't slept at all!"

She did not answer that, but smiled, pointing.

"The guide is coming. Let us hurry. It is time for us to go."

"No!" He sprang to his feet.

"Please," she put out an appealing hand, "let us not talk of it, but hurry. We must go. I've thought it out, and it is best."

They breakfasted hurriedly and began the brief preparations to leave, putting the cabin in order and stowing into the canoes the little they would need on the trip down the river. They were soon ready.

They were about to embark when Kazia, without explanation, turned and went back to the cabin. Many minutes passed and she did not reappear. Then Mark followed her. He found her lying prone on the pile of pine boughs that had been their couch, face buried in her arms. Harsh dry sobs shook her.

With a cry he dropped to his knees beside her, gently stroking her hair, trying to soothe her grief. He pleaded with her to stay.

Soon she had regained control. She sat up, facing him.

"How can you think of going? Back there we won't find it as it has been here."

"We must," she answered. "And now, while it's still perfect. It has been that—not a thing to regret. I've crowded into two months happiness enough for a lifetime. If I must pay for it, I am willing. . . . And you have given it to me. Do you think I haven't seen how you've watched over me, thought only of me, to make it perfect for me? I can never forget that. And maybe, some day, I shall have the chance to repay you. I pray that I may have the chance."

"It is I who will have to repay you. But why leave such happiness? Let us stay here, where love is free and clean and strong."

"If we only could! But we must go. Because it wouldn't stay perfect. There are storms even in the wilderness. A time would come—you are a man—when love wouldn't be enough. You would begin to want other men. You would chafe against the loneliness and inaction. We would go gladly then and we could look back on this only as a dream that failed. But now—oh, I shall have something to remember! And you will have something to remember. . . . See! You know I'm right. . . . Come."

CHAPTER XXII.

The Cleft Stick.

In Canada's capital, thinking themselves still safe, Mark had persuaded Kazia to stay over two days, that they might have one last uninterrupted period together. It was a mistake, an anticlimax.

They were at breakfast when, glancing up, Mark espied a familiar figure at the doorway of the hotel dining room—a figure of courtly and noble mien; moving with slow thoughtful stride and head slightly bent, as though, even amid the commonplace functions of life, his mind never ceased to dwell on momentous philanthropic projects; and withal modestly unaware of the whisper that ran over the room or of the many necks craned in his direction. An obsequious captain of waiters led him down the room, and by fateful chance, toward the table where sat Mark and Kazia. Mark regarded him in that fascination which a dangerous object often has for its victim.

Now it may be that the philanthropist was not quite so unaware as he seemed of the interest evoked by his entrance, for a pair of furtively roving eyes alighted upon Mark. He stopped.

"Can It Be—Of Course, Is It Truitt."

"Can it be—of course, it is Truitt. This is an unexpected pleasure." He extended a genial hand.

Mark took it mechanically. "How are you, Mr. Quinby?" he muttered out of his daze.

"I suppose I am well." Jeremiah Quinby smiled benignantly. "A busy life leaves little time to consider the state of one's health. You are looking better than I have ever seen you."

"I'm better than I've ever been."

There was a pause during which Quinby glanced tentatively at Kazia.

"Ah! Perhaps I am intruding?" Quinby smiled humorously, as one who knows his welcome anywhere is assured.

Mark brought his whirling thoughts to a stop. "No, certainly not. Mrs. Whiting—" He performed an introduction. Quinby's bow was impressive.

"I see you have just begun. Perhaps—" He paused again, suggestively.

"You will join us? Mrs. Whiting, I'm sure—"

Kazia nodded and smiled composedly.

"This is kind, indeed. Though I should not," Quinby bowed again to Kazia, "blame Truitt for being selfish." He took the chair held out for him by the waiter, glancing from Mark's sunbrowned face to Kazia's. "I see you have both been out under the sun. Your party—"

"Has just separated. Mrs. Whiting is to let me—rather informally, to be sure—convoy her home."

"And what of it, since no one is the wiser? The conventions," Quinby wittily accepted the explanation, "are only for public consumption, though I—being in the public eye, so to speak—may rarely ignore them. So you, too, are from our city, Mrs. Whiting?"

Kazia admitted it.

"Ah! I wish I had known last night that you were here. The governor-general—" The phrase rolled lingeringly on his lips. "The governor-general gave a reception. You would have been pleased, I am sure, to see how our city, in my person, was honored."

"I'm very sure of it. Please tell us about it."

Quinby told them about it, with a wealth of detail.

But under cover of his monologue Quinby was shrewdly taking stock of his hearers and their situation; he had not missed that first moment of betraying confusion. Suspicion, guided by instinct, settled into conviction.

And the event matched Quinby's need. For in the very midday of his triumph, when the brilliancy and daring of his achievements promised to eclipse his better fortified but less original rival in beneficence, a cloud no bigger than a man's hand had crept above the horizon. And if that cloud grew bigger, not MacGregor but Quinby himself might be eclipsed—and, alas! forever. A crisis, then, when "harmony" more than ever was needed in his forces. There are, Quinby gratefully thought, more ways than one of insuring harmony. He felt of his whip and got ready to crack it.

During a temporary lull Kazia, pleading some unfinished packing, made her escape. Quinby's eye followed her admiringly to the door, then bent upon Mark a look in which reproof and a certain ponderous waggishness struggled for the upper hand.

"Ah! Truitt! A sad dog, I fear."

"Not at all," said Mark coldly.

Quinby was blandly skeptical. "I find you, brown as an Indian, at breakfast alone at a hotel with a woman dusky as an Indian maiden. The party—was it a party of two, Truitt?"

"Mr. Quinby," said Mark not so coldly, "your tone—! My word—"

"Ah!" Quinby waved a pacific hand. "If your word is passed, that is enough. I am happy to believe it. Mrs. Whiting seems a charming woman. A well poised woman! An unusual woman!"

"Very."

"You leave today?"

"Yes."

"Then, since I have your word in the matter, I feel safe in inviting you and Mrs. Whiting to share my car as far as Buffalo."

"Mrs. Whiting may have a preference."

Quinby received this with the surprise of one whose invitations partake of the peremptory quality of royalty's. "I hope she will not prefer a stuffy Pullman to my car, which has been praised. I should be deeply hurt by a refusal. In fact," Mark looked up quickly, as though he had heard a warning crack! overhead, "I should construe a refusal as evidence— But let that go. There are company matters I wish to discuss with you, and this seems an opportune occasion."

The men regarded each other steadily for a moment.

"I shall present your invitation," Mark concluded.

"With my compliments," Quinby amended. "Er—Truitt, who is Mrs. Whiting? The name is not familiar."

"I'm sure you never heard of her. She's a trained nurse—a very successful one, I believe. I'll let you know her answer."

They rose and Mark had the enviable distinction of marching with Jeremiah Quinby through the long dining room, where by this time the whisper of the great philanthropist's presence had been happily confirmed.

"Well," said Mark grimly, when he had found Kazia in their rooms, "you played audience to good purpose. Quinby has just informed me, with exclamation points, that you are a charming woman, a well poised woman, an unusual woman."

She breathed a sigh of relief. "Then he doesn't suspect?"

"He's so sure of the truth that he wouldn't believe his own testimony to the contrary."

"What can we do?"

"Exactly nothing but accept his invitation to travel in his car to Buffalo—and trust to luck. Flattery and submissiveness—he would call them harmony—are the way into Quinby's good graces."

But Quinby, when the journey had begun, made no reference to that party in the woods. His engaging manners—never, said the envious, so pronounced as in the presence of a pretty woman—were displayed in their perfection. Even Mark's fears were lulled.

At first the philanthropist gave himself almost wholly to Kazia. He showed her the splendors of his car, from the little kitchen, where her expert admiration brought a grin even to the pudgy face of the Japanese cook, unto the plaster cast of the ichthyosaurus Quinby conspicuously placed at one side of the library section.

"Truitt tells me, Mrs. Whiting, that you are a nurse. A beautiful calling! A fitting sphere for woman—woman, tender minister to suffering!"

"And it pays," Kazia smiled, "better than most woman's work."

"But not enough. Have you ever noticed that the most important services are always the poorest paid. I have often wished," Quinby sighed, "that it lay in my power to give every deserving man and woman the just reward earned by their service."

"Ah!" breathed Kazia, "that would be something to do."

Quinby bent a benignant smile on Kazia. "Mrs. Whiting, you must leave me an address. As it happens, I am a trustee, and it may be, an influence in the Todd hospital. Surely the profession of healing offers a woman a larger—and a better paid—field than mere individual nursing?"

"To those who are fitted."

"You are modest, of course. But I am sure I have not judged you too generously."

He led Kazia to a big cushioned chair at the observation end of the car, had the Jap bring magazines and the latest novel.

She lay back in the chair, smiling her thanks up to him, as frankly as if she had not a suspected secret to brazen out. The philanthropist smiled back—and the light in his eyes, as they swept the figure beneath them, was not philanthropy.

His smile became quizzical. He leaned over and patted her hand. "You are a plucky woman, my dear. I have a short memory—sometimes."

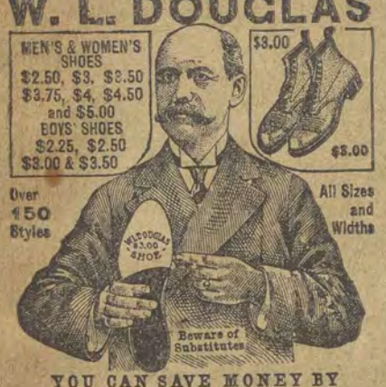
He went back to Mark.

"Truitt," he began, "does your recovered health mean that you are going back into harness?"

"I don't know," Mark answered shortly. He had witnessed the tableau just described.

"You must get back. You are needed. Have you kept track of our labor situation?"

"No."



Quinby sketched that situation, with a terseness of which Mark had not believed him capable.

Pipe Worth Half Million Dollars.

Among the royal treasures of Persia is a pipe set with diamonds, rubies and emeralds, to the value, it is estimated, of no less than $500,000. This pipe was made for the late shah, and it is said to be even more valuable than his famous sword. In the matter of swords, it is said that the gaekwar of Baroda who, on the occasion of the coronation of George V in India, added to his fame by snubbing that monarch, possesses the most precious blade in existence. Its hilt and belt are incrusted with diamonds, rubies, sapphires and emeralds, and its value has been put at $1,000,000.

HOME TOWN HELPS

BUILD HOMES FOR CITIZENS

English Municipalities Erect Buildings That Rent for Exceedingly Moderate Sums.

A shortage of houses at Newport, Monmouthshire, England, is encouraging private enterprise and stimulating the public authorities to supply the necessary homes, according to the United States consul at Cardiff, Wales. The official architect of Newport has presented a scheme to the town council for constructing 248 houses, 16 feet wide, containing two bedrooms, in blocks of six, four and two, at a cost of $924.63 each, and to rent at $1.82 per week. It is also proposed to erect 87 houses with a frontage of 25 feet, with three bedrooms, at a cost of $1,070.63 each, to rent at $2.04 per week. The land on which these houses will be erected varies in cost to the municipality from $1,703.27 to $2,189.92 per acre.

The Cardiff municipal government has adopted the small dwellings acquisition act, 1899, which authorizes the city to advance money for enabling residents to acquire the ownership of houses in which they live, provided the value of such house and lot does not exceed $2,000. Three-fourths of the market value of the house and lot will be advanced, to be repaid by installments spread over a period of 20 years, the rate of interest being four per cent a year. A Cardiff householder living in a house of the value of $2,000 will henceforth be able, if in possession of $500, to borrow $1,500 from the city and acquire the fee simple of the property.

ALL ARE SHOWING INTEREST

Progress of City Planning Most Gratifying to Those Who Have the Subject Deep in Mind.

The other day I asked George B. Ford, the well-known city planner of New York what had most impressed him along progressive city planning lines, and he replied: "The recent interest which the real estate bodies, in particular the more enlightened real estate men, have been taking in city planning."

"The increasing number of real estate men at our conferences," he said, "and the sessions devoted to city planning at the convention of real estate exchanges at Pittsburgh, promises more for the wholesome extension of city planning interests in America than almost anything that has yet taken place. I also am most favorably impressed with the interest shown by the chambers of commerce and members of boards of trade throughout the country, and the fact that it was even recognized at the recent convention of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America."—The Living Church.

Use Hardy Plants.

In gardens of large extent, such as usually obtain in rural districts, shrubs and other plants should be chosen that need little care or attention. Those that really need nothing more to carry them through the year alive than the winter's rains are ideal, and the nearer all approach this standard the more popular they should prove. Plants from similar climates, as Australia and South Africa, for example, are sure to prove satisfactory in most parts of California. Those from Japan, Europe, and the eastern part of our own country need too much humidity both in soil and atmosphere.—Los Angeles Times.

Back to the Land.

When the country has schools equal to those of the cities, roads and highways comparable to streets and boulevards, when sanitary methods prevail that are equal to those in congested centers, and transportation of agricultural products from small stations to the central market is as economical in time and money as that between large cities, then, and not till then, will there be a real exodus "back to the land." When this happy day arrives, and it is rapidly approaching, large centers of population will be almost deserted at night.

Training Building Officials.

Facilities are now provided in every large city and important center of population in Germany not only for the technical and business training of builders, contractors, building mechanics and construction engineers, but also for the instruction of prospective building inspectors and other public officials, to whom will be intrusted the enforcement of state and municipal regulations relating to buildings and construction operations of all kinds.

The Latest.

"I'm so sorry!" exclaimed the sympathetic woman. "Did you hurt yourself?"

"Hurt myself!" responded Uncle Flopsole. "Certainly not."

"But your foot slipped and you slid quite a distance on your chest!"

"Of course. That's the latest figure. It's called the walrus waltz—supposed to represent a walrus sliding off a cake of ice. I do it rather neatly for a beginner, don't you think?"

A NURSE TAKES DOCTOR'S ADVICE

And is Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Euphemia, Ohio.—"Because of total ignorance of how to care for myself when verging into womanhood, and from taking cold when going to school, I suffered from a displacement, and each month I had severe pains and nausea which always meant a lay-off from work for two to four days from the time I was 16 years old.

"I went to Kansas to live with my sister and while there a doctor told me of the Pinkham remedies but I did not use them then as my faith in patent medicines was limited. After my sister died I came home to Ohio to live and that has been my home for the last 18 years.

"The Change of Life came when I was 47 years old and about this time I saw my physical condition plainly described in one of your advertisements. Then I began using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I cannot tell you or any one the relief it gave me in the first three months. It put me right where I need not lay off every month and during the last 18 years I have not paid out two dollars to a doctor, and have been blest with excellent health for a woman of my age and I can thank Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for it.

"Since the Change of Life is over I have been a maternity nurse and being wholly self-supporting I cannot over estimate the value of good health. I have now earned a comfortable little home just by sewing and nursing. I have recommended the Compound to many with good results, as it is excellent to take before and after childbirth."—Miss EVELYN ADELIA STEWART, Euphemia, Ohio.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Evil in Nervous Excitement.

Professor von Pfungen of Vienna is conducting some interesting experiments which bear upon the relation of the state of the nervous system to the electric resistance of the skin, and he claims that nervous excitement of any kind lowers the protecting power of the skin to quite a marked extent.

NOVEL IDEA IN WILL MAKING

French Farmer Had Little Money to Leave, but at Least He Could Show His Good Will.

Two New York business men were one day discussing the purchase by one of them of a certain mercantile concern with which, the buyer explained, had come the "good will."

"I hope this 'good will,'" said the friend, "is greater than that of the old French farmer."

"I never heard the story."

"Here it is: The farmer was dying and he sent for the notary to make out the will. Propped up in bed, he dictated:

"'To Jean Marcel, our superb coiffeur, 10,000 francs.

"'I bequeath 15,000 francs to the fearless Alphonse Bayard, that he may continue his valuable aeronautical experiments.

"'To Pierre Deschamps, chemist, 10,000 francs as a mark of affection.

"'To my physician, Monsieur Leclair, 15,000 francs.

"'To our eloquent pastor, 25,000 francs, to continue the restoration of—'

"'But, my dear sir,' interrupted the notary, 'I don't believe you have all that money to leave.'

"'I know very well I haven't,' said the farmer, calmly, 'but I want to show them my good will.'"—Youth's Companion.

Anecdotes.

Speaking of humorists brings us to the fact that no man living can look quite so solemn when producing humore as Irvin S. Cobb, the well known comedian of the Saturday Evening Post. When Cobb was on the staff of one of the big New York newspapers he did various news assignments, some of them mighty serious and others that gave him a chance for comedy. It was a standing joke about the office that anybody could look at Cobb as he bent over his typewriter and tell which kind of yarn he was writing. If his face was all wrinkled up with solemnity like a bloodhound's, with a sad look about the eyes such as one rarely sees except in an undertaker's hostler, Cobb was preparing something that would make hosts of people laugh.

ERUPTION ON BABY'S FACE

Duke, N. C.—"When my baby was two weeks old, behind his ears turned red and caused an irritation and from rubbing it became raw and stayed moistened all the time. At times it would get so bad as to bleed. He was fretful. At the time he was eight months old he was in a bad condition with sores behind his ears and on his face.

"Nothing seemed to do any good at all till I got Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I at once commenced to wash his ears and face three or four times during the day with the Cuticura Soap, dried them with a soft cloth, then applied the Cuticura Ointment. In ten days his ears and face were well and no scars were left." (Signed) Mrs. Lena Lee, Jan. 2, 1914.

New Conundrum.

Here is a conundrum which your greatgrandfathers asked each other when they were little boys:

"How many legs has a dog if you call his tail a leg?"

"Five!" shouted the little great-granddad of Mr. A.

"Wrong," corrected the diminutive greatgranddad of Mr. B. "Because calling his tail a leg doesn't make it a leg."

I am reminded of this venerable brain twister of youth by the following lines in the Clayton anti-business bill:

"The District of Columbia shall be deemed a state within the meaning of this law."

So I shall modernize that ancient query by propounding the following: "How many states in the United States if you call the District of Columbia a state?" — Girard, in Philadelphia Ledger.

Korea.

Korea has practically become a part of the Japanese empire. At any rate the Japanese control in that country is complete, and the chances are that that control will never be withdrawn—not, at least, until Russia dominates the whole Asian mainland, if that time ever comes. The population of Korea is 12,000,000, and the area 82,000 square miles; nearly twice that of the state of New York.

CALOMEL MAKES YOU SICK, UGH! IT'S MERCURY AND SALIVATES

Straighten Up! Don't Lose a Day's Work! Clean Your Sluggish Liver and Bowels With "Dodson's Liver Tone."

Ugh! Calomel makes you sick. Take a dose of the vile, dangerous drug tonight and tomorrow you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile crashes into it, breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you feel sluggish and "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and bowels constipated or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour, just try a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store or dealer and get a 50-cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful tonight and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous by morning I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine; entirely vegetable, therefore it cannot salivate or make you sick.

I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your bowels of that sour bile and constipated waste which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable. I guarantee that a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone will keep your entire family feeling fine for months. Give it to your children. It is harmless; doesn't gripe and they like its pleasant taste.

LIED TO SAVE MEN'S LIVES

Death or Capture of Lost English Soldiers Averted by Boldness of French Village Priest.

G. H. Perris, in a message to the Chronicle, tells of a dramatic little episode that occurred in a French village.

Four lost "Tommies" turned up in village and asked for shelter. They had been chased by uhlans, and the cure probably realized the risks he ran in taking them into his little house.

Early in the morning, sure enough, a German patrol rode into the place, summoned the inhabitants together, and demanded the surrender of the Englishmen, threatening dire penalties. Every one knew where they were, and turned to their spiritual guide.

Instinct saves us from reason in such crises. The good cure lied boldly, in a loud voice, so that his flock should understand. He had not seen the Englishmen. No doubt they had gone on toward Paris. The German soldiers rode on.

What most struck my informant, says the correspondent, was the exceeding deliberation with which the Atkins four performed their toilet and brushed their hair and clothes before making their ecape. The cure then left for a safer place.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Why He Objected.

A parson and a a leading parishioner were not on good terms, and there was much speculation in the village as to the reason.

"It's all on account of parson refusing to christen master's youngest child," the housemaid confided to her friend of the dusting brush at the house across the way. "Master wanted her to be named Dora Ruby Inez North Kathleen, but the parson wouldn't do it."

"It was like parson's cheek," replied her friend, "even if he was asked to give the child a hundred names—"

"Oh, it wasn't the number of names which bothered him," returned the servant. "He objected to the initials, that's all. You see, master's name is Beer, and the girl's initials are D. R. I. N. K., and parson declined to be a party to her having to sign herself when she grows up, 'Drink Beer.'"—London Answers.

The Cause Laid Bare

Tea and coffee drinkers often notice backache, headache, rheumatic pain, dizziness, drowsy, tired feelings, disturbed urination and other signs of kidney weakness. The constant use of narcotic or alcoholic drinks is very apt to irritate the kidneys, and weak kidneys need prompt help to avert all danger of dropsy, gravel or fatal Bright's disease. Avoid the use of stimulants, drink more water, get more rest, fresh air and exercise. To tone and strengthen the tired kidneys, use Doan's Kidney Pills, the most successful and highly recommended kidney remedy.

An Alabama Case

Mrs. Frank Riemann, 308 S. Wilkinson St., Mobile, Ala., says: "I had disordered kidneys for years and was steadily getting worse. My back ached constantly and I got so dizzy I couldn't stand alone. I was nervous, had headaches and was almost sick abed. Two boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills restored me to good health. Whenever I have used this remedy since, it has given fine results."

Men Pay Homage to Mother's Friend

"I am not surprised to observe the number of men who come into the store to purchase 'Mother's Friend,' " remarked a leading druggist.

The expectant mother if she hasn't heard of this splendid embrocation is probably not reading the papers to much extent. And if she does it is a happy thought to send hubby to the drug store. "Mother's Friend" is applied externally over the abdominal muscles.

It is a gentle, soothing lubricant, penetrates to the fine network of nerves beneath the skin and has a marked tendency to relieve the muscular strain to which these broad, flat abdominal muscles are subjected. The cords, tendons and ligaments are thus permitted to stretch without the corresponding surface strain so often involved during the period of expectation. And particularly to young mothers is this remedial application of inestimable value since in thus keeping the muscles firm but pliant it enables them to go through the ordeal without laceration of the epidermis often the case when this gentle attention is neglected.

"Mother's Friend" is highly recommended by a host of women. Write Bradfield Regulator Co., 408 Lamar Bldg. Atlanta, Ga., and we will send you a valuable little book to expectant mothers.

"Clean Up the Bowels and Keep Them Clean"

There are many remedies to be had for constipation, but the difficulty is to procure one that acts without violence. A remedy that does not perform by force what should be accomplished by persuasion is Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets. After using them, Mr. N. A. Waddell, 315 Washington St., Waco, Tex., says:

"Almost all my life I have been troubled with constipation, and have tried many remedies, all of which seemed to cause pain without giving much relief. I finally tried Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets and found them excellent. Their action is pleasant and mild, and their chocolate taste makes them easy to take. I am more than glad to recommend them."

"Clean up the bowels and keep them clean," is the advice of all physicians, because they realize the danger resulting from habitual constipation. Do not delay too long, but begin proper curative measures.

Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets are a new remedy for this old complaint, and a great improvement over the cathartics you have been using in the past. They taste like candy and work like a charm. A trial will convince you.

Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets are sold by all druggists, at 25 cents a box containing 25 doses. If not found satisfactory after trial, return the box to your druggist and he will return your money. 12

SUGGESTED LEGISLATION

By J. A. Lindquist.

Editor Union-Banner:—I will come back again with a burning subject, if you will publish it; and I wish every citizen in Alabama could read it and write their views upon it. I know the rich would fight it, and especially those who are "farming the farmer."

Especially the "Agricultural Press" has been writing pro and con, on reduction of acreage, with plans galore but very few feasible, unless everybody was willing.

Now as we have already signed a call legislature on the cotton situation at present which we have to face in any form it appears. But why not get the legislature to settle that question for all time to come, and it won't hurt Alabama to be first in one thing. I guarantee all other states will follow in two or three years.

It is not the one and two horse farmers who are causing this over-production and low prices, but the planter who is "farming the farmer," who make 100 to 500 bales or more; who live in the cities or sometimes on the land and probably do not work or produce one pound of cotton or anything else.

Now any ordinary person can see that if we make over 8,000,000 bales in 1915, we will see harder times and lower prices next fall than now. No power can hinder it. Reduction of acreage is all the talk. One would be honest, and do so, his neighbor for dishonest and double his whether belonging to the Union or not.

Why not then get the legislature to pass a law to tax every bale of cotton. 10 cents at arithmatic progression, and the same procedure could be used on corn and wheat per 100 pounds, after the state is supplied with all its need for man and beaft.

Tax every bale of cotton progressively 10, making a tax of 1.50 on five bales, $5.50 on ten bales, $7.80 on twelve bales; and that would take in practically every one, and two horse farmer. The man who raised 100 bales had to pay $509, the one 200 bales $2,010 and the one who got 500 bales would pay 24,060 or $49 more than he got at 10 cents a pound. So 200 bales would be the limit where any profit could be made, and thereby the planters would be compelled to either produce feed and raise stock, or sell out their improfitable land and cause a blessing to their state instead of a curse.

The taxes collected on cotton or other produce after the state is supplied shall go one-third to the state school fund, one-third fo the county school fund and one-third to the county road fund. But no discrimination shall be done by the state to any county in distributing its school or road money it is entitled to.

County tax collector collects all within their respective counties.

The ginner shall issue a receipt in duplicate, one for keeping, the other to be given the farmer ginning, so that if any mistake occurs, they can be traced, the farmer bringing his receipt when paying taxes. The ginner to report the first of each month. As I wrote two weeks ago, it would be a good plan to change law on assessing and taxing. Let tax assessor go to each farm and asse s at full value, and two-thirds be the assessed tax value. Abolish the tax collector; each person pay the county treasurer at his office, Jan 1st to be the end of the year, assessor to assess from Jan. 1st to May 1st if needed that length of time to get around, for the present year.

I think these plans would be the best for the state as a whole and beneficient especially to the common people.

I would like to see some discussions on this, so that if the legislature is called we will be ready to act. Yours,

J. A. Lindquist.

Mobile Man Thanks Chicago Chemist For Swift Recovery

Jerome Nicholas Suffered a Long Time, Then Found the Way to Health Quickly, Easily.

Here is the story of a man who long suffered with stomach trouble—how his health slowly failed and how in the end he made a rapid recovery—a joyous surprise.

Jerome Nicolas of Mobile for considerably more than a year knew he was not in good health.

One day, by good fortune, he learned of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy.

In a short time he found himself with new life and energy. He was so well pleased that he urged others to use this truly remarkable remedy. Part of a letter from Mr. Nicholas will tell you his experience.

"I received your medicine and was very anxious to continue the treatment. After taking three doses I felt better than I have felt in a year. I have passed several hundred gall stones, besides other secretions."

We want all people who have chronic stomach trouble or constipation, no matter of how long standing, to try one dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy—one dose will convince you. This is the medicine so many of our people have been taking with surprising results. The most thorough system cleaner we ever sold. Mayr's Wonder-Stomach Remedy is now sold here by. "Upchurch Drug Company and drug gists everywhere."

WAGES

The American railways pay the highest wages in the world out of the lowest rates in the world, after having set down to capital account the lowest capitalization per mile of any of the great countries of the world.—James J. Hill.

The Government of the United States, and the Government of the several states, fixes the rates charged by railroads for service; fixes the earnings, and has indulged in much agitation of the minimum wage.

But neither the federal nor state government underwrites these earnings. The government takes steps to see that railroads shall not earn more than a certain amount, but it does not co-operate with the railroads to see that they do earn that amount.

Consequently, out of the small earnings, the railroads must pay, not only all fixed charges, but, in addition to other operating expenses, the very important item of wages.

Wages, while the highest of any country in the world, can not be increased. The income will not justify the outgo. We therefore have to secure the very best employes possible at the wages we can afford to pay.

The L. & N. calls attention to this fact in the hope that the people will realize one of the important handicaps under which we operate. Our employes are drilled in courtesy, trained in efficiency. We believe they are loyal to our interests, and as loyal employes endeavor to at all times give good service to the general public.

However, promotions are slow. Increases in wages are hard to secure. To the more ambitious the employment offers small inducement for continuous service. Therefore many changes are being constanly made in all departments. New men must be trained. This impairs the service, but the inconvenience suffered by the public is insignificant in comparison with the derangement in our organization.

We see many valued employes leave our service because our limited earnings prevent us from paying them salaries commensurate with their ability.

We trust, when you occasionally find cause for complaint, you will take these facts into consideration.

THE UNION-BANNER

VOL. 3 | THE UNION 11th Year | CLANTON, ALBAMA, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 29 1914 | THE BANNER 21st Year | NO. 29

An Answer to Brother Pounds.

Editor Union-Banner:—

Behold, I notice in the Clanton Press where the great Goliath, Pounds, comes down into the valley of Pletcher, and defies the Bull Moosers to answer his questions. Now, I do not know whether I can act the part of the lad David with his sling or not, but I will attempt it.

Mr. Pounds knows that Mr. J. P. VanDerveer levies the tax values; and every man in the county held Judge Honeycutt, and Judge Adams, and Judge Reynolds responsible for the appropriations that were made when they were in office. Now, that Mr. Deason is in power, he must be responsible for the management of the whole matter just as they were.

Reynolds went out leaving $10,000.00 in the treasury to the people's credit for Deason to start with; he has already spent that, and besides, has got us in debt $20,000.00 more. I know you want to lay this at the doors of the Commissioners; but if you do that, I cannot see how you are endorsing Mr. Atchison for a second term. He comes out and says we are going to build the speed-way, and we are going to pay for it with county warants; Mr. Pounds, if you don't stand for these things, I can't see how you are going to vote for these men who do stand for them. You are always trying to get the moat out of the Progressives' eyes; but if you would first get the beam out of your own eyes you could see clearly what good the Progressive party is doing, and what it will do if given the pewer.

You know, Mr. Pounds, we have got out a set of clean, upright and unadulterated men for office this time. You need not holler that Reynolds won't answer your qustions. He is not out for office.

You stated that you once thought well of Reynolds. Now, you ought to, for you know that one time he and the dear people, as you call them, by the solicitation of the people of Collins Chapel community, picked you up from starvation and gave you an office the second time. You should not cry out that Reynolds acts cowardly or hypocritical, when you know that he has always stood on the side of the majority of the people, and has ever been found true to our cause. If there is anyone who has acted more cowardly or hypocritically than you, Mr. Pounds, I would like to know him. You claim that we have stolen some planks out of your platform. Well, why did you run off and leave it? Why didn't you stay with it? I can tell you why. You were a hireling, and were not interested in the sheep; if you had been you would have laid down your life for them, but every time the wolf comes you flee.

But the sheep don't scatter. We loose a bob tailed goat once in a while like you and Kilgore, but that is the cleansing of the party; goats will stay only with goats, and will not remain long in any other flock.

Now, you are writing and hooping up the Democrats in the Press and bawling that some one will not answer your questions. You and Kilgore are stray goats on a mountain side, crying for help, but no one will come to you for they have no confidence in you. They are going in the other direction.

You claim that Mr. Middleton and Judge Reynolds won't notice you. If you want to be noticed and respected, you must stay with people and respect yourself You have wasted the best part of your life running from party, and crying that nobody would notice you. But if you will get out of that old ballot box stuffing Press party, and repent, and get back on your platform, somebody may get to noticing you again.

You say that we change parties over night. But that is not as bad as you have done. You have belonged to every party that has come up in your life time, and now that there is not a new one to go to, you have gone back to the extravagant gang that is still wringing the life and existence out of the people. Yes we change as the times demand; but none of us have changed back, as you have done, to that rotten old mess that stole $114,000,00 from the people at Montgomery, and put cotton down to 5 and 6 cents a pound, and drew a debt over the people of this county to the amount of twenty thousand dollars, without asking to see whether one citizen was in favor of such a scheme.

It seems that now you have gotten into such a party as that, Mr. Pounds, it is a very appropriate time for you to make another change.

Respectfully,
J. N. SCOTT.

Jemison, Ala., Oct. 26 1914.

Final Message To Our Voters.

This is the last issue the Union-Banner will have [illegible] to the general election, which comes off next Tuesday. It is the last message we will bear to our readers regarding the discussions that have been precipitated by the many questions of campaign interest.

Register Chance 5 April

We have no special message to deliver at this final moment. We have all along given what we tried to make a fair and logical discussion of every question that arose concerning the public good, as related to the campaign. Now we want to say to our readers that we can look back over the battlefield and renew every act we have made. We have not put forward a single arangument that we would revoke. We wish you to renew them in your minds, and impress them as forcibly on you as when they were first advanced.

We are proud of the fact that we have had such a number of co-operative and sympathetic readers among the voters of the county. We hope they have realized the sincerity of our purpose, and will take the message we have at all times tried to bring to them as a serious one, and worth their time and attention. Let those who have been touched by our efforts bear the news on to others, even to the final moment of the campaign. Carry it with you to the polls on election day, and let it be with you when you face the ballot to cast the vote that will determine your future position in this great matter of public interest in your county state and national government.

To those who have not been reading our side of the matter, we say again, that we wish you to take all our arguments and look them over finally before voting. We have faith in their sincerity, and believe they are worhty of the support of anyone who loves justice and right. Don't cast a careless ballot. Turn your vote in a direction that will avail you something.

There are some who have heard the appeals of the Progressive party to the people but have taken no notice of them. To them we would say turn O ye hard hearted, from the error of your way. Be ye even in the last moment reconciled to the things that mean your salvation.

We would like to make a complete review of all our previous arguments in this campaign, but have not the space. We have tried to drive home to the minds of our readers our plea for a reformation in matters of national government, as to tariffs, taxes, etc., and have made no statements we did not believe in, and we still cling to all we have said. We have at all times given our disapproval of the manner in which the Democratic party has been conducting our state government; and we have nothing in connection therewith to take back. We have told you many times how we stood on various questions in the recent management of our county affairs; and we wish to renew everything we have said. We have tried to make all our arguments sensible and conservative, and upon a standard of decency and due respect to all. We believe we have not been misunderstood, and have faith that we shall receive testimony to this effect when the ballots are counted in Chilton next Tuesday.

The management of our campaign has been aggressive, and awake to their duties. Our speakers have been in nearly every part of the county, carrying the same doctrine of Progressiveism that has been set forth in the Union-Banner. They have been zealous and earnest in their efforts to convince the people of the facts as they saw them. They will conclude Saturday with joint debates at Clanton, Thorsby and Jemison.

Do you want to see business in this nation restored? Do you want to see the Democratic ring broken in Alabama? Do you want to see the management of our county affairs placed back in the hands of our people? If so make a cross at the head of the Progressive ticket next Tuesday, and you will have made a start towards all these things.

In conclusion, we wish to say that we have enjoyed the campaign. We have taken pleasure in putting before our readers what we have believed to be the right and acceptable side of matters. We have tried to avoid all personal slang, and have courted the ill will of no individual. We have followed the dictates of our public spirit strictly, and are not yet nor ever shall be one bit sorry for it. As we close our side of the fight, we want to say to all that we have been, are yet, and always shall be for the whole people in their fight for right and justice, and are sincere in the belief that right will prevail.. Now we leave the matter with the voters; consider well before you step; but as for the Union-Banner we say, "Pass Prosperity Around."

MOTOR VEHICLE RECEIPTS $113,201

This is An Increase of $31,829 Over Amount Taken in Last Year. Department Books Correctly Kept.

STATE CAPITAL NEWS ITEMS

Doings of the Various Departments of the Commonwealth Given for Our Readers.

—Montgomery.

Total receipts of the motor vehicle department for the year ending September 30, last, were $113,201.75, an increase of $31,829.75 over the preceding year, according to Examiner of Public Accounts J. T. Gorman, who has submitted a report to the governor covering his examination of that department.

The receipts of the department were divided among the state, cities and counties and was apportioned as follows: State, $52,02979; maintenance, $15,980.26, and cities and counties, $45,191.70.

The department's expenses for the year amounted to $11,297.37, which included salaries of the two clerks and other expenses.

The total amount collected since the establishment of the motor vehicle department is $259,062.75, of which amount $64,489 was collected in 1912.

Try to Adjust Schedules.

The Railroad Commission held an informal session and discussed the adjustment of train schedules to meet conditions brought about by the taking off of trains during the war in Europe. No decisions were rendered.

Court Spends More Than Receiver.

Since its establishment on April 4, 1911, the expenditures for the maintenance of the court of appeals have been $70,160.94, while the receipts of the court have amounted to $16,848, according to Examiner of Public Accounts J. T. Gorman, who submitted a report to the governor on his examination of the books and accounts of Alexander Troy, clerk of the court.

The expenditures of the court for the past fiscal year amounted to $20,000, of which amount $15,000 was spent in salaries for judges; $2,500 for the salary of the clerk of the court and $2,500 for other clerical hire.

The receipts of the court for the year were $4,557.20, of which amount $3,062.20 was received in fees and $1,495 in library fees.

Since the establishment of the court according to Examiner Gorman, 2,242 cases have been docketed; 1,728 have been decided, 158 transferred to the supreme court and 356 are now pending.

Examiner Gorman reported Mr. Troy's books correct and complimented his excellent system of bookkeeping.

Following is Mr. Gorman's report in part:

"In obedience to instructions received from the executive office, I have examined the books, accounts and vouchers of Hon. Alex Troy, clerk of the court of appeals, from October 1, 1913, to September 30, 1914.

"Its books are correctly kept. The clerical work, on all of his dockets, is excellent:

"For the fiscal year ending September 30, 1914, he collected and paid into the state treasurer $3,062.20 fees.

"In addition, he collected $1,495 library fees, making a total of $4,557.20 collected and paid.

"The expenses of the court for the fiscal year were as follows:

Salaries of judges	$15,000
Salary of clerk	2,500
Salary of secretary	1,650
Salary of temporary clerk	850
Total	$20,000

"The court of appeals was created by an act approved March 11, 1911, and was organized April 4, 1911.

Three judges, $5,000 each	$15,000
Clerk	2,500
Secretary	1,650
Total	$15,150

"Since its organization the following are the receipts and expenditures of this court:

Receipts—
Clerk's fees	$12,493
Library fees	4,355
Total	$16,848
Expenditures—
Salaries of judges	$53,373.63
Salary of clerk	8,870.97
Salary of secretary	5,868.14
Salary of temporary clerk	2,048.20
Total	$70,160.94

Minus Legislature Ten Days.

Agitation for a special session of the legislature has brought to light the fact that Alabama will be without a lawmaking body for almost ten days during the first part of November. By constitutional provision the O'Neal legislature will go out of office the day after the election of November 4. The vote is not canvassed until the Friday following or November 6. At least two days must be necessary in filing the successful names to the secretary of state. Then 2 or 3 days will elapse before qualifying.

Asks for Legislators' Ideas.

Governor O'Neal addressed letters to members of the Legislature to ascertain their position on the question of convening the Legislature to aid in settling upon some plan to aid the farmers during the financial stringency. This action was taken following a conference between the Governor, Senator John H. Bankhead, W. M. Seymour and O. P. Ford.

The Governor also addressed a letter to the Attorney General, inquiring for an opinion in connection with the authority of the Legislature to restrict cotton acreage or to authorize bonds to produce money to purchase cotton.

Those who conferred with the Governor promised to secure pledges from Legislators to the effect that they would not go further than to try to bring aid for the farmers. They said they felt sure members of the Legislature would not try to throw obstacles in the way of the Governor.

The Governor was known to disagree with the bonding plan of Senator Bankhead, but he said he was ready to co-operate in putting through any plan he believed to be feasible.

Conference Gives No Solution.

The meeting of Governors (present and future), Senators, and Legislators called to order in the assembly room of a local hotel by General Bibb Graves, chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, resulted in nothing more than discussion of plans already promulgated for the relief of the financial stringency.

Governor Emmet O'Neal reiterated his belief that as yet no practical solution to the problem had been offered and stated that he was very anxious to call the Legislature in extraordinary session the moment some one came forward with a practical plan for relief in the present crisis. He related in detail the plans of Governors in session at Washington, and the discussions which attended the presentations of these schemes for relief. He outlined his work along these lines and stated that no greater satisfaction could come to him than would result from participation in some real effort to relieve the situation.

Senator J. H. Bankhead spoke at length in advocacy of the calling of a special session of the Legislature and the floating of $40,000,000 bonds to aid the State in the present crisis.

Observe "Clean-Up" Day.

Teachers all over Alabama observed "clean-up and school improvement day," on October 30. The day was observed in practically every school in the state.

The general observance of the day was in accordance wtih the earnest solicitation of Superintendent Feagin, who several days ago addressed an urgent appeal to the teachers of the state in the shape of a school bulletin.

"The country school yard is often a dreary place," said Superintendent Feagin in his introduction to the bulletin. "The plain frame building of the rural school, too frequently little better than a cattle shed, stands in the middle of its cheerless yard like a scarecrow in a cornfield after the corn has been gathered and like the scarecrows in its deserted field, the picture is well fitted to frighten children.

"The dirty, smoke-begrimed schoolhouse, with its cracked and broken plaster, warped floor, rusty stove and dirt-stained windows, can no longer have a place in modern country life, if we wish to establish it as the rallying point in rural life—a place where we shall hope to save the country boy and girl for the farm and farm life."

Gets Contract to Print Laws.

As the lowest bidder among several newspapers of the State, the Birmingham Age-Herald was awarded the contract for printing the general laws to be passed at the next session of the Alabama Legislature. The bid was 20 cents per "square." The next lowest bid was that of the Montgomery Times, which offered to do the printing at 21 cents per "square." The bids were opened by Secretary of State, C. D. Brown, the contract automatically going to the paper with the lowest figure.

Open Season Begins November 1.

Open season on quail, squirrel and other game, including migratory birds, such as ducks, geese and brant, will begin November 1 and continue until February 1, a period of three months, and as a consequence hunting licenses are in great demand just now. Reports from all portions of the state indicate there is plenty of game in the fields and that fine sport will be provided during the coming season. A number of hunting parties are being arranged.

Swanson Pleads Guilty.

W. G. Swanson, former cashier of the Macon County Bank of Tuskegee, pleaded guilty to the charge of embezzlement when tried by the criminal court of Tuskegee and was given 13 years and one day in the penitentiary. Swanson was immediately taken to the state prison at Wetumpka to begin his sentence. Swanson was indicted on the charge of embezzling about $90,000 of the bank's funds and for swearing falsely as to the bank's financial condition.

RUSSIANS PUSHING THE GERMANS HARD

CAMPAIGN IN EAST BEING WAGED FURIOUSLY—HAND TO HAND ENCOUNTERS REPORTED.

ALLIES REPULSE GERMANS

German Sbbmarine Sunk Off Dutch Coast—Berlin Reports Germans Have Crossed Yser Canal. Warships Used.

New York.—The situation along the North Sea coast and for many miles to the south appears to have changed little. A continuation of the great battle that has been in progress since the Germans essayed their advance on the coast toward French seaports is reported in official dispatches, and apparently the fire of the opposing forces is becoming more desperate than ever, with charges and counter-charges on both sides.

Germany is said to have many thousands of re-enforcements to aid the right wing in forcing its way through what is, from a strategic viewpoint, the most important piece of territory in Northern Belgium. The Belgians are fighting hard and there is no doubt that French re-enforcements, and possibly British, have been brought up to aid the allied armies.

The latest French official communication declares all attacks of the Germans from the North Sea to the south of Arras have been repulsed, which is a more optimistic view from the French standpoint than that expressed in an earlier announcement that the Germans had made headway at certain points.

In addition, the French have occupied the important position of Melzicourt, which commands the roads leading from Varennes, around which there are strong German forces, to the valley of the Aisne.

The British and French warships continue to pour shells into German ranks, and the Germans are guarding points along the coast to be ready for a possible British landing.

A German submarine has been sunk off the Dutch coast by the British destroyer Badger. The official announcement of this incident gives no details, but says the Badger's bow was damaged when she rammed the submarine, which is believed to have been attempting a torpedo attack.

Berlin officially reports that German forces have crossed the Yser canal, where for several days past the Bergians had offered strong opposition.

Berlin also reports that German troops are advancing east of Ypres and southeast of Lille. There has been very severe fighting for a long time past in this vicinity.

RUSSIANS WIN ON VISTULA

Germans Left Bridges and Russian Advance Was Aided—Russina Capital Aglow Over Success.

Petrograd.—An official communication issued by general headquarters says:

"Our troops beyond the Vistula are pressing the armies of the enemy in retreat. North of the Pilitza river the Germans are are offering only feeble resistance. They have been driven back as far as Sklernievice.

"South of the Pillitza, on the roads to Radom, we have forced the Austro-Germ an troops to engage in a serious battle. The fighting line extended 40 versts (26 miles). At certain points the engagements took on the character of hand-to-hand encounters.

"In the forest around Radom several of our infantry regiments successfully carried out bayonet attacks. At other points we have taken prisoners and rapid firers.

"Above the River Iljanka the Austrial troops are seeking again to establish themselves on the Vistula, but our troops have crossed the river and are offering strong opposition.

"Along the River San and south of Przemysl desperate engagements continue, but the advantage is with our troops, who have here made thousands of prisoners. In taking the heights of Tytchentza, south of Jaroslau, we have made prisoners of five Austrian companies."

Petrograd is aglow over the reported repulse of the Germans at Warsaw and in the vicinity of Ivangorod and the retreat of the Arstrians.

Military authorities, however, instead of magnifying the importance of the German withdrawal are preparing for an attempt by the enemy to resume the aggressive. Russian re-enforcements and ammunition trains are streaming toward Warsaw and Ivangorod.

Vigorous Attack from Toul.

Berlin.—An extraordinarily vigorous French attack is being made from Toul, along the line from Pont-A-Mousson to Gironville, against the German army operating against the line of fortresses extending from Verdun to Toul.

Russians Hold Lemberg.

London.—A Central News dispatch from Copenhagen says German advices declare the Russians are making desperate preparations to retain Lemberg.

GENERAL VON HINDENBURG

General von Hindenburg is commander of the German forces that are opposed to the army of Russia in East Prussia.

FIGHTING NEAR PRZEMYSL

No Change in General Situation in the East—Austrians Claim Victory in Galicia—Many Prisoners Taken.

Petrogad.—Official announcement has been given out by the general staff of the commander-in-chief of the Russian forces, as follows:

"There has been no further change in the general situation. Russian troops are in contact with the enemy at various points, and there has been fighting on the River Zoura, at Stry, in Galicia, and in East Prussia.

London.—Germans and Russian reports agree that the situation in the east has not changed, although the armies are in close touch along the East Prussian frontier and across Poland and Galicia. In Galcia, however, the Austrians claim to have repulsed Russian attacks and to be making progress in their campaign to drive out the invaders.

The Russians, on the other hand, say they are making large numbers of prisoners. Heavy fighting is going on around Prezemysl and the cupolas of the forts surrounding the town, says an Italian correspondent. The town itself, however, has not been damaged.

JAPS LOSE LAND BATTLE

Alternate Reverses and Victory in the Eastern War Zone—British Lose Some Men.

Peking.—Reliable information obtained in Peking is to the effect that a British detachment sustained a number of casualties while crossing land that had been mined by the Germans near Tsing-Tau. Arrivals at the Chinese capital from Siberia say Russian troop trains are traveling westward over the trans-Siberian railway hourly.

Tokyo.—It was announced officially in Tokyo that the German torpedo boat S. 90, which escaped from Tsing-Tau under cover of darkness, has been found aground and destroyed by the Japanese at a point sixty miles south of Kiao-chau bay.

Peking.—Refugees who have come out of Tsing-Tau, the fortified position in the German possession in Shantung Province, are authority for the statement that up to the time they left the Japanese had lost several thousand men before Tsing-Tau, while the casualties of the Germans did not amount to more than several hundred.

USE GUNS FROM WARSHIPS

Incessant Fighting Has Been in Progress from North Sea to Labassee. Ostend Bombarded by British.

New York.—Incessant fighting has been in progress from the North Sea as far south as Labassee, a distance of about 50 miles, but this line is divided into several fronts, on which separate engagements are being fought. It is this line the Germans are endeavoring to break in their attempt to reach Dunkirk and other French seaports.

Three British monitors—the Severn, Humber and Mersey—are shelling the Germans in the vicinity of Ostend, where it is said terrible execution has been done. Machine gun detachments also have been landed from these vessels and are assisting in the defense of Nieuport.

The British admiralty, which for a day or two withheld the news that the British fleet was participating in coast operations, now compliments the monitors and the bluejackets for excellent service.

Battle in Black Sea.

London.—A dispatch from Copenagen to the Central News says:

"The Berliner Tageblatt publishes a elegram from Bucharest saying that vidently a big Russian-Turkish naval attle has taken place in the Black ea."

Amsterdam.—The Telegraf Sluis orrespondent says that apparently te Germans have been repulsed near iddelkerke. Their guns are now ear Ostend.

FRENCH IN ALSACE AGAIN

Fighting in Belgium Continues Without Decided Advantage on Either Side—Petrograd Claims Victory—Austrians Fight Well.

New York.—After days of incessant fighting dents at last have been made in that part of the battle line which had run virtually straight north and south from Ypres, in Belgium, to the bend in the elbow in the vicinity of the forest of Aigue, in France.

Just a short distance above its center this line now curves like an inverted letter "S," the allies having pushed back the Germans east of Armentieres in an endeavor to press into Lille, and the Germans having forced the allies to give ground around La Bassee, probably hoping to obtain control of Bethune, a railroad center seven miles west of La Bassee.

Of fighting near the coast, where British and French naval vessels are endeavoring to aid the allied troops in holding back the German advance, nothing was vouchsafed in the report.

Altkirch, in Upper Alsace, near the Swiss frontier, has been taken by the French at the point of the bayonet. Since the outbreak of the war this town has been the scene of much fighting and several times has changed hands.

Petrograd claims the Germans continue to retreat and that Emperor Nicholas' forces have crossed the Vistula without resistance. The Austrians are given credit in the Russian report for continuing to fight stubbornly on the Vistula, on the San and south of Przemysl.

The British admiralty has issued a statement saying that the necessity to use its warships for convoy duty having passed, British cruisers, aided by vessels of the Austrian, Japanese, French and Russian navies, will search the seas in an endeavor to run down the eight or nine German cruisers, including the Emden and the Karlsruche, which have been playing havoc with shipping of the allied countries.

DESPERATE BATTLE RAGING

Battle in West Flanders and Northern France Still Rages—Both Armies Are Re-enforced.

London.—Desperate fighting continues in West Flanders and Northern France between Germany's armies reenforced by virtually all her forces in the occupied portions of Belgium, and French, British and Belgian troops, aided by British warships.

Along the coast the Ysar river still divides the contending forces. Neither side, apparently, has advanced, but in the interior, according to a German report, the allies are retiring from several important positions.

This statement of the Germans is contradicted, however, by the French communication, issued in Paris, which says the allies have not been moved, despite violent attacks.

All along the front from the North Sea to the Swiss border, in fact, each side claims to have repulsed the other or to have made slight progress at various points.

The contending armies seemingly are so nearly equal in strength that neither can force the other back, pierce the front or get around the wings.

DESTROY SUBMARINE BASE

British Find German Supply Station in Shetland Islands—Seek Wireless Station.

London.—British war vessels have destroyed a German submarine base discovered on one of the uninhabited rocks of the Shetland Islands, in the North Sea, according to a report from Scotland. It is said a large stock of oil, battery plates and extra torpedoes for the use of submarines striking at the North Sea fleet were found there. Another report says a German wireless station is evidently operating near Loch Lomond, but has not been located. It is said to be a sending station, which is difficult to discover. Messages have been intercepted constantly and many efforts made to find the apparatus. Some shipping men believe a story that the Oceanic was struck by a torpedo from a submarine and ran upon the rocks of the Scottish coast to save her crew.

Villages on Fire.

London.—"The villages of Schooten, leftinghef, Wilskerke and Slype, in Northern Belgium, are partly on fire," according to the Daily Mail's Flushing correspondent.

Gen. Von Moltke Dying.

Amsterdam.—Dispatch here reports that Gen. von Moltke, chief of the German general staff, is dying from liver complaint. Gen. von Falkenberg, German minister of war, is acting in his place.

MAJOR GENERAL ALLENBY

Major General Allenby, who has been distinguishing himself on the left wing of the allied army in France, is recognized as one of the most capable of Great Britain's cavalry leaders. He won fame in the South African war and in 1910 was made inspector general of cavalry in England.

TERRIBLE LOSS INFLICTED

Russians Claim Warsaw Victory—Energy of Troops Saved City from Bombardment

Petrograd.—The official news bureau in a statement reviewing the fighting around Warsaw says:

"The Russian troops displayed exceptional energy in coming to the defense of Warsaw and saving the city from a German bombardment. The Russian concentration was effected with greater swiftness than was called for by strategical reasons.

"The Siberian regiments arriving at Warsaw were immediately sent to the front. During their bayonet charges at night, in the forest of Motchidlovsk, the Siberian soldiers took many prisoners belonging to the Twenty-first German corps.

"The Seventeenth German corps and some of their reserve troops, who attempted to push forward in the region between Bionie and Prouschkoff, suffered severely. It was there that the Siberian troops, together with other Russian forces, inflicted terrible losses on the enemy. Many villages in the vicinity were taken and retaken in hand-to-hand fighting.

"In engagements near Kozienica the Caucasian regiments also gave proof of extraordinary courage. For eight days these regiments were fighting on the left bank of the Vistula in the marshes, where the trenches were constantly under water. Here they sustained the fire of the enemy's heavy artillery, but all the German attacks were repulsed.

"Several regiments suffered severe losss and one regiment had three commanders seriously wounded, one after the other."

RUSSIANS ARE ADVANCING

Russia Says Germans Are Fleeing from Warsaw—Abandon Positions That Were Fortified in Advance.

London.—The Times correspondent at Petrograd telegraphs:

"The German armies are in full flight from Warsaw, leaving all their wounded. The Russians are in pursuit.

"The correspondent of the Bourse Gazette wires that exceptionally stubborn fighting occurred southwest of Suwalki, where the Russians repulsed all of the enemy's attacks and assumed a counter offensive, the Germans losing heavily. The Germans, after being re-enforced, made an advance, supported by artillery fire, and the fighting continues. The correspondent adds that the Mlawa column, connecting two groups of German forces in East Prussia and on the Thorn-Cracow front, has confined itself latterly to foraging, and shows no intention of advancing.

"In a southwesterly direction from Warsaw the Russians continued to press the enemy, who is fighting stubbornly on the Galician front. The fighting has been in progress for a whole week. Here the Austrians had assembled several army corps, of which eight are now in the field, and exerted every effort to turn the Russian position. All accounts agree that they have failed lamentably and have suffered tremendous losses."

German Destroyer Captured.

London.—An Exchange dispatch from Peking, received here, states the allied warships blockading Kiao-chau have captured a German destroyer, which escaped from the harbor.

Austrian Commander Courtmartialed.

Paris.—A Havas dispatch from Rome says a report has been received there from Udine, Italy, that the Austrian general, Bruderman, defender of Lemberg, has been deprived of his command and ordered courtmartialed.

Revolt in Portugal.

Lisbon.—A revolutionary outbreak in the cities of Braganza and Mafra under the leadership of Adriano Beca, a former colonel, has been promptly put down, according to official announcement made here.

POWER TO SLEEP LOST TO BRITISH REGIMENT AFTER WEEKS OF FIGHTING

London.—The English regiment that cannot sleep—the men with nerves so racked by the terrific struggle in the trenches on the Aisne that they cannot bring themselves to go to bed—is the grimmest spectacle I have met in this war. I spent a night and a day with these men, and left them rather hysterical myself only a few hours ago.

We parted company and still it seems to me like a bad dream from which it is hard to wake. This regiment is made up almost entirely of Welshmen and has one of the finest records. It was visited and congratulated by Field Marshal French. It has been mentioned in official dispatches for bravery, and now it is paying the price.

Cool Under Fire.

The men did not begin to break until after the tenseness had passed. So long as they were under fire they were cool and in command of themselves. But the position they held was so exposed to fire that they had never a moment's rest, and after a month, when they were ordered back, they went to pieces.

I had spent the night before within a mile of them. When I turned south from the Aisne after a night in the trenches I took refuge at a farm on a rich plateau that borders the river. It is a big establishment, employing dozens of men at ordinary times, and the house itself is built on a quadrangle 200 by 300 feet. It was almost big enough to shelter a regiment.

English Captain Appears.

The owner and his son are in the army and the only persons there are two old women, an old man, and a girl. They took me in, gave me a good dinner, and we were sitting around an open fire when a bell on the great door to the courtyard rang. We went out to find a tall English captain and six sergeants.

The captain explained that he had been sent ahead to find billets for his regiment, which had been relieved by French troops. He spoke in a rapid, nervous way, and the six sergeants seemed strangely fidgety. I acted as interpreter and assured them that the farm could shelter three companies and that a farm two kilometers farther on could take care of the rest.

Leaving three sergeants, the captain and the other three and I went on to the other farm and arranged for billets. There two sergeants remained. One returned with us and took the road back into the lines to show the approaching regiment the way.

Places for Six Hundred.

All this time I kept noticing how nervous all these men were; but it was not until I went into the comfortable hall of the farm again that I noticed how bad it was. I had arranged for them to go to bed, but I could not induce them to do so. The sergeants prepared places for 600 men, but all night they kept knocking about with lanterns. There were beds for all; they admitted they had not seen beds for six weeks, and they professed a desire to get into them, but did not.

The captain was the worst example I saw of a strong man going so completely to pieces. He stood 6 feet 3 inches and weighed about two hundred pounds in bones and sinew—one of the best types of Englishmen. I knew by his type that he by habit and training was reserved, but his tongue was loosened and he talked for hours. I was learning astonishing things, but tried many times to get him to go to bed. But he would not even take off his shoes. He said he could sleep better in an armchair before the fire, and in the end he never closed his eyes.

Story of Leader.

I had not slept the night before, and about two o'clock in the morning fell into a heavy sleep, waking at nearly four o'clock. He was sitting, wide eyed, staring at the fire, and smoking. A few minutes later others came in. The captain said:

"Sleep? How could we sleep, sitting tense all night in the trenches, knowing that the Germans were less than one hundred yards away and were watching every moment for an opportunity to overrun us? Even in the day we had to lie just behind our trenches, always alert, sleeping half an hour at a time, waked by rifles on either side, and knowing that the country was filled with spies, telling everything we did.

Worse Than Savages.

"I am a soldier. I follow war as a profession. I have fought in South Africa and have been in Indian campaigns. I thought I knew what war was, but never have seen battles between savage tribes so fierce as the fight back there.

"Shrapnel is breaking around you all the time. I have seen shrapnel so thick that it did not seem possible for any one to live through it; but it doesn't seem to kill much. But those big shells—'coal boxes'—they're the boys that do damage. If they break near you, you are gone."

Now that the English are out of the trenches they are like uneasy old women. I tried to get them to go to bed, but by dawn there were not more than fifty asleep. They talked about the big sleep they were going to have the next night and kept talking about it until noon, when a dispatch came ordering them to move on at nightfall. Then they agreed that it was too late to try to get any sleep. They seemed to welcome the night march.

BERTHS IN TRENCHES FOR BRITISH SOLDIERS

London, England.—A descriptive account of recent developments in France, sent by an eye witness attached to the British general headquarters, has been given out in London and is in part as follows:

"On the firing line the men sleep and obtain shelter in dugouts they have hollowed or cut under the side of the trenches. These refuges are raised slightly above the bottom of the trench, so as to remain dry in wet weather. The floor of the trench also is sloped for purposes of drainage.

Are Appropriately Named.

"Some of the trenches are provided with overhead cover, which gives protection from the weather as well as from shrapnel balls and splinters of shells. Considerable ingenuity has been exercised by the men in naming these shelters. Among the favorite designations are the 'Hotel Cecil,' the 'Ritz hotel,' the 'Billet Doux hotel' and the 'Rue Dormir.'

"On the road barricades also are to be found boards bearing this notice: 'This way to the Prussians.'

"Obstacles of every kind abound and at night each side can hear the enemy driving pickets for entanglements, digging trous-de-loup, or working forward by sapping. In some places, obstacles have been constructed by both sides so close together that some wag suggested that each side provide working parties to perform this fatiguing duty alternately, inasmuch as the work of the enemy is almost indistinguishable from ours and serves the same purpose.

Quarries Make Spacious Halls.

"Quarries and caves, to which allusion already has been made, provide ample accommodation for whole battalions and most comfortable are the shelters which have been constructed in them. The northern slopes of the Aisne valley fortunately are very steep and this to a great extent protects us from the enemy's shells, many of which pass harmlessly over our heads to burst in the meadows along the river bank.

Bomb Dropped on Ammunition.

"It already has been mentioned that, according to information obtained from the enemy, 15 Germans were killed by a bomb dropped upon the ammunition wagon of a cavalry column. It was thought at the time that this might have been the work of one of our airmen, who reported that he had dropped a hand grenade on this convoy and had then got a birds-eye view of the finest display of fireworks he had ever seen.

"From corroborative evidence it appears that this was the case; that the grenade thrown by him probably was the cause of the destruction of a small convoy carrying field gun and howitzer ammunition, which now has been found a total wreck. Along the road lie 14 motor lorries, their iron skeletons twisted and broken. Everything inflammable has been burned, as have the stripped trees—some with split trunks—on both sides of the road.

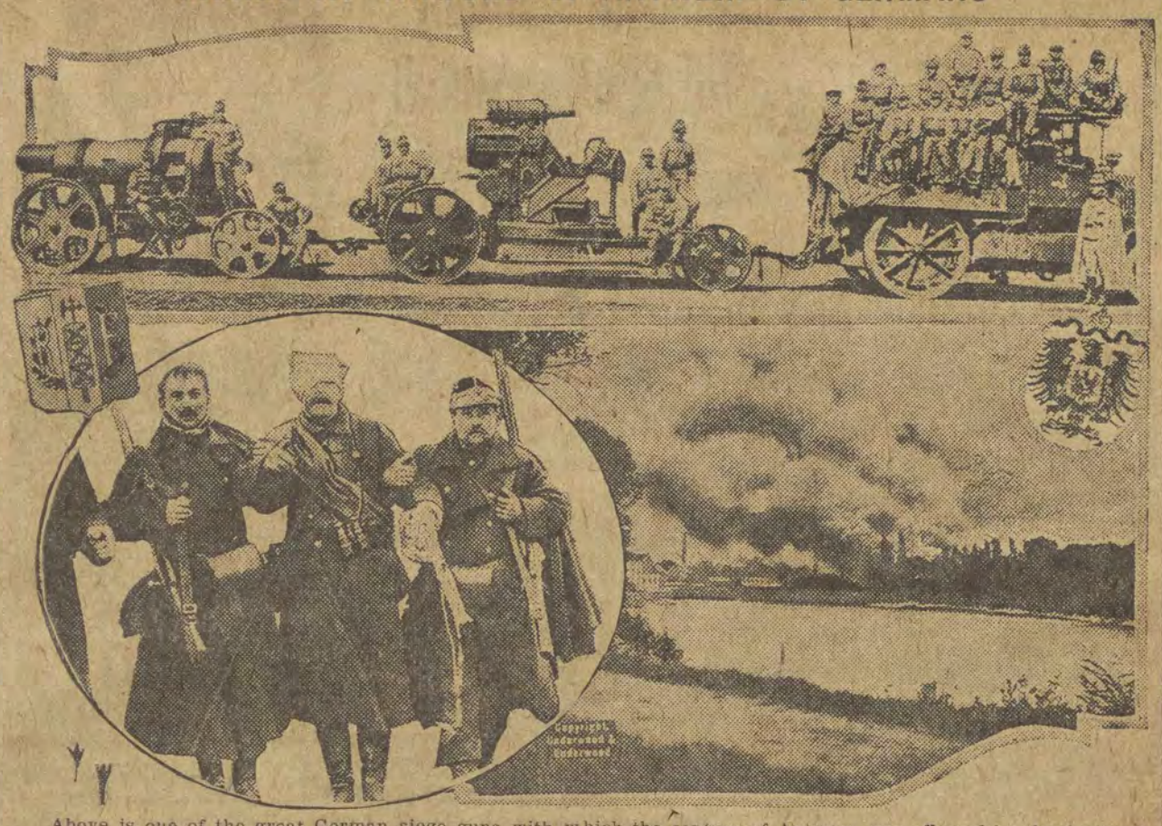
"Of the drivers nothing remains except tattered boots and charred scraps of clothing, while the ground within a radius of 50 yards of the wagons is littered with pieces of iron, split brass cartridge cases, which have exploded, and some fixed gun ammunition with live shells.

"If it were possible to reconstruct this incident, if it was, in fact, brought about as supposed, the grenade from the aeroplane must have detonated on the leading lorry on one side of the road and caused the cartridges carried by it to explode. Three vehicles immediately in the rear must then have been set on fire with a similar result.

"If this appalling destruction was due to one hand grenade it is an illustration of the potentialities of a small amount of high explosive detonated in the right spot, while the nature of the place where the disaster occurred—a narrow forest road between high trees—is a testimony to the skill of the airman.

"It is only fair to add that some French newspapers claim this damage to the enemy was caused by the action of a detachment of their dragoons."



HEROISM OF JEW MAY WIN HIM DECORATION

London.—Because of conspicuous bravery shown in the Russian campaign in East Prussia, a Jewish noncommissioned officer named Miller has been recommended by General Rennenkampff for decoration with almost the highest class of the Order of St. George. This is related in a dispatch from Petrograd to the Reuter Telegram company.

Miller enrolled as a volunteer at the outbreak of the war and later was promoted to the rank of noncommissioned officer in one of the Cossack regiments.

Among his exploits were the capture of a German armored automobile, the seizing of a supply train, and the taking of a quantity of arms and ammunition. Also, while the Russians were nearing Suwalki, Miller, disguised as a peasant, entered the German lines and obtained full details regarding their forces.

Above is one of the great German siege guns with which the capture of Antwerp was effected by the Germans. For transportation it is divided into three parts, the gun itself being seen at the left, the carriage and recoil apparatus in the center and the ammunition wagon and crew at the right. Below, at the right is a distant view of the burning petroleum works of the city, and at the left some of the battered defenders retreating.

Soldiers Encouraged to Wed.

London.—Quick to realize, as was Germany, the necessity of a high birth rate to offset the deaths due to the war, a movement has been started in England to reduce the marriage fees and to encourage soldiers and sailors to take wives before leaving for the front.

MRS. THOMSON TELLS WOMEN

How She Was Helped During Change of Life by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I am just 52 years of age and during Change of Life I suffered for six years terribly. I tried several doctors but none seemed to give me any relief. Every month the pains were intense in both sides, and made me so weak that I had to go to bed. At last a friend recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to me and I tried it at once and found much relief. After that I had no pains at all and could do my housework and shopping the same as always. For years I have praised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for what it has done for me, and shall always recommend it as a woman's friend. You are at liberty to use my letter in any way."—Mrs. THOMSON, 649 W. Russell St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Change of Life is one of the most critical periods of a woman's existence. Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to carry women so successfully through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

She—No, I don't like the crop of wild oats on it.

Not Particular.

A prisoner in one of the Irish police courts the other day was asked his occupation. He mentioned several callings that he followed from time to time.

"And among other things," inquired the prosecuting lawyer, "do you pick pockets?"

"No," he retorted; "I don't pick them; I just take them as they come."

No Excuse.

Representative Bacon of Georgia was condemning in a Macon club the German general staff for its antiquated close formation in attack, a formation which costs the German army thousands of lives.

"Close formation," he said, "was excellent in Napoleon's day, but with our modern machine guns, shooting myriads of bullets a minute, it is a useless, it is a cruel waste of life."

"But," said a German-American, "we've got so many men, you know, congressman—we've got so many, we can afford to—er—to lose—"

"My friend," Mr. Bacon interrupted, "would you excuse your cook for serving you watery soup because there had been a rainy season?"

Come to Clanton on Friday and Saturday, October 30 and 31, and register for the general election. Don,t forget it.

We understand that a contract was let by the county commissioners Monday for about twenty miles of road to be built, to the same party who built about two miles, near Maplesville which cost the county about $14 000. We think this question should have been left to a vote of the people of the county who will be effected by the debt, as provided by the constitution. It appears that the contracting of this large debt upon the county means that one road in the county will get all the money, and that there will be no more work done on the various roads of the county, for the next few years at least.

We hope every voter in the county will see the importance of voting a straight ticket next Tuesday at the general election. If the principles of any party are to be successful, and attain any advantage, they must be given the right of power from the smallest office to the highest. Some may be tempted or fooled into splitting their tickets again as they were last election; but it is almost universally true that all who were so led off two years ago, have already seen their error, and repented. The men on the Progressive ticket are all men who are capable of filling the places to which they aspire, and there is no need in the world for anyone to split his ticket. If you believe in the Pregressive party and its principles, vote it straght, thereby giving to it more power and efficiency, by placing its men in office from one end of the ticket to the other.

Our friend, the Clanton Press seems to think that when a man fails to take part in the Democratic election in Alabama, he is bartering his whole soul, body and existence for a matter of no worth and consideration. But we believe that when a man votes against the Democrats in Alabama, he is doing a worthy deed. and registering his open protest against things that are worthless, wrong and unjust. When he votes against the Democrats, he is registering one for the rights of the people.

If the Press believes what it said last week, why didn't they show one thing that the Democrats have done in the last few years that is commendable. If the Democratic party is the party of the people, and doing the wishes of the people. and working with the people, why have they refused to make a platform and place before the voters that they might see what the party stood for? If they are the party of right and good faith, why haven't they carried out the platform they made to the people four years ago? If they are economical in the management of government affairs, why is it that it took them less than a year to strip the treasury of not only our state but also our county? We would feel proud for everybody to know that we opposed the policies of the Democrats, and have it known that we protested against them by a vote at the polls. To oppose the Democrats in Alabama, is to oppose ring rule, an that kind of government that is all cut and dried, without any regard as to what is best for the people.

Yes, it is a fact that for many years in Alabama, nomination on the Democratic ticket meant election; and a sad fact indeed. For anyone can see very easily the injustice of a onesided government. So long as there is only one party of strength in Alabama, the people will continue to be cheated of their rights, and be compelled to endure any kind of government the machine wants to put over them. The sooner the start to overcome this is made the quicker will relief come to us. Let the voters start next Tuesday; cast your vote for the Progressive ticket, and you will never regret it.

Judge Reynolds On Campaign

The campaign will close next Saturday, with speaking at Clanton at ten o'clock, Jemison at two o'clock, and Thorsby at seven o'clock. There will be a joint discussion at each of these places. It is hoped that there will be a large attendance, and the ladies are especially invited to be present.

I want to thank the people for their hearty support in the campaign, and also for the large crowds that have been attending the speakings. I am sorrow we could not meet the people at the places they wanted us to but it has been a busy time with us and we have not been able to do as much along this line as we desired.

I want to say that we have waged a clean campaign, and have tried to get the facts before the people as best we could, notwithstanding the fact that the Democrats have dodged almost every issue, and have tried to side track us by injecting personalities and every other foreign question that they could. But the people of this county are not easily fooled, and they know more than the democrats give them credit for.

The people know that the Democrats stand for high taxes; for the rule of the bosses here in Clanton, for there has never been an issue between the people of the county and of Clanton, but that the democrats have decided in favor of Clanton, and even when the democrats have divided in the county, Clanton has always won out.

There has never been such a confusion before in this county as there has been for the last three years, and on every issue where the democrats have had the deciding vote the people have lost.

If with only a national democratic administration the people's voice has been so depressed, what would it be if all the officers were democrats.

There has been an effort to conduct this campaign on personal abuse and slander by the Democrats. There have been some very hard things said about me; all foreign issues in this campaign; every speaker sent out and nearly every article written used me as their text; but I considered the low and unimportant source from which they came and paid them no attention; but after the campaign is over, if anyone has any personal grievances against me, I suppose they know where my place of business is.

I hope after the election is over that the crowd that has instituted this method of campaigning will see how the people of this county appreciate such methods.

I hope our people will go to the polls early and stay until the votes are counted: we can all afford to loose one day when it is so important to us.

Just a few votes four years ago would have saved the tax papers of this county many thousand dollars in taxes; and I am sure we will carry this election by the largest majority we have in many years, if we only do our duty till election is over.

In conclusion I will say that I think we have nominated a good ticket in this county. I believe Mr. Harris will make a good sheriff, Mr. Thomas a good representative, Mr. Williams and Mr. Waldrup good commissioners. I want to congratulate our people on their united support of this ticket; I have not heard a single complaint on the part of any of our people. Of course the few bosses have not been satisfied for they know that if our ticket is elected, that they will be down and out.

Respectfully,
L. H. Reynolds

Registrars Here Oct. 30 and 31

The Board of Registrars for Chilton county will be in session at the court house next Friday and Saturday for the purpose of registering all who have been heretofore placed on the poll list of Chilton county. Let everyone who has not qualified, come on those days and do so. It means your right to cast a ballot in the general election Tuesday.

New Bungalow in Gowan Addition

One of the latest additions to Clanton's list of elegant new residences, is a handsome bungalow recently conpleted near the County High School by Mr. J.D. Smith. The work was done by Mr. Atchison, a young contractor of Birmingham, and son of our County Commissioner. It will be one of the most desirable homes in that splendid section of town, and is both a credit to the architect, and to Mr. Smith, besides the added appearance it gives to that part of town.

To My Friends And Customers

I want to thank you for the trade you are giving me at the present time, and I want to assure you that I will appreciate every dollar of cash trade you can give me in the future, as there has never been a time when I needed it worse than now.

I am trying to keep a small amount of everything the farmer needs, and am selling it as cheap as I can. I invite you to come and see my stock while in the city, and if I haven't got what you want in stock, I will take pleasure in ordering it for you.

I am selling seed wheat at cost, $1.60 per bushel; Bur clover, at $1.50 and Crimson clover at $5.10 per bushel.

I want to encourage farmers to raise winter crops. The farmers in this country must change their mode of business and production, or they are going to reap failure

You will be here this week for the fair, and I want you to come to see me.

THORSBY NEWS

The Ladies Guild met at the home of Mrs. Butler last Thursday afternoon. There was a short Business Meeting followed by a social hour and Refreshments.

A number of friends of Mr. A. K. Horn met at his home last Friday evening to help him celebrate his Birthday. There was a short Program consisting of music by Miss Lassfolk, solos by Mr. Philip Horn and remarks by Mr. Butler, followed by refreshments. Mr. Horn was presented with a gold ring by his children and grandchildren and with other gifts.

Basket Ball is being played with much vigor by the young men of the Baptist High School and Thorsby Institute. A match game between the two schools on Thursday evening of last week resulted in a score of 12 to 3 in favor of the Unity-Chilton Baptist High School.

The opening concert of the Joint Entertainment Course was given by the Beverly Entertainers on Monday night of this week. The concert was well attended and was enjoyed by all. The dates of the remaining numbers on the course will be announced later.

A carload of fertilizer for the strawberry crops was received here Tuesday. The order was placed through the Farmers Union. Over 5 tons of potash were secured because of its superior value to the crop.

Considerable crimson and bur clover and vetch are being sown around Thorsby. The school garden of Thorsby Institute will have different varieties of winter clover crops, including white blooming crimson clover, Augusta vetch, Canada field peas, rye, wheat, oats, rape, and others. Six acres of Crimson clover will be seeded on the Institute farm.

Miss Ethel Morgan of Eclectic is the latest arrival at the girls dormitory. Miss Mary Lizzie Hughes was compelled to leave school, being threatened with appendicitis. She hopes to return soon.

The first public recital by the Institute music students will be given Friday evening, Nov. 6 at 7:30, Bates Hall.

Several people from Thorsby, including some Institute teathers, and the boy scouts, attended the Fair at Collins Chapel last Saturday. They report a very instructive and interesting occasion.

ROPER-SHELBY

A beauteful early morning wedding was that of Mr. Royal Marvin Roper and Miss Lillian Moore Shelby which was solemnized Monday morning at 8:30 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Shelby on Holcombe Street. The parlor, where the ceremony was performed, was prettily decorated with graceful palms and ferns and an alter was formed of palms and white flowers. Before the ceremony, Miss Dovie Roper, sister of the groom sang sweetly "I Love You Truly" by Carrie Jacobs Bond.

To the strains of Lonhengren's wedding march played by Miss Dorothy Graham the young couple entered together, there being no attendants. The bride was lovely in a coat suit of navy blue broad cloth and a black velvet hat trimmed with an ostrich pompon. She carried a shower bouquet of brides roses and lilies of the valley. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. A. Williams.

The bride is an unusually pretty girl and by her sweet, gentle nature has endeared herself to to many friends who wish for her every happiness.

Mr. Roper is a popular young business man of Montgomery and has a host of friends who congratulate him heartily.

After ten days, the young couple will be at home to their friends with Mrs. Shelby, on the corner of Sayre and Jefferson Davis Avenue.—Montgomery Advertiser.

Mr. Roper is the son of Mr. O. O. Roper of this city. He has many friends here who will learn of his marriage with interest.

The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of "THE MAN HIGHER UP," "HIS RISE TO POWER," Etc.

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

CHAPTER XXII—Continued.

"You see," he concluded, "it is critical. I can not understand," he exclaimed strongly, "the present attitude of labor. It is utterly lacking in sense of gratitude, of loyalty. I like to think of the mills as the means to life for thousands of men. And it pains me to see them become hostile and grasping. What have they to complain of?"

"Probably they feel entitled to a little more than a bare existence."

"Didn't we grant the sliding scale three years ago?"

"Perhaps," Mark returned dryly, "they guess from the number of temples to paleontology in prospect that the scale could fairly be raised. It could."

"I don't hold with you."

"What does Henley say?"

"What would Henley say but, Fight. He is mad—utterly mad in his hatred of unions."

"Quite mad."

"In this case he is right. I have not deserved to be compelled to stand and deliver. I have always been fair to labor. I have been willing to compromise our differences, to make concessions. I have felt toward them as a father to his children. They have now no just cause to organize to fight me. And my plans for the future do not admit of a shrinkage in income from raised scales or costly strikes. Oh!" Quinby's hands clenched in the stress of emotion. "If I were but as rich as MacGregor! He has been well served by the men he has made." Quinby, it seemed, had forgotten his late tribute to his young lieutenants.

"Who made him," Mark corrected.

"No," contradicted Quinby sternly. "To whom he gave opportunity. As I have given it to my partners. And never have I been so ill served as in the handling of this dispute." He paused to let the truth of this disservice sink into Mark's heart.

"That is where I need you. Henley is the last man in the world for such a matter. It is not a bully's task. Truitt, I want you to take charge of the situation, stand between Henley and the men, and settle it."

"Humph! Easier ordered than done. I don't hanker for the job, Mr. Quinby."

"You are the only one of the lot who can meet labor in a human plausible manner. It was you, I believe, who saved us from a strike three years ago—I have never voiced my appreciation of that, but I do so now. You can do it. And you owe it to me to try. Be tactful, be firm but gentle. Sauviter in modo sed fortiter in re. Make nominal concessions. Even go a little farther than that. But, Truitt, above all things there must be no strike." He leaned forward and put a hand impressively on Mark's knee.

"Truitt—I Place Myself In Your Hands."

"Truitt—" There was a hint of nervous haste in the mellifluous voice. "Truitt, a strike would place me in a false position. I am known to have uttered publicly certain views on labor's rights. I still hold firmly to those views—in the abstract. I also hold that they do not apply to this case. But the world would not understand that. It would say—" He paused again, leaving Mark to imagine what the cruel cynical world would say.

Mark thought he could imagine it.

"Truitt!" Quinby brought his hands in a slow splendid gesture down on Mark's shoulders. "I place myself in your hands. My reputation is dear to me. Not for my own sake, but because of the work to which I have pledged my life."

Mark turned a frowning gaze out of the window. Ten miles or more sped by before he looked at the waiting Quinby.

"I'll try it."

"I knew you would," Quinby smiled once more. "Succeed and you will find me not ungrateful. Henley, I believe, is thinking of retiring—" Their eyes met.

"Does Henley know it?"

Quinby ignored the question. "He himself has said you are the only man of the broad vision and—"

"It isn't done yet," Mark interrupted. "But if I pull it through, I'd rather you'd let me build that new city." He laughed queerly. "Strange as it may seem, the notion appeals."

"But that, I fear, is out of the question." Quinby shook his head sadly. "A beautiful dream but—paleontology has claimed me."

At Buffalo they left Quinby, whose car was attached to a New York train.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Philanthropy.

The Quinby strike is now history. It is, however, no part of recorded history that during the anxious months preceding one man was toiling, planning, spending himself to avert the tragic outcome he foresaw. It was quite hidden work. Even had it succeeded it would have been no more widely heralded than in failure.

He did foresee the outcome as tragic, but not because a philanthropist's reputation hung in the balance.

There was one man who saw and understood his efforts. He was Henley.

They were together one day, Mark arguing earnestly for a compromise. Henley listened, not because he was impressed by the arguments, but because he was studying the pleader.

"Are you for us," he interrupted a long period to demand sharply, "or for the men?"

"I'm for both."

"You can't be for both. Are you," Henley jeered, "still trying to play the man of peace?"

"No. I'm trying to obtain a little justice and to save the Quinby company from idle mills."

"They won't be idle long. And we can afford idleness better than the men can."

"They're growing bitter. There will be violence."

"Then let there be violence. I'll know how to meet it," Henley's jaws set. "There'll be no compromise. Let us fight it out now, while we're ready—and the men aren't. The harder the fight the better I'm satisfied, because the longer it'll take the union to recover."

"You're hopeless." Mark eyed him significantly. "I see I'll have to appeal to Caesar."

"Meaning Quinby? Caesar's ghost must feel flattered!"

"He has an interest in the premises. I should think it would be to your interest—"

"Is that a kind of a threat?" Henley inquired harshly. "I'm not afraid of Quinby just now. Sooner or later I expect to be kicked out of this company. But he can't kick me out of steel. And I don't propose to see the industry run to suit the whims of tough walking delegates and grafting labor bosses. You seem to be in Quinby's confidence. I'm free to say I don't like it. It looks to me as though you're hedging, so you won't have to go out with me."

"What do you expect?"

"I made you. I've given you all you have. I expect you to stand by me."

"You demand more than you give others. The men give you all they have and you refuse—"

"The men work for their living, as men must. Most of them get a good living. When they're worth it they get more. You got more. If they don't like our terms let them find better somewhere else—if they can. As for Caesar, don't count too much on him. There are bigger interests than his vanity at stake just now, and you'll find when it comes to a point they'll hold. Quinby's a blatherskite, but I've never said he's a fool."

Mark said nothing. Henley's words but echoed his own fears. Henley regarded him frowningly.

"What," he demanded abruptly, "has got into you the last year? Before that I could always count on you. Now—I don't understand you."

"When it comes to that," Mark laughed shortly, "I don't understand myself."

* * * * * * *

Mark had been partly right when he attributed the mood of their return to reaction. A lighter mood followed. Kazia's work allowed them to meet but seldom and then often for only hurried visits; the eagerness bred by separation drove such problems as Quinby and the meaning of their relation into the background. But the shadow never quite lifted. As winter wore on Kazia began to perceive growing up in Mark's heart a new interest, so strong that sometimes it intruded even into the brief hours that should have been given wholly to love.

There was an evening when he came to her apartment, tired and discouraged, but with an air that sent her memory back to a slender youth going doggedly forth each day to labor meant for stronger men. She, too, was tired from a long exacting case whose close allowed them this leisurely meeting, the first in weeks.

"This week," she told him after he had been there a little while, "I was offered the superintendency of nurses at the Todd hospital."

"That's fine! I'm glad. When do you begin?"

"Have you forgotten? I think it comes through Mr. Quinby."

"Take it anyhow," he answered promptly. "Since you won't let me help you."

"I don't like to be under obligations to him."

"Take it. If he meant mischief, I think we'd have heard from him before now. And it's only fair for somebody to get something out of him. God knows I'm doing enough for him."

"You mean with the men?"

"Yes. Though, if he only knew it, I'm not doing it for his sake. I believe it was for the men I undertook the job." He shook his head gloomily. "But the worst of it is, I'm almost certain to fail."

"Oh, I hope not."

"Yes. Sometimes I think I'm the only sane man left on earth. Each side thinks it's bound to win. One side is—and it isn't the men. But they won't listen to me. It makes me sick to think what they'll have to pay if they go into this hopeless contest. You don't know how the thing is taking hold on me. You think this queer talk from me?"

"I don't find it queer."

"It is queer. I haven't come to the why yet. Do you believe," he asked abruptly, "that love can awaken all the sympathies?"

"I believe that it can."

"Wouldn't it be strange," he went on musingly, "if through Quinby—the philanthropist!—I've found my big idea?"

"Your big idea?"

"Yes." He forgot that no Richard Courtney had ever defined it for her. "I'll probably fail in this wrangle. But after that—why not?—the happy city, and in Bethel. The thing's getting into my blood. Or am I, after all, the one who is mad?"

If she was white, he laid it to weariness. "If you are, I love your madness."

A silence. When she broke it he, absorbed in the train of thoughts set in motion by mention of the unbuilt city, did not catch the odd strained note in the words.

"Then you think I'd better take the position?"

"Ah!" He came back remorsefully to the subject. "Of course, you must take it."

"Even from Quinby?"

"However it comes, you're fitted for it. You've earned it."

"But," she insisted quietly, "I'd have to live at the hospital. I'd have no excuse for keeping this apartment."

"Oh, no, surely not! You musn't give it up. I need you, Kazia—these hours—" Alarm had driven all but love—he still called it love—from his heart for the moment. He leaned over and caught her to him.

"Not at once, perhaps," she murmured weakly. "I could come here sometimes—until the lease expires—"

He laughed. "Do you think love is determined by a landlord's contract?"

"Not by that!" With a little gasping cry she reached up and clung to him.

* * * * * * *

During the last days of the negotiations Mark almost hoped the strike could be averted. Then men, listening to his persuasions, agreed to accept a merely nominal increase in the wage scale. But the agreement must be signed, not by the men as individuals, but by the union for them; from that stand the young organization, its very life at stake, would not be moved.

Three men were in Henley's office on that last night before the decision was announced. One had just made his final plea for the compromise.

Henley shook his head firmly. "I will not recognize the union."

"But they ask so little."

Both glanced at the other man, a tall stately figure, pacing, hands clasped behind his back, up and down the room. A troubled despairing frown roughened the lofty brow.

"I'm looking ahead," Henley replied. "Labor organizations never go back, unless you catch 'em young and kill 'em off. Recognize them now and three years hence they'll demand a raised scale. Next, it will be the closed shop. Then another raise, and so on. We'll be running our mills for the benefit of men who have no stake in them, never knowing when they'll be after us with new outrageous demands. I will not have it." Henley spoke with feeling.

The pacing figure stopped, looking at Mark. "What have you to say to that?"

"I say, the men are desperate. They'll stop at nothing to win the strike. It will cost us millions."

"Cheaper now than ever," Henley interrupted.

"I say," Mark went on, "this industry, this company, can afford to grant any demands labor will ever make. And there's such a thing as humanity. If that isn't enough—" He paused, looking steadily at Quinby. "If that isn't enough, I say the public is on the men's side and it hasn't forgotten the Siamese twins of production and other beautiful sentiments publicly uttered by a certain famous philanthropist."

Quinby groaned and resumed his anxious pacing. But he was halted by Henley's next words.

"You had a visit from some men in New York last week."

"How do you know?" Quinby was visibly startled.

"I advised them to see you," Henley rejoined. "They're men of power. They own newspapers. They can make and unmake men and reputations. They can destroy you as easily as they would a corner grocer. They're interested in the future of steel. They're more interested, as every controller of property must be, in the fight to stamp out this epidemic of labor agitation. I remind you, it isn't safe to disregard their advice."

"What interest have they in my reputation?"

"Humph! They think as I do—damn your reputation!"

Quinby started, glared. His tongue fumbled vainly for words to answer this astounding lese-majesty. He took a step toward Henley, menacingly.

"Humph!" Henley grunted again. "You can save your wind. I'm not afraid of you just now. And I won't let this company be crippled by giving in to the union. The men who saw you won't permit it either—without punishing."

"I suppose you think they can keep you in this company, too?"

"No," Henley answered steadily. "Between you and me they won't interfere. But between you and them—between your expensive reputation and their interest—they will interfere. The labor unions are your common enemy.

Then Men Listened to His Persuasions.

If you let them get a foothold here, you may as well lie down and die. For there isn't a spot on earth where the truth about Quinby"—hatred gave savagery to the threat—"the pious fraud, the hounder of women, the traitor in business dealings, won't reach."

Quinby's glare had no power now, as at another time, to subdue Henley.

He sank into a chair, stretching out his hands to Mark in a helpless gesture. "Can't you say something?"

"If you aren't a coward and a fraud," Mark answered with undisguised disgust, "you'll know what to say. If you are—" He concluded with a shrug.

It was an intolerable moment for Quinby. He rose, made a pitiable effort to gather the tatters of his vanity around his naked cowardice.

"I leave you in charge. I go to New York tonight. An expedition starts for Tibet tomorrow. I shall join it."

He stalked stiffly to the door. There he stopped for a second, looking back with eyes that were not good to see.

Henley turned to Mark. "As for you," he began sternly, "I've let you play your game, because you could do no harm. But now, having learned that you can't pin faith even to the vanity of a coward—"

Mark met his gaze quietly. "I have learned more than that. But, at least, the feet were of iron, after all."

The next day the failure of negotiations was announced. On the next the strike was ordered.

Henley was ready. On the morning of the third day detached squads of strangers appeared in the vicinity of the mills, trying to saunter along with the air of casual ease. They were Henley's strike breakers, gathered from many cities.

And the strikers were ready, though few of them wot of preparation.

The first squad slipped unnoticed into the mills, and a second. Then along the mile or more of street an electric word passed from watching crowd to crowd: "Henley's strike breakers!" The third squad reached the refuge of the mills only by a sudden overbearing dash. The fourth found its way blocked and itself pressed back by a surging cursing mob. The remaining strike breakers rallied to this point and in a body tried by brute force to drive a lane through the resisting pack of men and women. But the mob grew faster, gathered around the invaders, roughly jostling them and shrieking taunts and blasphemies. Blows were struck, missiles hurled. Then above the clamor a shot was heard.

A cry, "A woman is killed!" answered by a hoarse frenzied bellow. Many weapons flashed from pockets where they had lain hidden. Other shots were heard, fired pointblank at living targets. The melee became a battle. When it was over, the strike breakers had fled and two score and more lay dead on the streets. Through the labyrinth of silent machinery and chilling furnaces a mob that panted with the thirst for blood hunted out and shot down those of Henley's men who had reached the mills. . . . Mad? Mad as though a bastile waited to be taken.

Two days the terror lasted. The mills—sacred property!—were wrecked. Timid posses were driven back. Crazed orators harangued the mob and took for ironic text "the Siamese twins of production."

Then with measured tread and gleaming bayonets came the force of the law, and peace—the peace of the strong—hovered once more over Quinby's mills.

CHAPTER XXIV.

The Pressure of Truth.

The strike was broken. Engines crunched and furnaces glowed again. The men, starved out, had crept back to the mill gates, begging for work. The troops marched away and the union, at least in Quinby's mills, never raised its head again.

But at what a cost!

Jeremiah Quinby returned—not, however, with a blare of trumpets. In fact, he came almost secretly, though not wholly out of modesty; no reporter so bold or so shrewd as to win to his well-guarded presence. The cynical public had lately become deeply interested in the Siamese twins of production and upon the devoted head of their author had heaped its cruel satire.

But Quinby's return was not without its objects. One of them was to unseat the arrogant Henley, and to this Quinby, without concealment or delay, bent his energies. In the other, which seems to prove that in matters of sex are neither prince, priest nor peasant, but only man and woman, more finesse was employed. Only one person had an inkling of this project and she kept well the secret.

There was heard a merry cracking of whips. One by one Quinby won the minor stockholders over to his primary object and approached the point where he could deal the blow. Henley grimly waited. Mark was not approached on the matter, for the sufficient reason that he, too, had been singled out for vengeance.

"Quinby is back," he told Kazia once.

There was a perceptible pause before she answered. "Yes. He visited the hospital the other day."

"Keeping his hand in, I suppose," he said lightly. "Unhappily, Quinby is cut off from public philanthropic exercises until the present cloud passes."

She achieved a smile.

"But humanity's loss isn't our gain," Mark grinned wryly. "He's getting ready to eliminate Henley, and me from the company."

"Oh, that's too bad. Will it make you—poor?"

"No. But it will leave me considerably less rich than I'd like to be."

"I thought you didn't care for money?"

"No man cares so little for it that he's willing to lose it. And I'll need every dollar I have."

She guessed what he had in mind. "You say you will need it?"

"For my happy city." He laughed, then grew serious. "Kazia, I'm going to build it. At least, I'm going to start it."

"Ah!" She turned away with a sharp intake of breath. "It—it would be something worth while."

For an hour, unconscious of cruelty, he discoursed of his plans, eagerly and eloquently. His eloquence was not in vain. She listened without comment, but as he talked the picture he saw grew before her, convincing, real—the happy city rising in the beautiful valley, a place where men toiled and were not consumed, found refuge from weariness not in vice, but in clean contented homes and wholesome sports, gave of their best to the labor because of its earnings they had a just share, living hopefully. . . . She measured it by the life of the steel maker as she had seen it, and him by the quality of his dream.

"Do you see it?"

"I see it."

"One of the things I've learned is to understand men of wealth. Their cruelties are the cruelties of cowardice—the fear of those who have that those who have not will force a distribution of the spoils. They're afraid of anything new or different. Therefore they will fight me as only cowards can—until they're convinced even humanity can pay dividends. That," he frowned, "is where Quinby will pinch me. Every dollar he takes from me will lessen my chances of pulling through the first fight."

"Can't you stop him?"

"As easy stop a mad snake. Quinby has much to take out on Henley and me. And we're helpless."

"Perhaps a way out will be found."

The flat lifeless voice, so unlike hers, recalled him to her.

"Are you disgusted?" he exclaimed remorsefully. "Here I've been clacking away like Quinby himself, never noticing how tired you are. Let me take you back to the hospital."

"No. I arranged to stay here overnight to begin packing my things up."

"But your lease—"

"Even leases," she answered quietly, "don't always run their full course. The agent has a tenant who wants this apartment and I promised to move out next week."

"Kazia!" He found himself flushing. Only by a strong effort could he make his eyes meet hers. "That means you think I'm forgetting you in my new plans."

"I think," she answered, "only that you're a man and that love, especially such love as ours, isn't enough."

He looked at her in silence for a moment. "Kazia," he began very gently, "I could lie to you, but there must be no lies between us. Love isn't enough—even such love as ours. A man must do his work. It's the inescapable law. But that doesn't mean that love—that you—won't always have a big place with me, a place all your own." He drew her closer, so that her head rested on his shoulder, and smoothed the thick dark hair. "It never occurred to me you wouldn't be as interested as I in my plans. You've given me so much, you've seemed so much a part of what I'm to do—I've thought of it as our work—"

A hand stole over his mouth. She raised her head, and she was smiling.

"Don't! You make me ashamed. . . . And now you must go."

"Can't I stay to help you?"

"A man pack!" she laughed gaily.

"A man," he sighed, trying to be jocose, "has so many limitations. But it's all right, Kazia?"

"It's all right."

But when he was gone the gay manner vanished. The strong figure drooped wearily. She fell to her knees beside a chair, burying her face in her arms.

"What does he know of love?"

The next evening, returning to his hotel for a late dinner, Mark found a memorandum to call up the Todd hospital. From the hospital he received word that Mrs. Whiting had gone to Rose alley and asked him to follow her. Some one was dying. He did not wait for dinner, but hailing a cab, set out on another journey to Rose alley.

He stumbled hastily up the gloomy staircase to Roman's door and rapped lightly. It was opened by an unkempt foreign woman, doubtless a neighbor, and he entered. Save for her the kitchen was empty. But by the light of a smoky lamp that stood on the table near an inner door, he saw a group dimly outlined. On a narrow bed lay a huge dropsical figure, seeming to Mark already dead. The Matka, more faded than ever, sat at the dying man's side, motionless as he, her gaze fixed rigidly upon him.

"Thank you for coming," Kazia said. "I'm glad you sent for me. Is there anything I can do?"

"Yes, get Piotr. He went away early this morning and doesn't know. It was very sudden. You'll probably find him at—" She named a corner a mile or more distant. "He makes speeches there every evening."

The cab came to a halt at a corner where many people passed. A small changing crowd had gathered around a man who from his soap box harangued them. He preached a gospel that, beginning with a germ of love, had grown in him into a creed of hate. It was a rambling incoherent harangue, full of bitter denunciation and vague generalities that never came to a point—the grotesque but pitiful outpouring of a feeble mind obsessed by a sense of injury real or fancied and cracking under the effort to inoculate others with its venom. Mark listened a moment.

"The man must be mad," he thought pitifully.

Piotr in his ramblings came to the late strike. He began a roll call of the masters of the Quinby company—Quinby himself, Henley, Higsbee, Hare—

"And Truitt!" The hoarse voice became, if that were possible, even more bitter. He fairly writhed as he shrieked out his charges. "Truitt the wife-beater! The rounder! With his women—!" For several minutes he raved on, regaling his audience with an array of disgusting but apocryphal details of Truitt's life that to his diseased fancy must have become proved facts.

"Go tell him to come here," Mark ordered the cabman. "Tell him his father is dying."

"Aw, hell!" growled a big Irishman in the crowd, audible even to the cab. "Shut up! Truitt's th' only wan av th' lot wid bowils t' him."

"Fool—fool!" Piotr shook clenched fists at the Irishman. "Are you taken in because he tried to stop the strike? Who was he working for then, you or Quinby? Where was he when Henley's strike breakers came to steal your jobs and shoot down your women? Where was his money when your children were starving for bread? Where—"

But the cabman had reached him with Mark's message. For a moment Piotr stared stupidly, trying to take in its meaning. Then he uttered a wild piercing cry.

"Dying!" He leaned toward the crowd, hands and face twitching in his frenzy. "My father's dying, but he can wait while I tell you about this Truitt. When he was starting out he came to our house, because my father took pity on him. My father loved him, better than he did his own son. He watched over him, cared for him, taught him all he knew of his trade. Then the old man broke. He wouldn't have been old anywhere else, but he had burned himself up trying to make Quinby's furnace hells pay. They threw him out, of course—and Truitt took his job. Truitt—partner of Quinby! The old man's heart broke. Then his mind gave way. And now he's dying—do you know where? In Rose alley!"

The crowd had become very still. To them, too, the tragedy that tortured the madman was clear; infinite repetition could not take away its bitterness.

"And that isn't all." The emotional delirium reached its climax. "In that house was a girl—just an ignorant Hunky girl but the kind men love. And Truitt made love to her. But when he left us, he left her, too—another broken heart! To forget him she married a worthless rummy she had to leave. Then she went out into the city to make her own living—you know the fight and the price women must pay or go down. And she—the girl he wouldn't take up with him—she paid—"

Bewilderment choked back the stream of words. For a man—whose pallor was not due to the garish arc lamp—had leaped from the cab and was elbowing a way swiftly toward him. The crowd fell back to let the man through, then pressed closer. Only Piotr and the Irishman recognized him. Mark caught Piotr by the arm and jerked him roughly from the box.

The Irishman's heavy hand fell on Mark's shoulder. "Let be, sor." Then he fell back before the livid countenance Mark turned on him.

"Keep out. I'll do him no harm. I'm only taking him to his father, where his place is instead of here blackguarding women he isn't fit to touch."

Piotr jerked his arm free. "I won't go with you!"

But the Irishman caught him. "Ye'll go as Misther Truitt tells yez. I'm thinkin' he's just loony, sor."

DANDRUFF AND FALLING HAIR

P. O. Box 3, Wanego, W. Va.—"I was troubled with dandruff, falling hair and itching scalp for two or three years. It was so bad at times my coat-collar would be covered so I was ashamed to go in company. It itched so my head was irritated and pimples would come on my scalp. My hair came out badly; it became thin and dry, so dry that it seemed as though there was no life in it.

MODERN WAR IS MERCIFUL

Under Existing Conditions the Wounded Are Given a Fair Chance to Recover to Health.

A general impression is that with powerful weapons of great precision greater loss of life and greater pain are caused. The view is almost certainly inaccurate. The modern bullet, says the Scotsman, unless it is of the soft-nosed type, is on the whole merciful, and either kills outright or gives its victim a fair chance of recovery. It does not, as a rule, mutilate.

The ambulance corps was practically unknown 60 years ago, and not only is aid brought more rapidly to the wounded, but it is far more effective than in the pre-Lister days. Rapidity of conveyance has increased beyond all comparison. In the present war it is true to say that in many cases men have been lying in a British hospital within 24 hours of receiving their wounds. If the risk of being hit is greater, the chances of recovery from injury have been immensely increased.

A TREATMENT THAT HEALS ITCHING, BURNING SKINS

Don't stand that itching skin humor one day longer. Go to the nearest druggist and get a jar of resinol ointment (50c) and a cake of resinol soap (25c). Bathe the eczema patches with resinol soap and hot water, dry and apply a little resinol ointment.

It's almost too good to be true. The torturing, itching and burning stop instantly, you no longer have to dig and scratch, sleep becomes possible, and healing begins. Soon the ugly, torturing eruptions disappear completely and for good.—Adv.

A Modern Disease.

Old Jake woke up and rubbed his eyes as he gazed on the unfamiliar room. Then he remembered, and hopped out of bed. Fifteen years had he saved out of the meager wages given him by a grateful farmer, in order to visit London.

"Uncle," came his young nephew's voice at the keyhole, "mother says'll you come and set these marrer seeds, and see what you can do with the old black 'en what's got a bad leg?"

Uncle and nephew soon entered the little back garden, when the old boy stopped short with amazement, and adjusted his glasses to gaze at the small figure on the grass plot, who was performing gymnastic feats.

"Does thy sister have fits, lad?" he asked, with concern.

"No, uncle," replied the nipper with a grin, "them's gymnastic feats."

"I'm sorry 'bout that," quoth the old chap. "'As she 'ad 'em long?"—Answers.

Not Due to Ignorance.

Doctor Briggs received a note from a farmer living back quite a ways in the country, requesting him to come as quickly as possible to see his child who was very sick with "a very bad cold."

The doctor examined the child and then turned to the mother.

"Don't you know," he asked, "that your little girl is coming down with the measles?"

"Yes, doctor," was the woman's reply, "I knew she was."

"Then why in the world," asked the doctor, "did you write me that she had a very bad cold?"

The woman hesitated for a moment, then, looking at her husband, said, with sullen frankness:

"Neither him nor me knew how to spell 'measles.'"—National Monthly.

Expenses Cut Down.

We must admit that the cost of living is rather high," said the campaign adviser.

"Well," replied Senator Sorghum, "we must do something with the money. We can't buy votes with it any more."—Washington Star.

CALOMEL WHEN BILIOUS? NO! STOP! ACTS LIKE DYNAMITE ON LIVER

I Guarantee "Dodsons' Liver Tone" Will Give You the Best Liver and Bowel Cleansing You Ever Had—Doesn't Make You Sick!

Stop using calomel! It makes you sick. Don't lose a day's work. If you feel lazy, sluggish, bilious or constipated, listen to me!

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile crashes into it, breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you feel "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and bowels constipated or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour just try a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store or dealer and get a 50-cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine; entirely vegetable, therefore it cannot salivate or make you sick.

I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your bowels of that sour bile and constipated waste which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable. I guarantee that a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone will keep your entire family feeling fine for months. Give it to your children. It is harmless; doesn't gripe and they like its pleasant taste.

Men Pay Homage to Mother's Friend

"I am not surprised to observe the number of men who come into the store to purchase 'Mother's Friend,'" remarked a leading druggist.

The expectant mother if she hasn't heard of this splendid embrocation is probably not reading the papers to much extent. And if she does it is a happy thought to send hubby to the drug store. "Mother's Friend" is applied externally over the abdominal muscles.

It is a gentle, soothing lubricant, penetrates to the fine network of nerves beneath the skin and has a marked tendency to relieve the muscular strain to which these broad, flat abdominal muscles are subjected. The cords, tendons and ligaments are thus permitted to stretch without the corresponding surface strain so often involved during the period of expectation. And particularly to young mothers is this remedial application of inestimable value since in thus keeping the muscles firm but pliant it enables them to go through the ordeal without laceration of the epidermis often the case when this gentle attention is neglected.

"Mother's Friend" is highly recommended by a host of women. Write Bradfield Regulator Co., 403 Lamar Bldg. Atlanta, Ga., and we will send you a valuable little book to expectant mothers.

AN INTERESTING LETTER FROM MR. WILEY GROE

The campaign will soon close and we all know what the result will be if the people go to the polls and do their duty next Tuesday. The peoples ticket will be elected by the largest majority in many years.

I am sure there never was a campaign conducted on a lower plane than that the Democrats have occupied in this one. Voter, stop for a moment and think who has beeu going over the county speaking for the Democrats; think of such a combination as Gant, Goodgame, Kilgore and Pounds, whisky and fly poison. It would make a dog sick to read the last issue of the Press.

Some people in this county got burned four years ago. They were fooled into voting for the Democrats, and have reaped a reward. The voice of the people in this county is ignored, and paid no attention at all. Ninety-five per cent of the people begged the authorities not to take the last cent out of the treasury to build a school for Clanton; even some of their own party were ignored. But the big bosses in Clanton said do it and the four thousand dollars was spent, contrary to, and in defiance of the wishes of the people. Not one dollar was left to pay the many of our citizens who had done honest work for the county, and needed their pay to buy meat and bread.

In this county are people who depend solely on the man in the country for a living, and every time they can, they will do anything against us and our interests. They would disfranchise everyone who does not vote to suit the bosses in Clanton. They would take our last privilege away; yet when we have a dollar to spend we run to them with it, increasing their power over us.

We have some merchants in Clanton who are willing to help the man in the country, and we should give them our trade. Judge Reynolds is a merchant in sympathy with us, and he has to bear loads of abuse because of his efforts in our behalf. We ask him to go out and make speeches, trying to reduce taxes, and restore our civic rights; so would it be but right for us to give such men our trade?

I think it is time for us to consider who are our friends, and then stand by them.

Watch the polls on election day, and see who votes for the interests of the people?

In conclusion, I want to ask what we would have done in this fight had it not been for such men as Judge Reynolds? They have not downed him on a single point of argument.

Respectfully,
WILEY GORE.

HOW THEY HAVE SERVED THE COUNTRY

President Wilson's letter of October 18 to Mr. Underwood chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means, is admirable phrased and strongly put. He certainly does know how to write good English. One cannot help wishing that he was equally expert in his perception of fact and his knowledg of cause and effect. Frank in his purpose to do what he can toward helping the re-election of as many as possible of the Free-Traders of the present House, Professor Wilson says of the long sitting just now closing that it is "A session singularly rich in thoughtful and constructive legislation."

If for the adjective "rich" the Professor had substituted "lacking" he would have been far nearer the mark. He then goes on to say: "The people of the country have been served by the members as they have seldom, if ever, been served before."

This is absolutely true. Heaven grant that they may never again be served the same way! The Free Trade members of this Congress found the country at 100 per cent in respect of business prosperity; of labor employed; of wages earned and wages spent in the channels of trade; of production, distribution, sale and consumption. After one year and eight months of Free-Trade Tariff bungling and of general antagonism toward business, the members of this Congress find the country 40 per cent. below par of production and consumption, of wage paying and wage spending; of merchandising; of transportation; 40 per cent. below par in practically every line of business activity.

This is how the members of this Congress have served the people of this country. In the face of such a record, Professor Wilson's elegant rhetoric looses much of its intended effect.—American Economist.

Majority for Progressive Ticket In Chilton County Is Enormous

Democrats Severely Defeated by Continuous Pouring in Of Bull Moose Votes in Almost Every Precinct in the County.

Majority for Bull Moosers Over 500

Every Democratic Candidate on the Ticket is Overwhelmingly Defeated --- Heaviest Vote cast in County for Years---Thomas has 550 Majority over L. R. Sawyer For Representative.

Early returns from the election of Tuesday indicate that the Progressive ticket in Chilton county will have the greatest majority ever given any ticket before. It is certain that the final count will show a lead over the Democrats of over 500 votes.

The heaviest vote that was ever polled in Chilton county will be registered for Tuesday's election when the official count is made. All day long there was a constant stream of voters pouring in at the several polling places over the county; and till late Tuesday night the clerks and returning officers were kept busy making the counts and signing up returns.

Beat 4, the Clanton box, shows a total of 501 votes polled, which is a considerable increase over any number ever voted before. Harris received 275 and Jones 215 at this box; Thomas 290 and Sawyer 194; Alexander for state senator 284 and Wallace 199; Waldrup 283 and Cox 206; Williams 290 and Atchison 195. It will be seen that Beat 4 gave a good majority for every one of the Progressive candidates.

Beat 9 at Thorsby gave Harris 189 and Jones 43. No further returns are available yet.

Beat 10 shows Harris 116 and Jones 35.

Beat 12 gave Harris 116 and Jones 20.

Beat 7 shows Harris 20 and Jones 50; Beat 8 Harris 14 and Jones 91; Beat 5 Harris 94 and Jones 122.

Beat 11, Harris 67 and Jones 10.

Beat 16 holds to her position as the banner beat of the county. Mr. Harris received 47 and Mr. Jones 3.

These are the earliest returns, and may not be exactly the correct vote, but they are near enough correct to show which way the tide is running.

The official count will be made Friday, and next week we will be able to give a complete tabulated vote for the whole county.

The Republicans in the northern states show a decided gain in Tuesday's returns. It seems that they are gaining strength over the Progressives and Democrats.

The returns in Shelby county show a very close race between the Progressive-Republicaus and Democars, with probably the latter a little in the lead.

The Democrats are saying already that they were beaten in this county because their people were deceived into voting against them by the political tricks of the Progressive leaders. Now the truth of it is that they have been deceived all right, but not by the Progressive leaders. They have been deceived by the Democrats who failed to give the people what they promised two years ago. The people of this county are not ignorant. They know what they vote for. They are among the few that have seen the fallacy of the Democratic party, and have taken the initative in breaking away from its bondage. The light will eventually spread to other people who have long been crushed by the machine of one-party oppression; and the people of this county should be complimented for being the bearers of the gospel of deliverance in the time when it was a task to do so. But we will do it without a murmur. We will do it with the solid confidence that there is a just and competent reward for an honest endeavor.

"You can fool some of the people all of the time; you can fool all of the people some of the time; but you cannot fool all the people all of the time." Yes, that is correct, just as the Press said last week. It was proven by the way the people of this county voted against the Democrats Tuesday.

Wonder what Mose Kilgore has done with the coffins he ordered some weeks ago to bury the defeated party in after election. If they are to be used for such a purpose, we would suggest that he reserve one of them for himself.

The Birmingham Age-Herald on Tuesday of this week—the very day of the election—carried a picture of Hon. L. R. Sawyer "the man who will be Chilton's next Representative in the Legislature of Alabama." We wonder now if the Age-Herald would be so kind as to give a picture and write up of the man who will REALLY be our next Representative in the Legislaiure. Mr. Thomas, the Bull Moose candidate, was elected over Mr. Sawyer, the Democrat candidate, by the largest majority of any candidate on the ticket.

REWARD— $'00 will be given for information regarding black hound dog strayed last Saturday night. Large black dog blue breast and front feet.

Providence Beat 2

Editor Union-Banner:—Please allow me a few words in regard to the repealing of the stock law in Beat 2, which is to take place Nox. 7th.

First, I want to say that they had an election in the city of Jemison on the 19th of October, and none of the mem out of the city limit were in to cast their votes. They won't let us have any chance in their affairs. But they can and will have a voice in the matter of us keeping our cows up, or letting them out on the free range.

I say boys, come out on the 7th and lets turn out our cows in Beat 2, and not have them under bondage any longer.

Yours for the cows,
Grandpa.

Cotton Report

Prior to October 18, there were ginned from the cotton crop of 1914, in Chilton county, 10,667 bales, as compared with 10,145, the number ginned prior to the same date in 1913.

Editor Union-Banner — Will you give me space in your dear old paper to say a few words.

Health of this community is reasonably good except an epidemic of malaria is causing a number of people to be unable to do their work.

Mr. Hugh Mullins is suffering slightly from a bruise in the side.

We are having a very nice Sunday School at Mt. Zion. There will be preaching at Macedonia the first Sunday in Nov.

I am glad to see so many letters in the Union-Banner these times.

CAN REFUSE TO SUBMIT BOOKS

County Officials Not in Contempt in Refusing to Submit Books and Accounts to Examiner.

STATE CAPITAL NEWS ITEMS

Doings of the Various Departments of the Commonwealth Given for Our Readers.

—Montgomery.

That part of an act of the legislature of 1911 which confers upon the judges of the state the power to commit state and county officials to jail for contempt in refusing to submit books and accounts to the state's examiner of public accounts, was declared unconstitutional and void by Judge Armstead Brown of the Montgomery city court.

The decision means that any state and county officer may refuse to surrender his books to a state examiner for inspection without fear of criminal prosecution and that the state examiner's only redress is by mandamus. The decision was rendered in the case of Probate Judge F. M. Tankersley of Chrenshaw county, who was cited for contempt at the instance of State Examiner H. Y. Brooke on the ground that the former refused to turn over to the examiner his books and accounts for inspection about two weeks ago.

Judge Brown granted Judge Tankersley's motion to quash the proceedings and asked Examiner Brooke if he cared to appeal the case to the court of appeals. The latter stated that he must confer with the governor before determining upon an appeal.

Demands Return of Fees.

Auditor C. Brooks Smith wrote to Daniel W. Troy, special counsel for the state, and demanded the return to the treasury of $16,530.79, representing the amount which the latter has drawn in special attorney's fees since his employment in 1911. Auditor Smith also demanded of Mr. Troy the return of $2446.87, which he and R. B. Evins of Greensboro drew jointly for special counsel services.

Similar letters were sent out by Auditor Smith to about a dozen other attorneys in Alabama, who have drawn money from the state for special counsel services. Altogether, the state has paid out in attorney's fees something like $40,000, all of which Auditor Smith has asked to be returned to the treasury.

Auditor Smith's letter to the various special counsel are based on a recent decision of the supreme court, declaring the act under which they were employed unconstitutional. The supreme court's decision was announced some months ago.

Convict Department Receipts.

Receipts of the state convict department for the year ending September 30, last, were $1,162,493.18, with disbursements amounting to $849,386.37, according to a report filed with the governor by Examiner of Public Accounts J. T. Gorman. The books of D. G. Trawick, chief clerk of the department, were declared to be in excellent condition by the examainer, and correct in every detail.

The net balance for the state, after all disbursements of the department and outstanding warrants to the amount of $347.52 had been deducted, amounted to $316,583.43.

According to Examiner Gorman, the receipts of the department for the past year were the largest in the history of the office, exceeding the receipts of the previous year by $94,720.

Brooks May Get Appointment.

H. Y. Brooke, state examiner of public accounts, is an applicant for bank examiner under the Atlanta regional bank, it was learned here. He is said to be endorsed by the Alabama delegation in Congress. Mr. Brooke was made a state examiner during the administration of Gov. B. B. Comer, and he was reappointed by Governor O'Neal.

Pope Gets 7-Day Respite.

Governor O'Neal granted a seven-day respite to Ervin Pope, the Calhount county negro who was sentenced to be hanged for murder. At the expiration of the respite the governor said he would be ready to announce whether or not he would commute Pope's sentence to life imprisonment. This is the third respite for the negro. Pope is the negro whom several juries have sentenced to die, and who has been saved several times by the supreme court.

Chilton Road to Cost $25,000.

State Highway Engineer W. S. Keller announced that the contract for the construction of the Chilton county portion of the Montgomery-Birmingham highway was awarded to J. G. Brown of Montgomery. The bid was $25,000. With the completion of this 23 mile stretch the Montgomery-Birmingham highway will be a reality and autoists will be able to make the journey in much less time than formerly. This will be one of the best highways in the state.

Says Judiciary Costs Too Much.

The matter of the reformation and reorganization of the judiciary system of the state is certain to hold the attention of the next legislature, according to the statement of several members-elect of this body.

The judiciary system of the state costs the taxpayers and litigants several million of dollars annually, which, it is held by some new members of the legislature, is an exorbitant figure for the administration of justice in a state with a population of less than 2,200,000.

Figures recently compiled by J. T. Gorman of the office of examiner of public accounts, show that for the fiscal year ending September 30, the state paid the following salaries to the state judicial offices:

7	Supreme court judges	$ 34,784.94
3	Court of appeal judges	15,000.00
18	Circuit court judges	55,000.00
17	City court judges	46,900.00
10	Law and equity court judges	25,000.00
15	Circuit court solicitors	35,966.66
2	County solicitors	3,800.00
5	Chancellors	15,991.33
	Special judges	344.35
	Special solicitors	2,450.00
	Reporter supreme court	4,950.00
3	Clerks supreme court	6,000.00
5	Employes supreme court	7,480.00
	Stenographers supreme court	780.00
	Clerk, secretary and temporary clerk, court of appeals	5,000.00
	Total	$259,447.28

For the four fiscal years from October 1, 1910, to September 30, 1914, the state has paid the following judicial salaries:

Supreme court judges	$ 164,516.94
Court of appeals judges	53,373.63
Circuit court judges	219,419.94
City court judges	187,201.25
Law and equity court judges	112,433.12
Circuit solicitors	114,192.46
County solicitors	13,300.00
Chancellors	63,966.66
Special judges	5,398.74
Special solicitors	6,980.00
Supreme court reporter	20,650.00
Clerk supreme court	22,257.71
Employes supreme court	29,533.02
Stenographers supreme court of appeals	2,678.00
	16,787.31
Total	$1,063,105.73

In addition the state pays for the postage, stationery and other incidental expenses of the supreme court and the court of appeals, but no separate account is kept of these items.

Parts of the salaries of some of the circuit court, city court, law and equity court judges and chancellors are paid by the counties and all the salaries of inferior court judges, county solicitors and many clerks are paid by the counties.

These salaries amount to the aggregate to at least $100,000 annually.

There are sixty-seven probate judges in the state, who are, in most instances, ex-officio judges of county courts.

The average fees and compensation of the probate judges of the state will probably approximate $5000 to the county, or $335,000 annually for the state.

The counties pay tens of thousands of dollars annually for clerks, sheriffs, witness and jurors' fees, besides the thousands of dollars costs paid by litigants.

These figures do not include the $130,000 that the state pays annually for feeding prisoners and the several thousands of dollars paid for the removal of prisoners, which are parts of the administration of the criminal law.

Interest In Future Commission.

Considerable interest attaches to the future of the present Highway Commission, as the commissioners are appointed by the Governor and the appropriation for the operation of this department is now left largely to the incoming Governor.

The work of the department during the past year has been particularly effective in the heretofore greatly neglected smaller counties of the State, and there are few counties which have not availed themselves of the benefit of the $2,000 allotted them from the State Treasury.

The last appropriaiton for this department was $10,000 for operating expenses, and $2,000 each for such counties as signified their willingness to raise a like sum for the development of roads. This was in addition to the contingent appropriation.

Interurban Railroad Gets Charter.

A charter of incorporation was awarded to the Florence-Huntsville Interurban Railroad company of Lauderdale county. The capital stock is $3000 and the incorporators are Sol Jacobs, Alan Jemison, H. H. Read and T. H. Allen.

Tax Commissioner Named.

G. G. McCracken of Athens was named tax commissioner of Limestone county by the state tax commission. His appointment was approved by the governor.

Federal Game Law Violated.

William Pryor of Baldwin county has the distinction of being the first Alabamian arrested for violation of the federal game laws, according to John H. Wallace, Jr. Mr. Wallace was notified of the arrest of Pryor by T. S. Palmer, officer in charge of the department of game preservation of Washington. According to the message, Pryor was taken in custody by Federal Warden A. Z. Oberhans of Mobile on the charge of having shot teal on Chuckfey bay before 6 o'clock a. m. in violation of federal statute.

MOST UNIQUE PLAN

"Buy-a-Bale of Cotton" Movement Restored Confidence.

AID GIVEN COTTON GROWERS

Prevented Flooding Market With Thousands of Bales When There Was No Demand—Atlanta Editor Originator of Idea.

The "buy-a-bale of cotton" movement, one of the most unique of its kind ever launched in the United States, accomplished for the South more than anything else at that time could have done, namely, it restored confidence when business in the South was chaotic; placed a standard price of ten cents a pound on cotton, and prevented the flooding of the market with thousands of bales when there was absolutely no demand, which would have resulted in a calamity for the southern states.

Because of the large area over which this movement spread, and the lack of organization between the cities in which the "buy-a-bale" movement was being agitated, anything like an accurate estimate of the number of bales disposed of is impossible, but it has been roughly estimated at between two hundred and fifty thousand and three hundred thousand bales, for which cash was actually paid. Those who were closely in touch with the movement admit, however, that this estimate may be greatly under the exact number of bales sold.

Unfortunately for the cotton growing states, the European war began to be felt in this country just at the time when cotton was beginning to arrive at the cotton markets. When the sailing of all vessels from the United States stopped, preventing the shipping of cotton to England and other countries of the continent, the cotton exchanges of New York, New Orleans, Savannah, and other cities closed, and trading came to an abrupt end.

Situation Serious.

In the meantime cotton continued to come in from the plantations, and was accumulating on the market with startling rapidity. The situation was far more serious than any that the South had had to face since the reclamation period following the close of the Civil war. Everyone realized that something must be done, and done quickly, if disaster was to be averted. The foremost question in the minds of business men and statesmen alike was what could be done, and how could it be accomplished?

At an hour when the outlook was darkest, an Atlanta manufacturer wrote a letter to an Atlanta paper, setting forth the plan of selling cotton by public subscription. He suggested that the staple be sold at ten cents a pound—the figure generally agreed upon as the lowest at which cotton could be raised—and that it be sold in bale lots. The purpose of this plan was threefold; it would place a standard price on cotton, remove a large portion of the "distress" crop from the market, and would prevent a ruination of the market from too much of the product being offered at one time.

The editor of the Atlanta paper to whom the plan was first made known was quick to realize the possibilities of a campaign waged throughout the United States. Accordingly, he called a meeting of Atlanta business men in his office, at which the "buy-a-bale" movement was formally launched. This occurred during the first week of September. Since then it has spread to almost every state in the Union, and an immeasurable amount of good was accomplished in many of the large cities of the East, West and North, where business men gave their time and money to the cause.

There were two methods by which cotton was disposed of in the "buy-a-bale" movement. One was the outright purchase for cash, and the other was the taking of the staple by the country merchants on old and new accounts. A great many of the wholesale dealers and manufacturers also took cotton from southern merchants on account.

Atlanta Plan Adopted.

According to the "Atlanta Plan," which later was adopted by all cities where the "buy-a-bale" movement took hold, cotton was purchased only from tenant farmers. Only one bale was bought from each farmer. Before a bale was purchased, the farmer was required to sign an application blank and enter a statement thereon that he was a renter; that he and his family, or pickers employed and paid by him, gathered the cotton, and that he would pledge himself to reduce his cotton acreage 50 per cent in 1915.

In this way no favoritism was shown, and "distress" cotton was purchased from the greatest possible number of farmers. The placing of even a small amount of ready cash in the hands of the tenant farmer of the South gave him courage to hold his cotton a little longer in the hope that he could sell his entire crop at ten cents or better. Not only the farmer from whom the cotton was purchased, but the purchaser who furnished the money as well, was asked to sign an agreement that he or she would not sell the cotton until the market price was ten cents or better.

Soon after the "buy-a-bale" campaign was instituted in the southern states, the business houses that purchased cotton placed the bales in front of their places of business, and at no time was the public permitted to forget that a great movement was in progress to buy the South's "distress" cotton. It mattered not whether one went to a theater, the ball park, a department store, drug store, clothing store, or even a church, one was confronted by a bale of cotton bearing some such familiar placard as, "We Have Bought Ours, Have You Bought Yours?"

Movement Spreads.

Recently the "buy-a-bale" movement has spread to England. One of the leading London newspapers has begun a campaign for the sale of the fleecy staple in this patriotic manner in the British Isles, and through its editorial columns has made a strong appeal to the British mill men to buy cotton this year as usual, or to such an extent as possible, and thus help the cotton-producing states of America to maintain the cotton industry. This paper suggested to the British people that they have the cotton shipped to England and stored for future use.

One of the many methods by which the campaign for the sale of the South's cotton was carried on was that adopted by the Southern Wholesale Grocers' association. The executive committee of this association communicated with all of its members, asking them to buy as many bales as they were able to buy. The retail grocerymen of the South also were included in this request, and it was estimated by a member of the association that almost a half-million bales would be retired from the market through the efforts of the wholesale grocers.

Florida has two important movements in progress for the removal of surplus cotton from the market. The rotary clubs of that state are especially active, and have accomplished much in the buying of "distress" cotton. The "Twenty-Thousand Bale club" is another Florida organization that is helping to relieve the cotton situation in the state.

A rather novel scheme was organized by the Rotary club of Jacksonville. This club issued cotton certificates at one dollar each. In this way a great number of people were able to participate in the free-will buying. As fast as the certificates were sold, the money was "pooled," and bales were purchased at ten cents a pound.

The "Twenty-Thousand Bale club" is a state organization, of which Governor Park Trammell is one of the most active members. The membership numbers more than two thousand, including men in every walk of commercial and professional life in Florida.

The National Grain Dealers' association, while in session recently at Kansas City, Mo., took under consideration the question of providing some means of relief for the southern cotton farmers, who faced ruin as a result of the demoralized cotton market. In view of the fact that southern farmers buy annually thousands of dollars worth of grain from grain dealers in the national association, the association adopted resolutions urging its members to purchase as many bales as they are able to hold. Many orders for single bales were received from grain dealers as a result of the action on the part of the association.

The retirement of thousands of bales of cotton from the open market by manufacturers of automobiles and automobile accessories is credited to the efforts of agents of such firms in the various southern cities. Cotton was retired by these manufacturers by two methods. One was outright purchase. The other was by partial exchange on sales.

A journey to the factories of the automobile manufacturers was made by the agents from all of the principal southern cities. These agents explained to the manufacturers that the South was facing a serious crisis because of there being no market for cotton, and urged them to assist in the "buy-a-bale" campaign. The response was greater than was anticipated by the agents, and within a short time after their return home, agents in all parts of the cotton states received instructions to buy a certain number of bales for cash for the manufacturer, and to accept cotton as a part payment on their sales.

Issue Cotton Scrip.

One of the most novel methods for taking care of the financial stringency in the cotton section that has been put into effect was that originated by the merchants and bankers of Crisp county, Georgia. It was purely a local plan, however, and was not made applicable to any other portion of the state or in the South.

The merchants and bankers of Crisp county formed a cotton association. This organization accepted cotton warehouse receipts at ten cents a pound. In return for his warehouse receipts, the farmer was given "cotton scrip" in denominations of one, two, five and ten dollars. This "scrip" was freely accepted in trade by merchants and other classes of business men in the county.

Seed Is Important Factor.

The cotton seed is almost as important a factor in the cotton states as the cotton itself. For a time the cotton-seed market took a decided slump because of the complaint made by cotton-seed dealers that British warships were seizing shipments of cotton-seed products sent abroad. The matter was taken up with the state department at Washington and an investigation was made resulting in the announcement that cotton seed and cotton-seed products were not a contraband of war when loaded in neutral bottoms, even though they were consigned to ports of the warring nations, such as Hamburg and Liverpool.

Delegates from the various cities and towns of Alabama will meet at the University of Alabama and in Tuscaloosa on December 3rd and 4th for the purpose of organizing a league of the municipalities of Alabama. It is stated that experience has shown that these organizations play an important part in the promotion of efficient economical and progressive municipal administration.

Alabama's next legislature is opposed to the issuance of bonds by the State to relieve the present cotton situation. The legislature is opposed to the enactment of laws eliminating the planting of cotton in the State next year and likewise any legislative action looking to material reduction of acreage. Moreover, the majority of the members of the next legislature is opposed to an extra session. This much has been learned from a large number of letters which the members have written the governor in answer to his communication sent out some days ago, in which he asked their opinion as t othe advisability of calling a special session for the purpose of considering the cotton situation.

The year of 1914 has been the state's best year in good road building. Counties that had done little in the improvement of their highways have waked up. During the summer just passed the work of building modern roads has been pushed and it will doubtless continue right up to the end of December. The day of the old mud road is fast passing. Farm lands in Alabama are steadily enhancing in value, and in counties where the macadam road is much in evidence values it is stated, have doubled within the last few years.

Expenditures of the state last year exceeded collections from all sources to the amount of $436,705.79, while the disbursements for the past four years have exceeded receipts by $1,165,048.24, according to the annual report of C. Brooks Smith, state auditor. Mr. Smith's report for the year ending September 30 last was presented to the governor. The auditor's report shows that the entire receipts for the fiscal year were $6,607,001.12 and that the total disbursements after deducting $29,318.15 for pension warrants returned and canceled (which was credited to the pension fund), was $7,043,706.91, or an excess in disbursements over receipts of $436,705.79. The previous year the total receipts were $6,288.07, and that the year disbursements exceeded collections by $256,903.67, making nearly $750,000 excess of disbursements over receipts in two years.

"You shore are killing an innocent nigger," was the statement made by Wash Gray as he stood on the scaffold in the Birmingham jail yard just before Sheriff McAdory pulled the lever that sent the negro into enternity. Benny Ward in a lengthy talk from the scaffold confessed his guilt and said he was willing to die from his crimes. He declared that Wash Gray had nothing to do with the crime for which he was to be hanged. The double hanging took place in the yard of the Jeeffrson county jail and was witnessed by about 150 persons.

Nearly half the Confederate pensioners in Madison county have been dropped from the rolls.

Declaring that the supreme court of the United States has often held that "to deprive one of the use of property is a violation of the provision of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution," Attorney General Robert. C. Brickell, in answer to a letter from the governor, has held that in his opinion the legislature of Alabama cannot "prohibit the the production of cotton in 1915, or reduce the cotton production for the ensuing year."

To Increase Supply of Salmon.

Important experiments have recently been made by the fisheries expert for British Columbia in connection with the hatchery operations. Last year at Seaton lake instead of placing all the sockeye salmon eggs in traps, as had been the custom heretofore, a plan was adopted more in keeping with the natural methods followed by the fish. The eggs, after having been inoculated with the lymph, were buried under five to seven inches of sand and gravel. Over 200,000 ova were thus treated in tanks especially made therefor, and as a result 188,000 healthy fry have been taken out with the possibility of more to follow. This is a splendid record, as compared with the old pan system, and it is believed by the experts that the new method will revolutionize the business of the hatcheries.

The Pioneer Mother.

The school children of California are saving up their pennies to pay for the monument to the pioneer mother which is to be executed by Charles Gradfly for the Panama-Pacific exposition. The woman's board of the exposition suggested that such a statue be erected and the children were the first to respond, sending in an avalanche of pennies. The central figure is that of the pioneer mother dressed in a homespun gown and at her knees are two sturdy little children.

PRESSED HARD.
Coffee's Weight on Old Age.

When people realize the injurious effects of coffee and the change in health that Postum can bring, they are usually glad to lend their testimony for the benefit of others.

"My mother, since her early childhood, was an inveterate coffee drinker, had been troubled with her heart for a number of years and complained of that 'weak all over' feeling and sick stomach.

"Some time ago I was making a visit to a distant part of the country and took dinner with one of the merchants of the place. I noticed a somewhat unusual flavour of the 'coffee' and asked him concerning it. He replied that it was Postum.

"I was so pleased with it that, after the meal was over, I bought a package to carry home with me, and had wife prepare some for the next meal. The whole family were so well pleased with it that we discontinued coffee and used Postum entirely.

"I had really been at times very anxious concerning my mother's condition, but we noticed that after using Postum for a short time, she felt so much better than she did prior to its use, and had little trouble with her heart, and no sick stomach; that the headaches were not so frequent, and her general condition much improved. This continued until she was well and hearty.

"I know Postum has benefited myself and the other members of the family, but not in so marked a degree as in the case of my mother, as she was a victim of long standing." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

TURKISH WARSHIPS ATTACK RUSSIANS

SEBASTOPOL IS BOMBARDED BY TURKISH SQUADRON—BLACK SEA FLEET IN BATTLE.

VANCOUVER IS NOTIFIED

The Russian Ambassador at Constantinople Announces Rupture of Diplomatic Relations With Turkey to Sublime Porte.

Vancouver, B. C.—Customs officials were officially informed here that a state of war existed between Great Britain and Turkey.

Petrograd.—The semi-official Russian news agency says that because of the attack by the German-Turkish warships against the Russian Black Sea coast the Russian government enjoined the same day the Russian ambassador at Constantinople to announce to the sublime porte the rupture of diplomatic relations with Turkey and his departure with all the members of his embassy and consulates.

Turkish warships are reported to have bombarded Sebastopol and a Turkish squadron has attacked the Russian Black Sea fleet, sinking a mine layer and a torpedo boat destroyer and capturing a collier.

With these big events and what they spell in the apparently inevitable further extension of hostilities Turkey remained at the forefront of the news of the war.

Turkey continues to refrain from assuming responsibility for the warlike acts of the Turkish warships in the Black Sea. In spite of the fact that Turkish ships have sunk the Russian gunboat Donets and several ports without previous warning, the porte has not yet officially declared war upon Russia.

ITALIAN CABINET DISRUPTED

The king reserved decision and invited the presidents of the senate and chamber of deputies and leading statesmen to confer wth him on the situation.

It is generally believed that Premier Salandra will be entrusted with the task of forming a new cabinet within a few days.

The Italian cabinet has suffered from the same division of opinion as exists in the country at large. Italy's neutrality has been approved by the whole cabinet, but some of the ministers favored military preparations at any cost, while others supported the idea that the risk of Italy becoming involved through these measures was disproportionate to any advantage she might gain.

It is asserted that Gen. Zupelli and Vice-Admiral Viale will retain respectively the portfolios of war and marine. Baron Sidney Sonnino, former premier, is spoken of as minister of the treasury, and Tomasso Tittoni, ambassador to France, as minister of foreign affairs.

RUMOR KAISER WANTS PEACE

It Is Said That the German Emperor Wrote Personal Letter Urging Cessation of Hostilities.

London.—The Petrograd correspondent of the Observer sends the following:

"According to a report in army circles Russia recently has been approached regarding the concluding of peace with Germany. It is said that the German emperor wrote a personal letter to the dowager empress, urging her to persuade the Russian emperor to make peace.

"The dowager empress forwarded the letter without comment to Emperor Nicholas, who sent it to Grand Duke Nicholas, commander-in-chief of the Russian army. The grand duke returned the letter with the comment:

"'If you comply, our armies will mutiny and there will be a revolution in all Russias.'

"No confirmation of this report is obtainable."

FIGHT BATTLE OF BAYONETS

"A Massacre, Not a Fight," Is the Way Correspondents Describe Battle in West Flanders.

London.—The lurid glare of burning bushes, with shadowy figures lined faintly against a background of smoke, working like demons in an inferno of their own creation; the spiteful rattle of machine guns; the roar of bursting shells; the impact of driven bayonet against human flesh and bone; the cries of wounded; shouts of triumph; shrieks of despair; rivers running red with blood, through heaped up piles of dead—this is the battle of Flanders, as London pictures it from the brief but hasty details telegraphed from the fighting front.

"A massacre, not a fight; a butchery, a shambles," such are the phrases used over and over by correspondents endeavoring to give an inkling of the events of this bloodiest battle of the war. "No quarter is asked and none is given. It is the battle of the bayonets."

Belgian regiments have been decimated to a third of their former fighting strength; British troops stand grim and dogged in the face of fearful loss; gallant Frenchmen shout with the lust of combat, and opposed to them in the sublime grandeur of death the solid ranks of Germans march unswervingly against a withering fire and literally bestrew the landscape with their corpses. There is no chance to bury the dead or care for wounded; the ground they lie on is harrowed and furrowed over and over by the spraying bullets of mitrailleuses and the tearing fragments of bursting shrapnel.

And out of the chaos there looms one fact from which England at home may extract some comfort. The Germans seem to be stopped.

GERMAN RAIDS ARE CHECKED

Channel Ports Safe for a Time—Losses on Both Sides Are Heavy As Battle Rages.

London.—The German raid on the channel ports, as it is called here, seems to have been checked for the time being, or, at any rate, the Germans have made little, if any, progress since they crossed the Yser canal. They, however, are still pushing with all the forces at their command, and are meeting with stubborn resistance from the French, British and Belgian troops.

Losses on both sides continue proportionate to the fierceness of the battle, which means that they are greater than those in any battle since war was declared, now nearly three months ago.

Along the coast, where the allies are assisted by French and British warships, they apparently have more than held their own, and after inflicting heavy losses on the Germans have compelled them to try for an opening farther inland. Up until recently the allies had been forced to give way at some points, but now, according to the French official communication, they have held their positions at every point from the mouth of the Yser to the Lens district, and again have advanced between Ypres and Roulers.

University Appeals.

St. Louis.—St. Louis University, ultimate beneficiary of the will of James Campbell, the railway promoter, filed notice of appeal against the action of the probate court in revoking the title of the Mercantile Trust Company as executor of the $16,000,000 estate and in appointing John S. Leahy administrator pending litigation over the will.

BRITISH TAKEN PRISONERS

Amsterdam Hears That Ostend Has Been Evacuated — Battle Near Meus Is Renewed—Attacks South of Nieuport Fail.

Amsterdam, via London.—Both the Handelsblad and the Telegraaf report that the Germans have evacuated Ostend.

Paris.—The following official communication was issued here:

"In Belgium, according to the latest advices, there is nothing to report in the region of Nieuport or Dixmude.

"On our left wing the enemy has directed violent attacks against the front of the British troops and on the two banks of the Labassee Canal without obtaining any success.

"There has been a recrudescence of activity in the region of Rheims and along the heights of the Meuse at the south of Fresnes-on-Woevre."

Berlin, via London.—An official statement issued by the German army general headquarters says:

"Our attacks to the south of Nieuport and to the east of Ypres are being successfully continued. Eight machine guns and 200 British soldiers have been captured.

"In the Argonne forest our troops have occupied several blockhouses and points of support.

"To the northwest of Verdun the French attacked without success. In the other parts of the western war theater and in the eastern arena the situation is unchanged."

GERMAN CRUISER SINKS TWO

Emden, Flying Japanese Flag, Slips Into Port of Penang and Blows Up Russian and French Boats.

Tokyo.—Two officers and eighty-four seamen on board the Russian cruiser Jemtchug were killed when the German cruiser Edmen torpedoed and sank her in Penang harbor.

The British embassy here heard that the Edmen had sunk a French destroyer also.

Tokyo.—The British embassy hears that the German cruiser Emden, flying the Japanese flag and disguised by the addition of a fourth smokestack, entered Penang, a British possion in the Straits settlements, and fired torpedoes which sank the Russian cruiser Jemtchug and a French destroyer.

The German cruiser Emden, after her exploits in the Indian Ocean around India, where she sunk a score or more of British steamers, has apparently shifted her [illegible] operations more to the eastward [illegible] cinity of the Straits settlements. She was reported as having sunk a Japanese passenger steamer bound for Singapore.

The Emden's entrance into the waters of Penang was audacious. She came in under the guns of the fort, and after sinking the cruiser and the destroyer escaped through the Strait of Malacca. The fate of the crew on board the Jemtchug is not yet known here.

Merchant vesels belonging to the belligerent nations are taking refuge at Colombo, Ceylon.

TURKS BOMBARD RUSSIA

Turkey Has Opened War on Russia. May Mean a Holy War—Greek Cathedral Damaged.

London.—A dispatch to the Times from Petrograd says it was the former German cruiser Breslau, now flying the Turkish flag, which shelled Theodosia.

Tokyo.—The Russian embassy here announces that Turkey has opened up war on Russia.

Theodosia, Crimea. — A Turkish cruiser with three funnels bombarded the station and city, damaging the cathedral, the Greek Church, a pier and some sheds. One soldier was wounded. A branch of the Russian Bank of Foreign Commerce caught fire. At the conclusion of the bombardment the cruiser left in a southwesterly direction.

Theodosia (formerly Kaffa) is a Russian seaport on the southeast coast of Crimea, about 100 miles northeast of Sebastopol, by which it is connected by rail.

REAL WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA

Botha Takes Field Against Rebels Battle Front of 3 Miles—Rebel Positions Captured.

London.—Official announcements by the South African government reveal the fact that Great Britain has a real war on her hands in that part of the world. The seriousness of the Boer rebellion is shown by the announcement made by the official press bureau of the war office in London that Gen. Botha himself has taken command of British troops in the field, and that he is pursuing the rebels under Gen. Byers, who was formerly commander of the government forces.

A dispatch from Capetown reports a battle along a front extending three miles, in which the British stormed the rebel defenses and with the aid of artillery captured their positions, but the rebel forces themselves escaped.

The story of this fighting is painfully reminiscent of that which occurred 15 years ago, when the Boers, although greatly inferior in numbers, outmaneuvered the British at all points and strained the resources of the empire to subdue them.

The account states the advance was so rapid that a few of the enemy and several horses were captured. The main body of the rebels, however, got away, they having removed their guns early without firing a shot.

The official announcement of the pursuit by Gen. Botha of his former commander, Byers, states that the British troops came into touch with a rebel commander at Rustemburg. In the pursuit during the whole day Gen. Botha has captured 80 fully armed rebels and several wounded. The pursuit is still proceeding.

It is reliably reported that Col. Maritz, whose treachery started the rebellion, was shot through the knee cap in the fighting at Keimoes.

Andries de Wet is in command of the German forces. No official announcement has yet been made of an invasion by the Germans of the Portuguese colony of Angola, but the Portuguese minister here says that such a movement would not be surprising. The Portuguese are making every preparation to defend the colony.

BRITISH SEA LORD RESIGNS

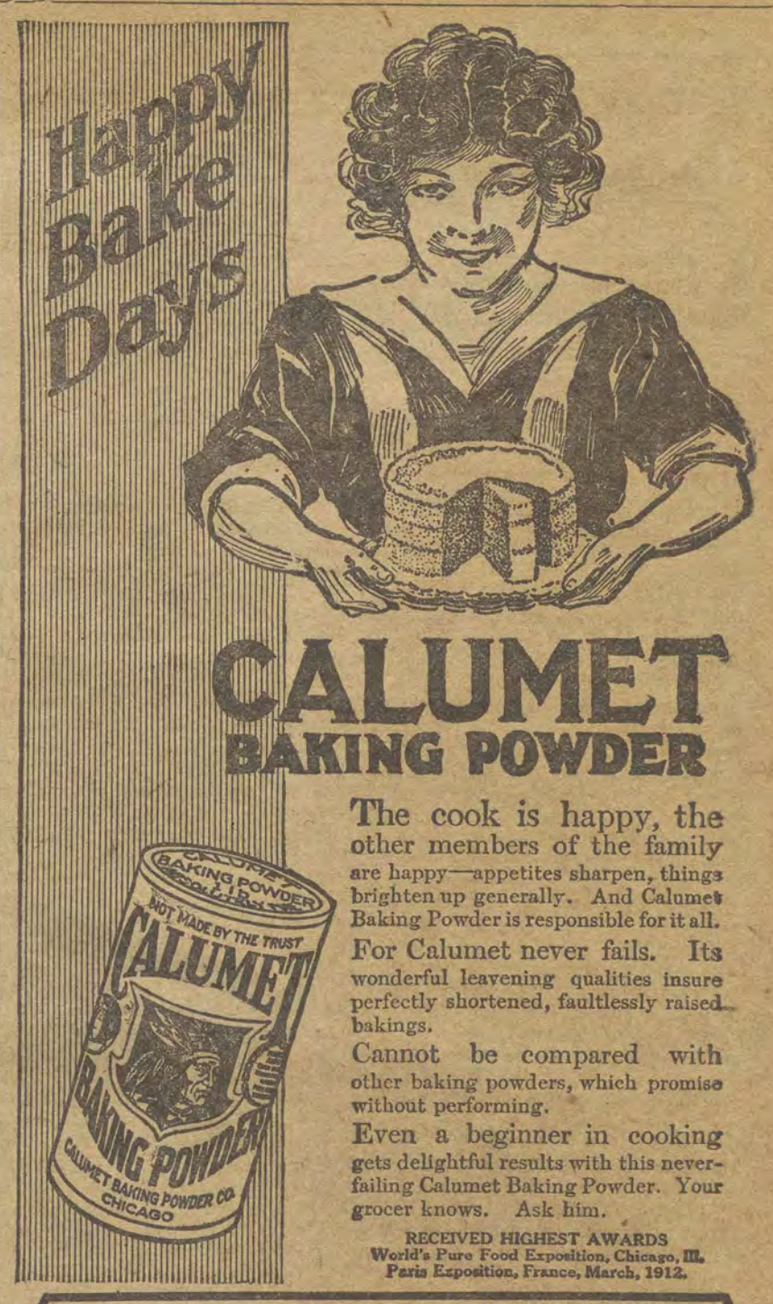
Newspaper Fight Was Waged Against Louis of Battenburg—Was a Great Strategist—Born in Austria.

London.—Prince Louis of Battenberg, about whom there has been much gossip because of his Austrian origin, has resigned his position as first sea lord of the admiralty. No open charges have been made against him, but a nespaper campaign against his holding such a high command is thought responsible for his withdrawal.

Announcement of Prince Louis' resignation was made in the court circular, which stated that the prince had been received in audience by the king on relinquishing his appointment.

Although born in Austria, Prince Louis came to England as a boy and was naturalized in 1868, when he was only 14 years old. Twenty-three years later he was promoted to a captaincy and after another 13 years became a rear admiral. He was appointed first sea lord in 1912, a few years after his visit to America.

Says War Just Begun.



Paris.—That the war is only beginning is the opinion expressed by Armand Fillieres, ex-premier of France, in an interview published by the newspaper France de Bordeaux, says a dispatch to the Havas News Agency from the temporary seat of French government.

Potash Embargo Lifted.

Berlin.—James W. Gerard, the American ambassador to Germany, has secured from the German government the lifting of the embargo placed upon 1,000 tons of potash destined for America.

You don't save money when you buy cheap or big-can baking powder. Don't be misled. Buy Calumet. It's more economical—more wholesome—gives best results. Calumet is far superior to sour milk and soda.

HINT EASY TO UNDERSTAND

English Farmer Had Made Old Mistake of Counting Chickens Before They Were Hatched.

An old farmer in the Midlands was anxious to marry, but could not make up his mind between the charms of a certain comely widow in the neighborhood and her equally charming daughter.

At last he resolved to let chance solve the problem.

"I'll ax th' one I fust sees a-goin' in," he muttered, and off he started on his amatory errand. But when he arrived both mother and daughter were sitting in the doorway.

"Dang it!" he cried. "Here was I comin' to ax one o' 'ee to marry me, an' I swore the fust 'un should ha' the chance. But there ye both be together. I'll shet my eyes now, an' the one as doan't want me mun go indoors. Th' one as stays is my wife to be."

Shutting his eyes the old farmer counted ten solemnly; there was a subdued chuckle, but when he opened them both women had gone.—London Tit-Bits.

RESINOL WILL SURELY STOP THAT ITCHING

What blessed relief! The moment resinol ointment touches itching skin, the itching stops and healing begins. That is why doctors have prescribed it successfully for nineteen years in even the severest, stubbornest cases of eczema, tetter, ringworm, rashes and other tormenting, unsightly skin-eruptions. With the help of warm baths with resinol soap, resinol ointment restores the skin or scalp to perfect health and comfort, quickly, easily and at little cost. At all druggists.—Adv.

How Ice Man Got the Booze.

The day was hot and the patient ice man had taken his usual care in getting the ice in the box just right and then mopping up the little water that got on the floor in the operation. He really was a good ice man and deserved to be rewarded.

"Here is a bottle of beer; you need it on a hot day like this," said the housewife.

"I can't accept anything from patrons, lady," the ice man said, as he eyed the bottle lovingly.

"Well, if that is orders, all right," the customer said.

Still the ice man pondered. "But," he added, as an afterthought, "if you put it on the back porch I'll steal it. There isn't any rule against stealing things."—Indianapolis News.

Stork's Good Memory.

While visiting the Berlin zoological gardens, says Lustige Blatter, little Gretchen saw a great white bird standing on one leg in a cage. She threw in a piece of candy; the bird gobbled it up eagerly; and thrust its head through the wire for more.

Presently Gretchen's mother came along. "O mother, see here! What kind of a bird is this?"

The mother pointed to the sign on the cage, which read, "The Stork."

"The stork!" cried the little girl enthusiastically. O mamma, do you know, he actually recognized me?"

Glory.

Some worriors, having been at war quite awhile, were beginning to tire of the sport.

"There's glory enough for all!" exclaimed the more impulsive among them.

But others were more cautious. "Let's keep on killing and desolating awhile longer and make sure!" urged these.

It was the counsel of prudence which prevailed, the world being notified that the conditions were not, as yet, quite ripe for peace.

THE UNION-BANNER

Published Every Thursday at Clanton, Chilton County, Alabama.
UNION PUBLISHING CO.
W. M. WYATT, Editor.

Subscription price, in advance, per year, $1.00.

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second-class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

The old line Republican won the day in New York State Tuesday, by the election of their candidate for Governor. The majority was a good one for the ticket, despite the strength that had been calculated for both the Democrats and Progressives on the oppsition.

John L. Burnett of the seventh district of Alabama, was re-elected on the Democratic ticket Tuesday. This was about the only hope the Republicans and Democ ts had for electing a state officer in Alabama. If their forces had been united against Mr. Burnett, it is most certain that they would have defeated him.

If anybody should happen to be wondering what the Progressives in Chilton County will do if the Roosevelt party loses its national strength we might save them some speculation by saying that there will not be any of them to turn Democratic. If we have to ally ourselves with some other party, we can get into a better on any day than the Democratic.

Mr. Penrose, the old line Republican candidate for the Senate from Pennsylvania, outclassed his Democratic and Progressive opponents by fully two hundred thousand votes in Tuesday's election. This a remarkable instance, for in Pennsylvania two years ago, the Progressive ticket received its greatest strength.

EDITORIALS OF J. R. H.

"The Editorials of J.R.H." is the title of a beautiful holiday book announced by Robests & Son, the well known publishers of Birmingham, and it requires no extraordinary flight of the imagination to identify the author as J.R. Hornady, whose illustrated editorials, occupying a full page in the Birmingham Sunday News, during the past year, have atracted national attention. That these editorials, which have been a potent factor in making the Sunday News one of the most popular papers in the South, are to appear in book form is an announcement of great interest to the public, and to Alabamians especially.

The book, which is "on the press", so to speak will appear in three bindings, cloth, half leather and full leather, and will be beautifully illustrated with original drawings by Gilbert Edge, an exceptional artist of exceptional ability. According to the publisher's announcement, the book will not be on general sale, but will be a "Subscription Edition", printed for those who subscribe for it now, and bound according to their specifications. A handsome prospectus descriptive of the book will be sent by Roberts & Son on request.

THE REASON WHY.

The Democrats are growing somewhat sarcastic over the result of Tuesdays election. They seem to think it cuts a Progressive to the bone to tell him that cotton will go to 15 cents because the Democrats were beaten in Chilton county. They are saying this because they haven't anything else to say. They are stung so badly that they seek a diversion in something to laugh at—and something far removed from the questions of the campaign.

Of course the cotton situation had some influence with the voters, which was perfectly natural and correct; but the Progressives did not, nor do yet believe that the price of cotton hinges on Chilion county politics. They knew before they voted that this election would not affect the national administration to the extent that it would restore business to the normal.

But here you fellows who are so cunningly looking out of the corner of your eyes and sniggling about this 15 cent cotton; if you want to know why Chilton county repudiated Democracy, we will tell you.

It was because our people are sick of Democratic doings here in Chilton -RIGHT HERE AT HOME. They do not approve of the Democratic administration of recent years. They did so because they had a voice in their own interests before the democrats came into power, and now they are voting to regain their lost privilege. They did so because they oppose the method of the democrats from start to finish—county, state and national -and we congratulate them for doing it. These reasons and thousands of others, are why Chilton has turned her back on the Democratic party.

OUR COUNTY FAIR

Opinions doubtless differ regarding the county fair for this year, as compared with exhibitions in former years. Some may say this was the best year ever had in point of merit of exhibitions; others might think differently. But at all events, it is our purpose here only to say that the Fair for 1914 certainly showed itself as an institution of value to our farmers and citizens generally.

It was a collection of the best in many lines of endeavor. The achievements of the agriculturist and live stock enthusiast as shown by the exhibits at the Fair are certainly meritorious.

The exhibits of the ladies in the domestic departments were highly commendable. Everything from cooking to painting was represented—things that make the desirable home all the way from kitchen and pantry to drawing room and parlor.

The girls departments, canning clubs, etc., were intereating with the splendid exhibits which had been so neatly prepared. Several boys and girls won prizes that would be a credit to even much more experienced persons.

But no story of the Fair would be complete without mention of the colored peoples department. It was not of course as extensive as the other departments, but was fully representative of their interests, efforts and achievements. Their exhibits and arrangements were crecitable to say the least, and many of them carried away prizes.

There was probably a little falling off of attendance from the usual number, due to the dullness that exists in business at present; but that does not alter the fact that the 1914 Fair takes its place among ihe best Fairs all around, that Chilton County has ever had.

"THE HEALTH OFFICER AND THE CONSERVATION OF LIFE AND ENERGY."

The above is the title of a paper read before a recent session of the Alabama State Medical Society by our County Health Officer, Dr. V. J. Gragg, and since issued in pamphlet form for distrubution to those who may possess an interest in this vitally important subject.

The subject is handled interestingly throughout, and to say the least of it, in a most candid and practical manner. The profound importance of the subject of public health, and the great need of system and organization in dealing with it is given great stress, but the discussion might be extended further, and still not reach the point of unreasonable theory.

Impressiveness is added to the subject by the citation of instances where organized methods have attained ascendency over erst-while haphazard processes. It lends also depth to the discussion, showing that a study wider than mere locality and simple estimation has been made by the writer.

The responsibility of the health officer in dealing with the things that come within his scope is given full weiget. His qualifications are given in a very broad expression that would require him to be a full talented physician, a public instructor, and a man of exceptional training.

The one question, which of all those taken up, is probably the most important, is "Can a county afford to employ a whole time health officer?" Figures taken from vital statistics of Chilton county are employed in this argument in a convincive manner, and the result shows that for whatever amount the county might invest in the employment of a whole time health officer, if the work is managed properly, the people would get a dividend of 1600 per cent.

A health officer who could give his whole time to the work of public benefits and improvements would mean a return of many times the amount invested, whereas the present methods employed scarcely ever return even the amount originally invested. A whole time health officer would not be hindered by a private practice, which fact alone would increase his usefullness enormously.

There are untold advantages which might be given our rural schools through the employment of a physician for whole-time public service; and they will remain dormant unless such a step is taken to bring them out.

"The health officer for a county should be a distinctive character, just as any other official. He should not be hampered by private practice, friends, politics and fear of incurring someone's ill will."

The question of correctly solving the health problems of a county is one that will consume all the time and energy of a big, well-trained and capable man. It is the life of our civilization, and therefore should receive, beyond politics, and everything else, the best thought and mind that are obtainable.

The Ambition of Mark Truitt

By HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Author of "THE MAN HIGHER UP," "HIS RISE TO POWER," Etc.

(Copyright, 1913, by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

CHAPTER XXIV—Continued.

Together he and Mark dragged Piotr to the cab and forced him within. Piotr, dazed by Mark's appearance, resisted but feebly.

Before the grim majesty of approaching death even Piotr's madness was abashed. The supreme consciousness received back the atom that, when imprisoned in flesh, had been Roman. It was Kazia who saw.

"He is dead."

The Matka uttered a low moan, then became silent again, resumed her rigid gazing at the not less still body. Piotr's hand passed over his eyes in a bewildered gesture. The woman who kept the door made the sign of the cross and went quietly out.

Kazia bent over to kiss Roman's forehead. Then Piotr came out of his daze. He caught her roughly and drew her back.

"No!"

"Piotr!"

"You're not fit to touch him."

She turned and went slowly into the kitchen. Piotr followed.

He confronted her and Mark. "You can go now, both of you."

"Oh, Piotr, not now!" Kazia began pleadingly. "The Matka needs me and—"

"We need nothing from you. We weren't good enough for you once. You left us to be a fine lady. Now we don't want you."

"But I came back and you wouldn't let me stay."

"Yes, when you found that Jim Whiting couldn't give you what you wanted. You thought you could use us then—as he did." He nodded toward Mark. "How," his teeth bared in an ugly accusing leer, "how did the Hunky girl get to be such a fine lady?"

"Be still!" Mark stepped close to him, sternly. "Isn't there any decency in that cracked mind of yours? Remember she came to them," he pointed toward the little bedroom, "when they needed some one. You were out filling the streets with your blackguardly rant. And whose money do you think had to keep them alive because you wouldn't do a man's work?"

"A man's work!" Piotr laughed, a horrible startling cackle. "To a cracked brain that isn't to betray and gouge and drive—" He broke off. "Do you mean it was her money?"

"Who else would have cared?"

Piotr went back into the death room, clutched his mother by the shoulder and shook her cruelly. "Tell me," he cried in her tongue, "have you taken money from her—that woman—when I told you what she was?"

The Matka shrank back from his vehemence. "I had to—to buy things to keep him alive."

Piotr, releasing her, stared, his mouth working queerly. "Even you're against me."

He went again slowly into the kitchen, taking up his hat from the table. He did not stop until he reached the door. There he turned, facing Kazia.

"What Have You Found, Roman? Is It Simple, There?"

"You can have her now. I'm going."

"He's crazy," Mark muttered. "Don't mind him."

With an effort she recalled herself to the situation. "You had better go now. I must take care of the Matka. Will you please telephone to the hospital that I shan't be back tonight?"

"But I can't leave you alone here, while Piotr's at large. I'm going out to arrange for tomorrow. Then I'll come back here."

"It may be best," she agreed.

Two hours later he returned and rapped lightly. Receiving no answer, he tried the door. It opened and he entered quietly.

Hanka lay on a narrow cot, in the sleep of exhaustion. In a chair by the table, head pillowed on one arm, Kazia, too, slept. She stirred uneasily as he entered, then became still. He tiptoed to another chair and began his lonely watch.

The night seemed endless. To sit motionless, looking at the relaxed forlorn figure she made, became impossible. He rose and crept silently into the room where Roman lay. A single candle was burning low in its socket. By its faint flickering glow the waxen face and folded hands seemed not dead, but only at peace. Mark looked long at him, as though Roman held the answer to his questions. Once he leaned over, whispering.

"What have you found, Roman? Is it simple there? Is there a new birth in which mistakes can be paid for? . . . I want to pay."

CHAPTER XXV.

Payment.

It was two days after the funeral. Mark had seen Kazia but for a few minutes, merely long enough to learn her new plans, and then Hanka had been present. Kazia proposed to take care of her, and that they might not have to be apart, to give up her fine position at the hospital; she thought she could obtain a new one that would take up only her days. She had, of course, to find a new apartment.

All day Hanka had been alone in the dismantled flat, thinking not of him who had gone but of the woman who had assumed her protection. Often her head shook in troubled gesture. Hanka had not lost the habit of seeing and understanding many things from her shadowy corner. Not out of grief for the dead, she knew, had the look that haunted her come into Kazia's eyes.

The dinner was over, the dishes washed and put away; this being part of Hanka's share in the new division of labor. She went into the little bedroom whither Kazia had gone to dress. But at the door she stopped, unnoticed, looking at the figure that lay motionless and face downward on the bed. She started to steal away, then turned again and went timidly to the bedside. She laid a gentle hand on Kazia's hair.

"Little Kazia," she murmured, half frightened at her boldness, "what is troubling you?"

"Nothing, Matka," came the muffled answer.

"Is it because of me? I don't want to be a burden. I can go."

"No, no! You musn't leave me. I'm just tired."

"Heart tired. Is it because of him—your lover?"

"I have no lover."

Kazia rose wearily, and going to the mirror, began to take down her hair. The thick soft tresses fell tumbling around her. Hanka, in troubled wonder, watched the round arm that wielded the comb, the smooth firm shoulders. At Kazia's age Hanka had already begun to wither into an uncomeliness that men passed by undesiring. She went over to the dressing woman and touched timidly the firm, still youthful flesh.

"You are like your mother."

"What was she like?"

"She was like you." Kazia did not smile. "Men saw her and wanted her."

The comb became still. "Did she—did she love my father?"

"Such a love I have never seen."

It had been dark almost an hour when the bell rang. Hanka heard Kazia going to the door and a startled exclamation answered by a mellifluous voice Hanka did not know. The visitor was admitted and taken into the sitting room. To the kitchen came the murmur of Kazia's voice and his, chiefly his.

He had been there but a few minutes when his voice changed. It became eager, with an undertone that perturbed Hanka strangely. Once Kazia uttered a low hurt cry. Hanka rose and crept along the little hall. She crouched in the darkness near the sitting room door, listening intently and wishing she had not been so stupid about English.

"Am I an ogre?" the mellifluous voice was saying.

"I do not love you."

"It is not a question of love. I am not old, but I have lived long enough to prick that illusion. We scientists know what love is."

"I don't care for you in any way," Kazia answered coldly. "Mr. Quinby, you oughtn't to be here. A man in your position—"

"My dear lady, let me remind you that the interest of a man in my position is not to be rejected lightly. With a word I gave you the best position your profession offers a woman. With a word I can take it away. I can relieve you of the necessity of working at all. I can make it impossible for you to find work in this city."

"Threats—"

"My dear lady!" the stranger's voice protested. "I would not do that. I would harm no one. I am a tender-hearted man. I, too, suffer, if by chance others suffer through me." The voice, vibrant with emotion, would have wrung tears of sympathy from a stone. But Hanka, as we have seen, could not weep. "I am only trying to show that those who enlist my interest do not lose by it."

"So you think I am for sale?"

"Forgive me, my dear," said Quinby, "but that is gross. Say rather that, since you have struck a responsive chord in my breast, it will be my pleasure to be guardian of your welfare, to lift you out of the sordid struggle for existence. And have I not proved that? You lay in the hollow of my hand. With a breath I could have destroyed your reputation. But I kept silence, I advanced your interests, I held you tenderly in my heart. Woman, you have bewitched me. I want you."

Hanka understood at least his last words and she understood his tone. She crept closer and through the crack of the sitting room door saw Kazia elude Quinby's outstretched arms.

At the same moment she heard a halting step on the stairway. She opened the outer door and went out to meet Mark Truitt, whispering excitedly to him in Polish. When he, astonished by her appearance and emotion, would have spoken, she clapped a hand over his mouth, and clutching him by a sleeve, drew him into the hall. She pointed through the crack.

Again Quinby reached toward Kazia and again she recoiled.

"Don't—don't touch me."

"Why do you rebuff me? You're not an ignorant child. You must have known what my interest in the hospital and in you this year has meant. You wouldn't have taken my help unless you were willing to give me what I want."

"What is it—what is it you want?"

"I want you to be to me what you have been to Truitt."

"And if—if I refuse?"

"I have never yet told that I caught Truitt and a sun-browned woman alone in an Ottawa hotel under circumstances—I have no reason to love him. I have refrained from telling only for your sake. I—Why do you force me to say this? I have no wish to be brutal to you. Seeing you has turned my head. But you will not—surely you can not refuse."

She dropped back into a chair, covering her face with her hands. When she looked up, she wore again the strange rapt expression.

"You said," she whispered chokingly, "you said—you would pay."

"Yes, yes!" he cried eagerly.

"You are trying to rob Mark Truitt—to force him out of the company. Will you—give that up?" Still in the same broken whisper.

"Even that. You are worth everything."

"And will you give me time—to send him away—and never let him know?"

"It is for you to make conditions. Ah! my dear—".

In triumph Quinby stepped toward her and bent over to take her hand.

"Don't do that!" said a voice behind him.

Quinby whirled. For a long silent minute the trio faced one another.

Then Mark, white of face, hands working convulsively, went slowly to the stupefied Quinby, who seemed turned to stone. He did not resist even when Mark's hand leaped up and caught him cruelly by the throat. He was pressed back until his back met the wall. The grip tightened. Quinby's face grew purple. He squirmed and tried to cry out, but only a hoarse gurgle resulted.

Kazia came to herself. She sprang to her feet and caught Mark's arm, breaking his grip.

"Don't hurt him. He's not worth it."

Gently, without taking his eyes from Quinby, Mark freed his arm from her clasp. But he did not touch Quinby again. The first murderous impulse died. He turned contemptuously away from him.

Quinby, released from the cruel hand and eyes, started across the room. Mark whirled upon him once more.

"Stop!"

Quinby stopped. "This," he said weakly, "is a trap."

"Set by yourself." Mark turned to Kazia with a helpless mirthless laugh. "What is my cue? Shall I kick him down stairs—or spring his dirty trap?"

"Let him go," she answered listlessly.

Mark shook his head. "Not without paying. He said," grimly, "he was willing to pay."

"I'm not afraid of you," Quinby muttered a feeble defiance. "What can you say of me that isn't true of you?"

"Ah!" Mark drew a sharp whistling breath. Quinby shrang back, his hands going protectively to his aching throat. "Now you shall pay. You—" He broke off with a gesture of disgust. "I find I've no stomach for blackmail just now. I'll telephone Henley to come over. He'll know how to handle this situation."

Then Quinby was indeed fear-struck. He clutched Mark's arm tightly. "Don't tell him!" he quavered. "We can settle this ourselves. I didn't really intend to force you out of the company, only to—to frighten you a little."

Mark jerked his arm free. "So you're a coward as well as a fraud! But I knew that before. This is too sickening. You'd better go."

Quinby started again to go.

"Wait!"

Quinby waited.

"You seem to be afraid of Henley. You have reason. Tomorrow at ten-thirty you have an engagement to meet him at his office—I have just made it for both of you. At eleven I will meet him. You know best what Henley in his present mood will do if he gets wind of your latest adventure in philanthropy. Now go."

Quinby went. The next morning, prompt on the hour, he kept his engagement with Henley.

A weakness for epigrams has defeated more than one fair project. After a discreet interval—long enough, as he thought, for the interment of the dead past—Jeremiah Quinby sought to revive the paleontological propaganda. He found that for once the public memory was long and laid more stress on the fateful twins of production than on ichthyosauri and kindred monsters. The air was darkened with poisoned barbs of satire and derision. There fell a great philanthropist, pierced to the heart. That is to say, Quinby retired from the realm of beneficence and his rival reigned absolute once more.

A heavy troubled silence was in the little room. Kazia stood passively by the table, waiting for Mark to speak. After a long while he raised his eyes to hers.

"Kazia, you poor romantic fool! Did you think any amount of money was worth that—even if he had kept his word? When I think what—oh, how could you think of it!"

"I wanted," she answered in a queer lifeless voice, as if benumbed by this crisis into which they had stumbled, "I wanted to do one thing for you—and your happy city."

"My happy city! What happiness could it have had, built on that? And I—hadn't you given me enough?"

"I gave you only love."

"Only—!"

"It was all I had to give. It wasn't enough."

"I wish I could have given as much as you." The wistful words slipped out.

He stepped closer to her.

"Kazia, this has got to end."

"Yes."

"You must marry me tomorrow."

Life, and with it pain, flickered once more.

"You are trying to give something now. But I'm glad you said that."

"I'm asking you to give something more. You will?"

"Why do you ask it?"

"Because I've hurt you enough. I did hurt you when I let you—led you to sin, even though we kept it a secret from the world. I want to make you happy—you said yourself we've broken a law. I want happiness—and I can't have it, knowing that for all I've taken from you I've given nothing."

She tried to smile; the sight of it cut to his heart. "Every reason but the one. But I'm glad you wouldn't lie to me now." The smile faded. "You see. I can't."

"Kazia, dear," he pleaded, "we started wrong—let's begin over again. Let's give love a new birth."

His voice rang with a longing she could not understand, but he could not touch her. She shook her head spiritlessly.

"There can be no new birth so long as there is memory. You could never forget that I—that I am not clean."

"Do you think me so small as to hold my own fault against you? It is my sin, too." He stepped closer, reaching out his arms to take her. "Come, dear, your poor little reasons aren't enough."

She shrank away from his clasp, trembling. Into the tired white face came a look of fear and despair. She glanced this way and that, as though she sought an escape. Her hands went to her face. Then she forced them down and her eyes to his.

"I thought—I thought you understood. . . . I—I wasn't clean—before we sinned. The doctor who helped me, I—" She could say no more.

Suspicion had not prepared him for this. He stared foolishly at her, showing how he recoiled from the fact her broken words had revealed. He did not then think it strange that the shame of a woman he did not love should stab so deeply.

"Kazia, how could you—how could you!"

After a while he forgot his own pain a little in pity for the silent stricken woman. Again his arms reached out for her and would not be denied.

"It must make no difference." His sternness was all for himself. "What am I to blame you? You sold your body to live. I gave my soul to feel others squirming under my feet. You hurt only yourself. I've hurt every one I touched. I hurt you. If I hadn't been a coward years ago when we first loved, you would never have been tempted. Your sin is only a part of mine. It is you who have most to forgive."

Slowly she raised her head to look at him. "And you," came a broken incredulous whisper, "and you would marry me—even now?"

"All the more now!"

For an instant a faint pitiable hope, defying knowledge, shone in her eyes. "Have I been mistaken? Only love could ignore—ah! don't lie to me now. It wouldn't be kindness. Is it just pay—or love?"

He tried to look away from her and could not. Her eyes held his, seeking through them to hunt out the last truth hidden in his soul. With a rough convulsive movement he drew her head down on his shoulder.

"How can I know what it is? It must be love, since I need you and want to make you happy. If it isn't now, surely love will come when we start right. Kazia, don't refuse me this chance to make up to you a little of the harm I've done you."

Her answer was a stifled sob. He felt her body relax; her head rested heavily on his shoulder.

She released herself. He did not try to hold her. They faced each other in a heavy throbbing silence.

His soul quivered with the cruelty of it; it would have been infinitely easier for him if she had been the unfaithful one. His words echoed mockingly in his ears, torturing him with their hopeless futility.

"You will not?"

"You couldn't say it—and I don't want pay."

The sight of her had become more than he could endure. He turned away and dropped into a chair, letting his head fall to the table.

After a little he felt her hand gently smoothing his hair. And soon she began to speak in a voice unsteady at first but gathering strength as she went on.

"You mustn't reproach yourself. I know you'd love me if you could. And you mustn't think I refuse just for your sake. I'd do what you want—since you want it so much—only it would be misery for me always. You wouldn't want that. . . . And this—it seems I've always known it would come. It was a chance I took for a few months' happiness. I've had my happiness. . . . You haven't harmed me—I beg you to believe you haven't harmed me."

"Kazia—"

But the hoarse cry died away. There was nothing to say. His humiliation was complete. Magdalen that she was, he looked up to her from depths of self-abasement she could never know.

The voice was growing unsteady again. "When I think how it might have ended—if you hadn't come tonight—! I'm glad you came—to save me from—that. . . . And now—I think you had better—go. . . ."

CHAPTER XXVI.

The Penitent.

It was a red sunrise, that Sabbath morning, and the ruddy glow lingered in the eastern sky long after the sun had swung clear above the hills. A slanting shaft found his window and fell upon him as he dreamed. He stirred restively.

He awoke slowly, reluctantly, drifting toward consciousness through a golden haze that vibrated with far-away dwindling harmonies.

"Where have I heard that before?"

After a little he remembered—a youth, full of dreams and credulous, joyously facing his great adventure.

"And tomorrow I set out on a new adventure. It was a long way from there to here. . . . I wonder, would any man, given the choice, travel his road a second time?"

He rose and went to the window.

Two years had passed, crowded with effort, crowned with achievement. From the window where he stood, still seeking to recover the lost harmonies, he could see the beginning of his happy city, all ready for the great experiment.

He bathed and dressed—in the new bathroom that was his one concession to the luxuriousness of the old life—and descended to the kitchen. The pleasant odor of frying ham met his nostrils; there was a hotel in Bethel now at which the Truitts generally had their meals, but sometimes, of a leisurely Sabbath morning, Simon still served as cook.

But the bent old man at the south window had forgotten breakfast. For a little Mark watched him without salutation.

"Good morning, father," he said at last.

"Good morning, Mark." Simon turned reluctantly from the window. "I was jest thinkin' it'll be 20 years tomorrow ye went away—an' now there's that."

"Yes. Your dream has come true. If you live until tomorrow night you'll have seen it all—steel made in Bethel."

Breakfast ready, they sat down and began the meal in silence. Mark ate lightly, absently.

Ever since Mark had returned, Simon had been vaguely sensible of a suffering to which some solacing word might be said. But the word would not come to his unschooled lips.

"I wish," Simon thought, "I could give him something."

It was a real suffering Simon sensed, no day without its hour of payment, no hour so heavy as on that Sabbath morning.

From across the town came a mellow clamor, the voice of the new church bell calling the faithful.

The clamor ceased and after an interval resumed for a few last taps before he rose and went into the house for his hat and cane. When he emerged again he found Simon sitting on the front stoop.

"Goin' to church?"

"I guess I'd better."

"Yes. Courtney likes ye to. Do ye," Simon asked suddenly, "still believe what he preaches?"

Mark hesitated a moment. "I suppose I never did. I'd like to, but I can't. It takes a certain quality of mind, I suppose—or early habit. I can't quite see—" There was that in Mark's tone which made Simon look up quickly. "I can't see the logic of letting another's suffering pay for our sins."

"Ye'll be late," Simon suggested.

Doctor Hedges, driving along the valley road, drew up at the station until the eleven o'clock train, having discharged its Bethel passengers, sped onward. The passengers were two, a man and a woman, strangers to the doctor and therefore alien to Bethel. The woman stood on the otherwise deserted platform, looking uncertainly around her. The man made directly for the doctor.

"Do you," he demanded, "know where Mark Truit lives?"

"Why, yes." The doctor bestowed a friendly smile on the stranger. "I guess I do."

"Can you show me how to find it?"

"Yes." Hedges glanced toward the woman; she was entering the station. "I can do better. I can take you there."

"If you will." And the stranger promptly entered the buggy.

The doctor clucked to his horse and turned hospitably, with conversational intent, to his guest. But the latter forestalled him.

"Live here?"

"Between whiles."

"Ha!" The stranger smiled, a brief wintry smile. "Doctor, I see. Do you know Truitt?"

"Well," Hedges spat ruminatively, "that's a pretty risky thing to say of any man, but I guess—"

"What do they think of him here?"

"They think he's a great man—and it's his own—"

"He's a great mechanic," said the guest shortly.

"I," drawled the doctor, "know more about men than mechanics, but—"

"What do you think of him?" the guest interrupted again.

The doctor, hoping to complete at least one sentence, quickened his drawl. "He's a man who's either losing himself or finding himself, I'm not sure—"

"Meaning?"

"You wouldn't," chuckled the doctor, "have time for the explanation." He drew up before the little cottage. "He lives here."

"Hardly!" the visitor retorted. "I take the three o'clock train. Much obliged." He sprang, more briskly than his rotundity promised, out of the buggy.

The doctor drove away still chuckling. The chuckle would not have died even had he known his passenger to be none other than that Henley whose star, flashing with comet-like swiftness and brilliancy above the horizon of speculation, had in two years achieved full planetary dignity and importance. But the doctor was not a student of Wall street astronomy.

"Humph!" The luminary surveyed the weather-beaten little cottage with its unkempt yard and near-by smithy. "So he lives here. Affectation, of course!"

He strode up the path and saluted the old man on the stoop.

"Mr. Truitt lives here, I believe?"

"I'm Simon Truitt. But I reckon ye want Mark, Mr. Henley."

"Ha! You know me. His father, I suppose?"

"Yes. I saw ye once, years ago, when he was in the hospital."

"I remember," said Henley, who had forgotten that incident completely. "Is Truitt about?"

"He's at church."

"Church! Surely not a habit?"

"He goes gener'ly, since he come back."

"Hmm! Something new for Truitt." Henley frowned. "And my time's short. I suppose I may as well save some of it by going over the plant now. There's no objection, I suppose?"

"No; I," Simon ventured uncertainly, "I was jest about to go over myself."

"I'll be glad of your company," Henley graciously replied. "Shall we start?"

An hour later Henley emerged from the shadowy finishing mill, blinking hard in the midday's sunshine and trying to revise his estimate of the situation.

He followed Simon out on a tiny cape that jutted into the river, whence they could see other evidences of Truitt's lucidity—the hospital, the bank, the store, the cluster of homes gleaming white on the hillside.

And Henley saw—not as the experts had seen, happy if they perceived all that had been reduced to fact—but with the eyes of one whose greatness was to see what might be, what could be. And as he looked part, at least, of Truitt's dream was unfolded before him. The valley a teeming, throbbing citadel of industry. The city clambering over the slopes, capturing the heights, reclaiming other slopes from the forest, until in length and breadth, in numbers and importance, it rivaled that other fastness where he, the master, had been known only as a lieutenant. The creator in him, not yet killed, but only obscured by the madness of exploitation, thrilled at the sight.

"He sees big," he muttered. "He sees big. I didn't think it was in him."

He stood on the point, scanning thoughtfully the noble valley, forgetting his silent companion. "He's picked out a great site. . . ." And then to Henley came a vision of his own.

That city and citadel his, creature of his genius and might, doing his bidding, yielding him homage and tribute, carrying forth his fame to the paling of lesser men's reputations, capital of an empire—his empire.

"By God!" he breathed aloud. "By God! . . . And it's possible—how did the builders of cities overlook this place? . . . It would be better than doing faker's tricks with stocks and bonds."

Gumdrops.

An old man in Indianapolis, who has lost all his teeth, takes his "toothlessness" philosophically.

It is difficult for him to articulate as he did in the days of his youth, and he admits that gums are not quite as useful as teeth when it comes to talking.

In fact his sole dependence on his gums in his old days has led him to refer to his misfortune cheerfully by calling his words "gumdrops."

THE CHARM OF MOTHERHOOD

Enhanced By Perfect Physical Health.

The experience of Motherhood is a trying one to most women and marks distinctly an epoch in their lives. Not one woman in a hundred is prepared or understands how to properly care for herself. Of course nearly every woman nowadays has medical treatment at such times, but many approach the experience with an organism unfitted for the trial of strength, and when it is over her system has received a shock from which it is hard to recover. Following right upon this comes the nervous strain of caring for the child, and a distinct change in the mother results.

There is nothing more charming than a happy and healthy mother of children, and indeed child-birth under the right conditions need be no hazard to health or beauty. The unexplainable thing is that, with all the evidence of shattered nerves and broken health resulting from an unprepared condition, and with ample time in which to prepare, women will persist in going blindly to the trial.

Every woman at this time should rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism.

In many homes once childless there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy and strong.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

God wove a web of loveliness,
Of clouds and stars and birds,
But made not anything at all
So beautiful as words.

They shine around our simple earth
With golden shadow-wings,
And every common thing they touch
Is exquisite with wings.

There's nothing poor and nothing small
But is made fair with them.
They are the hands of living faith
That touch the garment's hem.

INVITING CELERY DISHES.

Celery belongs to the parsley family and is largely cultivated for its bleached stalk. The dry leaves are good for flavoring soups and sauces, although it is to be found in the market in the fresh state almost all the year round.

Served fresh and crisp it is a most delicious salad vegetable; the long, white stalks, if surrounded with chipped ice, are crisp and cool and inviting.

Cream of celery soup is another way to serve the vegetable acceptably. As a dinner relish take the small white center stalks and fill them with highly seasoned cream cheese, surround with bits of ice and serve with the salad. Celery chopped and serves with bits of onion on slices of tomato with French dressing makes another palatable salad.

Luncheon Celery.—Take well seasoned cottage or cream cheese, form into cones with a small ice cream cone, drop on a lettuce leaf and garnish the top with a sprig of celery. Celery chopped and serve with a French dressing in cucumber boats or apple cups is a well-liked combination.

Apple nuts and celery, one part celery, half as much nuts, and two parts apple, with a good boiled dressing, is the good, old-fashioned Waldorf salad. A most delicious celery sauce is made from broth in which a fowl has been cooked, adding cream and flour to thicken.

Fried Celery.—Parboil celery until soft, after cutting in three-inch pieces. Drain, sprinkle with salt and pepper, and dip in batter, fry in deep fat, drain on brown paper. Serve with tomato sauce.

Think not so much of what thou hast not, as of what thou hast; but of the things which thou hast, select the best, and then reflect how eagerly they would have been sought if thou had'st them not.

INVITING DISHES.

String beans are delicious cooked slowly with a few tablespoonfuls of olive oil. Another way is to cook them with a a piece of salt pork or bacon, or season with grated cheese, chopped parsley or chives.

Codfish Fritters.—Take a cupful of shredded codfish which has been simmered fifteen minutes, cooled and drained. Beat two eggs, add half a cupful of milk, two-thirds of a cupful of flour, or less to make a batter that drops from the spoon. Add a teaspoonful of parsley, a teaspoonful of baking powder and pepper to season. Beat hard, add the fish and cook in deep fat. Serve with cucumber sauce, or sliced cucumbers.

Lobster Sauce.—This is good with any white fleshed fish. The foundation is Hollandaise sauce. Stir a tablespoonful of butter with a few drops of onion juice, the juice of half a lemon, an eighth of a bay leaf, pepper to season and a half cupful of white stock. When well blended over the fire remove and stir in the well beaten yolks of two eggs, cook all together five minutes, add a teaspoonful of butter, a half pound of lobster meat and a tablespoonful of lobster coral.

Fried mushrooms added to slices of tomato and served with salad dressing makes a most delicious and unusual salad.

Stuffed Egg Plant.—Take two good sized egg plants and boil until tender. Remove from the fire and cool. Into a wooden bowl put two good sized onions, peppers, a few sprigs of parsley, four cloves of garlic, four or five ripe tomatoes, chop fine and add two cupfuls of cracker crumbs. Mix thoroughly. Scoop out the inside of the eggplants, being careful not to break the outside, put this into a bowl and chop, seasoning with salt and butter, fill the shells with the stuffing and sprinkle with buttered crumbs and grated cheese. Serve from the shells.

Puffed crackers are very good prepared as follows: Split crackers, dip in water and put into a hot oven. When puffed drop a spoonful of jelly on each and serve at once.

First Picture of Bow.

The bow is first depicted on Egyptian monuments about 2000 B. C. Its form then did not differ greatly from that in use among bows at the present day. It was used in European warfare as late as 1640, and was deemed quite as effective as the arquebus then employed.

CALOMEL SICKENS! IT SALIVATES! DON'T STAY BILIOUS, CONSTIPATED

I Guarantee "Dodson's Liver Tone" Will Give You the Best Liver and Bowel Cleansing You Ever Had—Don't Lose a Day's Work!

Calomel makes you sick; you lose a day's work. Calomel is quicksilver and it salivates; calomel injures your liver.

If you are bilious, feel lazy, sluggish and all knocked out, if your bowels are constipated and your head aches or stomach is sour, just take a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone instead of using sickening, salivating calomel. Dodson's Liver Tone is real liver medicine. You'll know it next morning because you will wake up feeling fine, your liver will be working, your headache and dizziness gone, your stomach will be sweet and your bowels regular. You will feel like working. You'll be cheerful; full of vigor and ambition.

Your druggist or dealer sells you a 50-cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone under my personal guarantee that it will clean your sluggish liver better than nasty calomel; it won't make you sick and you can eat anything you want without being salivated. Your druggist guarantees that each spoonful will start your liver, clean your bowels and straighten you up by morning or you can have your money back. Children gladly take Dodson's Liver Tone because it is pleasant tasting and doesn't gripe or cramp or make them sick.

I am selling millions of bottles of Dodson's Liver Tone to people who have found that this pleasant, vegetable, liver medicine takes the place of dangerous calomel. Buy one bottle on my sound, reliable guarantee. Ask your druggist or storekeeper about me.

DIFFERENT THINGS IN MIND

Tom's Supposed Indorsement of What Lurlina Disapproved of Nearly Led to a Quarrel.

They were in the lure of the cabaret, and and she—Tom and Lurlina. The contralto was singing. Positive nonindorsement was in Lurlina's voice as she said:

"Entirely too low! Entirely!"

Surprise and unmistagable admiration mingled in Tom's reply.

"Ah, no! It's exquisite!"

A catch in her breath, amazement in her wideopen blue eyes.

"Why, Tom! How can you?"

There was almost tears in her voice.

"How can I?" he replied enthusiastically. "Indeed, how can I not?"

Amazement fled from indignation in her eyes. The chill of ice was in her tone and manner.

"Then I will thank you to take me home?"

"Why, Lurlina?" And now the amazement was in his eyes and painful eagerness in his voice. "What do you mean?"

"I mean her gown!"

A beam of light. Tom saw it all.

"Oh, Jupiter!" Could joy have better uttered? "I meant her voice!"

Thereupon the waiter came and all was forgotten.

FINE RASH ON BABY'S BODY

1341 Parkwood Pl., N. W., Washington, D. C.—"When my babe was about two weeks old I noticed a scurf on her scalp which gradually grew worse. It started with a fine rash over head and body and made her very restless at night. The rash left the thick scurf on her head. We used ——, ——, and other remedies recommended by friends, but nothing seemed to do any good.

"This continued until she was three months old and by that time it formed sort of a crust, so that her scalp never looked clean. Nothing helped until we used the Cuticura Soap to bathe her and Cuticura Ointment to anoint her. They acted like magic, clearing the scalp entirely. The trouble disappeared." (Signed) Mrs. H. L. Anderson, Mar. 20, 1914.

Ration in Congress.

The ratio of representation in the lower house of congress at Washington has steadily changed since the year 1789, when the Constitution began its work, the ration was 30,000 to the representative. In 1910 the ratio was 210,000 to the representative. If the ratio did not rise the members of the lower house would in time become too numerous for business. It is for the purpose of keeping the membership within reasonable bounds that the ratio is made to keep pace with population.

Greek Meets Greek.

The two oldest inhabitants were very ignorant, neither of them being able even to tell the time of day. A friend of Uncle Ben's gave him a watch, of which he was very proud. One day, before the crowd at the corner store, old Pete, being slightly jealous of such wealth and wishing to embarrass his rival, said: "Say, Ben, what time have you got?"

The other old fellow drew out his watch and turned its face toward his inquisitor. "There she be!" he exclaimed.

Pete was almost at a loss, but he made a magnificent effort and retorted: "Blame if she ain't!"—Everybody's Magazine.

A Home-Made Poison

Uric acid, unknown in the days of a simple, natural, out-of-door life, is a modern poison created inside the human body by a combination of meat-eating, overwork, worry, and lack of rest. Backache or irregular urination is the first protest of weak kidneys. When the kidneys fall behind in filtering out the excess uric acid, there is danger of gravel, dropsy or Bright's disease. Doan's Kidney Pills strengthen weak kidneys, but if the diet is reduced, excesses stopped, and fresh air, exercise and sleep increased, the medicine acts more quickly. Doan's Kidney Pills have a world-wide reputation as a reliable kidney tonic.

An Alabama Case

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

T. B. Morrison, 116 W. Church St., Decatur, Ala., says: "For four years I suffered from kidney complaint and weakness of the bladder. My kidneys acted too freely, obliging me to get up three or four times at night. I had a constant pain in the small of my back and when I stooped over my back was so weak that I could hardly straighten. Doan's Kidney Pills not only relieved the trouble with the kidney secretions, but strengthened my back and made me feel better in every way. The benefit has lasted."

Difference in War Declarations.

There was a great difference in the manner of commencing a war centuries ago to what there is now. Now the blow is frequently struck before the word, and there is no obligation to issue a formal declaration at all, the act of war constituting the declaration. But in medieval times no war ever began without a formal declaration by a herald, who, in a most leisurely manner, breathed defiance on the part of his royal master, exchanged innumerable bows with his enemies, and departed in as dignified a manner as he came.

Poor Material in His Promises.

"When we were married," sobbed the young wife, "he said he loved me with a love more enduring than the everlasting granite!"

"And it didn't last?" queried the sympathizing friend.

"Last!" echoed the young wife, drying her tears; "it didn't last as long as a wood pavement!"

Some people don't believe in putting off till tomorrow the trouble they can make today.

INTERESTING WEDDING OCCURRED LAST WEEK

A rather unexpected wedding occurred at the home of the bride's brother, Mr. J. W. Maddox, on last Thursday when Mr. C. H. Robinson and Miss Donie Maddox were united in matrimony.

The guests of the occasion consisted of only a selected number of friends of the contracting parties. To those who were not intimate with these young people, the announcement of the occasion may be somewhat a surprise.

Both are very popular young people in their home communities, and are well placed in the estimation of all who know them. Than this beautiful bride, a young lady of more atiractive and pleasing disposition cannot be found. Mr. Robinson is in every way a splendid young man.

The young couple have many friends and acquaintances, and all who know them will no doubt be pleased to learn of their union, and extend to them showers of good wishes.

Men Pay Homage to Mother's Friend

"I am not surprised to observe the number of men who come into the store to purchase 'Mother's Friend,'" remarked a leading druggist.

The expectant mother if she hasn't heard of this splendid embrocation is probably not reading the papers to much extent. And if she does it is a happy thought to send hubby to the drug store. "Mother's Friend" is applied externally over the abdominal muscles.

It is a gentle, soothing lubricant, penetrates to the fine network of nerves beneath the skin and has a marked tendency to relieve the muscular strain to which these broad, flat abdominal muscles are subjected. The cords, tendons and ligaments are thus permitted to stretch without the corresponding surface strain so often involved during the period of expectation. And particularly to young mothers is this remedial application of inestimable value since in thus keeping the muscles firm but pliant it enables them to go through the ordeal without laceration of the epidermis often the case when this gentle attention is neglected.

"Mother's Friend" is highly recommended by a host of women. Write Bradfield Regulator Co., 408 Lamar Bldg. Atlanta, Ga., and we will send you a valuable little book to expectant mothers.

Our Reputation

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company is not only the name of a railroad; it is the sign of standard service in Southern Transportation.

Through long and intimate association with the general public in the Passenger Department we have, to our regret, made some enemies. However, those who condemn us will do us the justice to affirm that our passenger service can not be excelled by any other railroad in the South.

Through long and intimate dealings with shippers of freight we have, much to our regret, made some enemies. But those who disprove our methods and policies will do us the justice to affirm that the freight facilities of the L. & N. Railroad Co. can not be surpassed by any railroad in the South.

This has reference only to those who disagree with us. This disagreement arises sometimes from our unintentional negligence, sometimes from our error in judgment and sometimes from the disposition of the individual himself to find fault.

Through our long and intimate association with the general public we have made thousands of friends due to the high character of the service we render in both the Freight and Passenger Departments. We appreciate the praise accorded us by our friends and endeavor to profit by the criticism of those who disagree with us.

Whatever may be our course in this regard we at all times exert our every effort to not only maintain the present high standard of our service but to so improve and enlarge on it that we will keep abreast of the times and contribute to the more rapid development of the business interests of the South.

Our hope is for mutual prosperity and close co-operation of all the people.

WHEAT IN ALABAMA

Press Bulletin No. 73 Alabama Experiment Station, Auburn Ala

Wheat in Alabama is the title of Bulletin No. 179 of the Alabama Experiment Station. This pamphlet of twenty six pages will be mailed free to anyone application. A summary of the bulletin follows:

The most productive varieties of wheat as tested at the Alabama Experiment Station during the past sixteen years, have been the following, in order of rank: Alabama Blue Stem or Purple Straw, Red Wonder, Golden Chaff, Currell, Fultz and Fulcaster. The different varieties have made average yields varying from 13.6 to 18.2 bushels per acre.

The earlier varieties are safer for Alabama, and the later varieties more liable to extreme injury from rust.

Wheat from most of these varieties was classed by experts in Chicago and Memphis as No. 1 Red Winter, the remainig varieties as No. 2 Red Winter. Their average percentage of protein was 12.87 per cent, or above the average of American wheat. The weight per bushel was 59 to 61 pounds. All these facts show that Alabama wheat of the crop of 1914 was of the highest quality.

The average date of sowing wheat at Auburn has been November 17th. A good place for wheat in the rotation is immediately after cowpeas or other summer legume, or after cotton. Wheat grown after plowing under velvet bean and cowpea stubble afforded an increase in yield of 216 per cent over wheat preceded by crab grass and weeds.

In experiments extending over five years equal amount of nitrogen applied at planting time proved to be of practically equal value for wheat, whether the nitrogen was applied in the form of nitrate of soda, cotton seed meal or cotton seed; but nitrate of soda, when applied as a top dressing in March, proved much more effective than any other fertilizer.

Local experiments in a number of counties and extensive observations furnish evidence that there are considerable areas of land in the central, as well as in the northern, part of Alabama on which wheat may be grown at a profit, when prices are high and seasons not especially unfavorable.

Soil preferred for wheat are well drained clay or stiff loam soils, with at least fair fertility, and well stocked with vegetable matter. Acid, poorly drained and very sandy soil should be avoided.

Stinking smut of wheat seems uncommon in Alabama; when present it reduces the yield and injures the quality of wheat. Where it is uncertain whether wheat is from a crop affected by stinking smut the seed wheat should be treated with formalin to prevent this disease; this treatment does not prevent either rust or the loose ("common" or "black") smut of wheat.

MT. PLEASANT

Our school opened Monday morning with fairly good attendance, with Prof. W. C. Scarbrough as principal and Miss Amie Daniel as assistant.

Sunday School will be at ten o'clock in the morning next Sunday, and singing in the evening at two o'clock.

Mr. J. E. Kelly and wife of Maplesville spent Saturday and Sunday here with friends and relatives.

W. H. Conway of Jemison spent last Thursday night with L. O. Vickers.

J. A. Louis and wife spent Saturday and Sunday with the latter's parents, T. E. Hawkins and wife.

L O. Vicker's little son, Wallace fell last week and stuck a stick in his eye, but proved not serious.

Mr. W. H. Foshee visited his mother, Mrs. Liza Foshee Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Duke are visiting relatives in Coosa county.

Dr. Willis Massey of Weogufka is visiting his brother, Mr. G. H. Massey.

Mr. Reese Knight of Birmingham visited his sister, Mrs. J. B. Wilson last week.

Where is Same Old Moses and his coffins that he used to talk so much about?

Did the Democrats get the good out of Lewis Buster Pounds writing that they were expecting to get?

It seems that it makes a man and a party mighty popular for Lewis Buster Pounds to oppose them.

We do not expect the results of the recent election in Chilton county to make cotton go to fifteen cents, but we do expect the national election to gain the confidence of the people and cause business to pick up.

PRIZE WINNERS AT THE COUNTY FAIR

We continue this week the list of prize winners at the county fair, where we left off last issue.

The secretary of the Fair Association informs us that all prizes are being paid at the percentage of 50 cents on the dollar, owing to the fact that the Fair did not take in a sufficient fund to pay all expenses and the full amounts on premiums.

Ala. State Sunday School Convention

By the action of the State Executive Committee, the Thirty-first annual State Convention of the Alabama Sunday School Association will be held at Dothan, Alabama Wednesday Thursday-Friday, April 7 8 9, 1915. This will be the first time in thirteen years rhat it has been held in Southeast Alabama and the present indications are that it will be the best and strongest Convention that the Association has yet held. At the Convention in Mobile last year 1,644 delegates, representing 15 denominations, and every county in Alabama except three were in attendance. It is hoped this year that every county will be represented

Improvements At The Court House

Things around the court house are being placed in order, preparatory for the fall term of Circuit Court which convenes on November 23. The inside walls and woodwork of the temple of justice are being treated to a new coat of paint, and great improvement in appearance is noted.

REWARD $ 00 will be given for information regarding black hound dog strayed last Saturday night. Large black dog blue breast and front feet.

CHAPTER XXVI—Continued.

He became conscious of Simon's curious gaze and turned sharply on him.

"Old man, you seem to know a surprising lot about making steel. Look down the valley—there, on those hills. Do you see anything that isn't there?"

Simon looked and nodded. "I've be'n seein' it more'n forty years."

* * * * * * * *

The gentle, sometimes plaintive voice of the preacher had no power to distract from thought. His wistful message could not reach the man for whom it had been prepared in the hope that it would come to him with healing in its wings.

The benediction had been said. Mark went quietly from his rear pew out of the church and limped slowly along the dusty, weed-flanked pike until he came to a minor crest. There he dropped on the roadside and turned his eyes to the valley.

The murmurous quiet of noonday was about him.

Up the rise, village bound, creaked a battered old top-buggy, bearing a passenger whose grizzled beard and lined face, too, showed the marks of time's battering.

The buggy drew up beside him.

"Did he find you?"

"Who?"

The doctor chuckled. "Guess he didn't, or you wouldn't have to ask. He's a vigorous party that doesn't understand the joy of talk. I took him from Number Four to your place."

"Short and stout—"

"And not much for looks," Hedges concluded the portrait. "That's him. Has a way with him, though. And the habit of taking what he wants, I guess, without waiting."

"Sunday traffic," the doctor drawled, "is getting pretty heavy. Number Four brought a woman, too. Expecting any baggage of that kind?"

Mark shook his head absently.

"No? That's too bad. She's a new kind for Bethel—a right pleasant kind, too, though I'm not sure how our women'd take her." The doctor grinned, but his pleasantry won no answering smile from Mark. "Well, I must be moseying along. Better ride into town. The vigorous party'll be near to apoplexy by now, waiting for you."

"There's Magic in These Hills."

Mark got in and the buggy resumed its creaking journey. The doctor rambled on.

"A good many new sorts come to Bethel nowadays. Good thing for us, too—gives us a peep into the world. We've you to thank for that. I came across a queer one yesterday. I was up on the Hill—I go there sometimes even since the fire. I found him camped out in the old tool shed—about the only thing the fire missed. He's a half-starved little rat, with a straggly brown beard and a club foot. I asked him how he got there and he didn't seem to know. Said he'd just walked and walked and walked till he found the shed. I wanted to bring him back to town, but he wouldn't come. His mind's more than half gone, I should judge. You'd better send some one out to look after him."

"I will."

"And he says," the doctor concluded his heralding of fate, "his name is Peter Anderson."

CHAPTER XXVII.

Cities Unbuilt.

Henley was pleased to be facetious.

"The great Utopian—in his modest cottage—living in democratic simplicity among his village neighbors. Very pretty! I suppose you do the chores, too."

"Sometimes—what we have."

"Very pretty! The Sunday papers would like that. But it's a little too theatrical, don't you think?"

"Not conspicuously so. The place was here, and it served my purpose very well. I don't need much room, you know. I'm not a Wall street hero."

"Humph!" grunted Henley, still a skeptic.

"What," Mark asked, "did you come here for?"

Henley grunted again. "Cordial, I must say! I came to restore your sanity." He rose, mopping his red face with a silk handkerchief. "Take me out of this sun and I'll begin. I hear you're pretty far gone."

Mark led him into a cool office-like room—pleasant enough—and made him comfortable with a cigar and a chair by a window from which a view of the valley was to be had.

"Not sybaritic," Henley grudgingly admitted, "but good enough for a man—who has no women. Now tell me what you're trying to do here."

And Mark began, simply, without enthusiasm or sentimentalizing, to set forth his idea.

The explanation came to an end. Mark awaited his auditor's comment.

"Of course, you know," Henley said, with an easiness that was outward only, "you won't put it through."

"I do not know that," Mark answered quietly. "This valley is well situated with respect to the market. Its transportation facilities are good. Our fuel is here, and I can get ore here cheaper than Quinby or MacGregor. I can make steel cheaper than anybody in America, and there's no plant of its size that can equal mine in capacity. In ten years, with a fair field—"

"With a fair field. Exactly!"

"You mean I won't have it?"

"You won't have it."

"Why?"

"For one thing—profits."

"I'll make money here."

"It isn't a question of your profits nor of profits alone, but the size of profits. No," Henley shook his head vigorously, "you can't have it. I'm here to tell you that."

"Well?"

"I have no objection to your safety appliances. They're practical. They'll save twice their cost in damages every year."

"That's obvious."

"I'll agree to the baths. If the men want to clean up after work—why, I regard bathing as a very proper habit."

Mark smiled. "The man will be grateful."

"I'm not joking," Henley reminded him sternly. "I'll go as far as to agree to their eight-hour shift—as an experiment. I'd like to see it tried out."

"Yes?"

"Your company stores, company gardens and company homes are well enough. They can be made profitable—properly handled. But your profit-sharing plan is all wrong and"—Henley leaned forward and rapped on the arm of his chair to emphasize each word—"and you can't have it. I wouldn't care if you gave them only a nominal share. It would be useful—at first—to get good men up here. Afterward you could cut it out. But why, in God's name, give them half?"

"Because I'll need the other half for some things I'm planning."

"I'm not joking," Henley repeated. "Why give them half?"

"Oh, that's an approximation. It seems to me a pretty fair division of the spoils. I don't insist on its accuracy. However, that's not the point." Mark straightened up in his seat by the desk, facing Henley squarely. "Have you forgotten that my money and mine only is invested in this plant? I can quote good authority, yourself, that a man ought to be allowed to run his own business to suit himself."

"As long as he hurts no one else."

Mark smiled again at that. "You said you weren't joking. I suppose you aren't. That's the joke of it. However, the point is, you forbid me to conduct my own business in my own way. And your authority?"

"The power," answered Henley quietly, "to smash you—and the will. We've got labor where we want it in this business and we propose to keep it there. What you propose would be a dangerous precedent. If we let you succeed, we'd have the men all over the country yammering for the same freak conditions. Therefore, we won't let you succeed."

"I see. And you?"

"I? I made you—have you forgotten that?—and I'm responsible for you. I helped to put labor where it is, at some risk to myself, and I don't propose to have a man of my own making undo the biggest thing I've ever done. Therefore, I won't let you succeed."

"You are quite sure you can do it—smash me?"

"Truitt, every steel company in the country will make it its business to put you out."

"And you won't stand aside and let me fight it out with the rest of them?"

"No." Henley seemed astonished at the question. "Certainly not. What did you expect?"

"I had hoped," Mark answered slowly, "that you'd stay out of it. I realize I had no reason to hope that."

Henley stirred restlessly, turned to look out upon the valley, upon the city that had not yet arisen. An uneasy qualm moved his heart, continued with a sharpness that was almost akin to pain. He found himself resisting an absurd, an incredible impulse—a tenderness such as he had used to know, stealthily and unadmittedly, for a young half invalid with the habit of triumphing where robust men fell, multiplied now for this man.

"Truitt, I—" Henley stopped, an embarrassment as unwonted as the impulse upon him, and turned again to the window.

"Truitt," he began again, very gruffly, eyes still fixed on the city the magic of the hills revealed to him, "I—well, I like you. I've always counted you my friend. I don't want to have to fight you. I don't think you want to fight me. There is—there may be another alternative." He turned to face Mark. "Take me in with you."

Mark looked his astonishment.

"I say," Henley went on, "I might do it. I've seen something this morning—something you've been seeing. The city out there. It's big—big! And if the figures you've given me are correct, it's possible. This place was intended for a city. And with us working together, it could be ten times bigger—epic—stupendous!"

He got to his feet, and shooting up the shade, stood looking thoughtfully out of the window.

"We'd make it," Henley seemed almost to be thinking aloud, "a city from the beginning. We'd get the government to make the river navigable to the mouth and ship our coal by boat to the gulf. I can think of a dozen concerns I could get to move their plants here and contractors who'd undertake to house the people. In five years we'd have fifty thousand here, and coming as fast as we could put roofs over them. But we'd build on steel. We'd quadruple your plant at once—for a start. We'd make this the steel center and this overgrown trust with its graft and favoritism and slipshod methods would have us to reckon with. We'd leave Quinby and that Scotch bagpipe, grown fat on other men's brains, in the shade. By God!" Henley's voice was ringing, as he wheeled on Mark again. "It would be the big thing of the century—making a city to order. And I guess for that you'd be willing to give up your little two-by-four paternalism."

"That would be stipulated?"

"Certainly! We'll—" Henley seemed unconscious of the change of mood and tense. "We'll leave fads to the cranks. We'll build this city on a rock—on a sound financial foundation—and use the profits for extensions."

"I think you don't understand what I—"

"Understand? Of course I understand. That's why the idea grips. You're a born battler; things were coming too easy for you. You need obstacles, to have to extend yourself. I need that. I've got a hold in Wall street. I can tighten my hold. But I'm out of place there. I'm a builder, not a money-grubber. I've got to see things growing under my hand. What I'm at now is just a game. This would be a work, the kind I need. Will you consider it?"

"Are you offering it?"

"I'm offering it as a possible alternative to putting you out of business. There may be magic in these hills, but if the thing works out on study as I believe now it will, I'll do it. What do you say?"

"And you say," Mark insisted, "it's the only possible alternative to fighting you?"

"To being," Henley corrected grimly, "put out of business."

It was Mark's turn to go to the window. He stood there silent, for many minutes, looking not upon the city that might be but upon the little village that was.

"What do you say?" Henley demanded impatiently.

"It doesn't tempt." Mark faced him steadily. "You were mistaken. I don't want battle. I don't want obstacles. But I do want to put that through." He nodded toward the village and the mills.

"Humph! You'll find plenty of obstacles and battles over there."

"Yes. But there would be—compensations."

"I would give you compensations. Do you mean," Henley demanded, "you choose to hobble along with a little one-horse plant and philanthropy when you might go with me into something really big? Compensations! You'll end in losing all you have."

"All the money I have," Mark corrected. "That is possible. But I'm not worrying about the poor farm. I expect, when that happens, I can find a good job somewhere."

"Then," Henley fired his last gun, gruffly, "then you choose those people over there against me—who made you?"

"They helped to make me—to make you, too.—You," Mark answered quietly, "don't tempt.

"I'd like you to understand," he continued after a little pause, "since you've mentioned friendship, I don't like to think of you as an enemy. But this plan, this idea, is worth a good deal to me, even though the chance of success is small. It came to me before the strike. And at first it was only the shallow sentimentality you think it. Then it became a refuge. I came here because there was a thing"—Henley saw the shadow that passed over his face—"a thing I wanted to forget, something I needed to earn. But now it's grown beyond that. It has a value of its own. It's my niche, the thing I must do. You've helped me to make that clear.

"You ought to understand it, for you had it. It's what saved you from being like the other money grubbers. You came close to being one of them. Why, once when Quinby cracked his whip you — you — cringed like a whipped dog before the old blatherskite because you loved your money. You remember that, don't you? And then you ran afoul of him again, over the strike, when the same threat hung over you, and you didn't cringe. You beat him down. Why?"

"I couldn't let—"

"No, you couldn't. You believed opposing him would cost you much. The strike you forced did take hundreds of thousands from the value of your stock. But you didn't think of that then. And now—you've claimed my friendship. How much does it mean to you?"

"A good deal, Truitt," Henley answered slowly. "It's the only friendship I ever wanted. It was my reason for making you what you are."

"Friendship means obligation—you've just reminded me of that. Would it add to your obligation if I told you that you got away whole from Quinby because of me?"

"What! What's this? You never told me—"

"It wasn't I who did it but—a woman." Henley saw the shadow again.

"I'm Offering It as a Possible Alternative to Putting You Out of Business!"

"But she did it for me. I took for you an advantage I wouldn't take for myself. Does that square what you did for me?"

"Yes. I don't understand. But it does. It more than squares it."

"Then—my success here can't hurt you—will you stand aside and let me fight it out with the others?"

"You're asking me to let you undo the best thing I've ever done!"

There was a long silence in the little room. Henley sat stiffly, staring at the man who had passed out of reach of his influence. And the pain was unmistakable now.

"I see," he said at last, as if reluctantly. "I guess I'm the only one of the money grubbers who could understand. It seems to be your idea against mine. I'm sorry."

"It seems so. I'm sorry, too."

"My city—I guess it was just the magic of the hills, after all. I don't want to do it without you—I'm sorry."

There was a heavy pause. Then Henley drew a long breath that was almost a sigh, glanced at the clock and rose.

"I'll take another cigar," he said, grimly facetious, "if you don't mind giving aid and comfort to the enemy. Then I'll go back to my money grubbing."

When they were standing on the station platform he asked abruptly, "Can you tell me about that woman business?"

"I'd rather not."

Henley scrutinized him keenly. From around a curve came the crescendo whistle of the approaching train.

"You'd better," he said as he stopped for his grip, "get her up here. You'll need her. And when you're down and out, come to me and I'll give you a job."

Mark watched the train, regretfully, until it was caught out of his sight. Then he let his gaze dwell lingeringly on the mills and village across the river. A wave of protectiveness swept over him, of tenderness as for a deeply loved one.

And quick upon that wave, ere it ebbed, surged another, as though under the shock of the first contact with opposition a dam had fallen, loosing a torrent that flooded his soul, lifting him high, filling his need. Consciousness, distinct, definite, thrilling, filled him—of a new power and mettle, of the vitality of his purpose, of an ultimate purpose into which his fitted. A weight fell like the pilgrim's pack from his shoulders. His spirit stood erect, steady. He lifted his eyes to the hills.

"I can put it through. I will. . . . I have faith."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

White Water.

The woman who alighted with Henley from the train had come with an errand. Sundry inquiries from the station and at the new hotel—so hideously garish amid the gray tones of its surroundings—convinced her that she would need Mark Truitt's help. But she had overheard her fellow passenger's questions to the doctor and guessed that Mark would be with him for most of that day.

She stayed in her little hotel room until dinner time. After that meal, eaten in a noisy dining-room filled with still homeless men who had come to build or work in the Bethel experiment, she went out and wandered about through the old village, of which years before, hearing of it from an unappreciative young adventurer, she had used to think as a sort of antechamber to heaven. There had even been a period in that far-off, innocent girlhood when she had thought of it as a beautiful restful haven, to which, some day when he should have tired of the greedy city and its grind, her lover might bring her. Always, it seemed, she had needed and wanted a haven. If only he had brought her then, what might have been saved!

"What might have been saved! But I mustn't think of that."

From down a narrow lane she caught a glimpse of the river, smiling in the sunlight. It beckoned to her and she obeyed, turning her steps upstream. A thick grove of oaks and chestnuts shut her off from the village and she was alone with the river and forest. River and forest held many memories for her.

Hours passed. A few fleecy, tumbling clouds floated over her. Heavier and less silvery masses appeared over the western horizon. The wind freshened. She did not notice. . . . And suddenly she knew that she was not alone.

She turned and saw him standing near, staring, bewildered yet strangely eager, toward her. Her lips parted, her bosom lifted in a sharp intake of breath, as their eyes met. Then she got slowly to her feet, trying to look away that she might regain a lost self-control.

He started toward her, with the peculiar halting step she never could see without a tender maternal impulse. Scarcely two yards away he stopped.

"Kazia—you!"

"Yes."

"But I," he stammered, "I don't understand."

Self-control was coming back. "I came to get Piotr."

"To get Piotr," he repeated mechanically. But he did not comprehend.

He passed a hand over his eyes. The apparition did not fade. Gradually he realized—with a dazing jumble of gladness and pain and reluctance—that it was indeed she, in the flesh.

"I can hardly realize it," he said at last. "I was just thinking of you. Often I am thinking of you. A hundred times I've been on the point of going to see you, to find out—"

"To find out?"

"How badly I hurt you."

"I told you I haven't blamed you."

"But that isn't true—it can't be true. It wouldn't be human not to resent me, what I've brought you. You do resent, don't you?"

"Why do you press me with what is ended? I don't want to think of it—or to be unjust. I—" She turned sharply to face him. "Yes, if you must know it, I do resent."

"You have every right to resent," he answered sadly.

She started swiftly along the bank toward the village. He followed, trying to keep up with her, and with a real effort managed it. A quarter of a mile was thus traversed, neither speaking, she keeping always one pace ahead so that he could not see her face. Then she observed his heavy breathing and slackened her pace.

"I didn't realize I was walking so fast." Her voice was quiet again.

"I don't mind it." He assayed a laugh, a poor, mirthless attempt. "I need a counter-irritant just now."

"And I didn't mean what I said back there. I haven't felt that way—often, at least. I have no resentment against you—only against myself. It was in me to keep clean and I deliberately—it is all so clear now—chose the worst thing."

"That is true of all of us."

"I don't know. I only know it's true of me. And so you needn't go on torturing yourself with thoughts of your responsibility. Oh, I don't want you to do that. It can help neither of us and it will cripple your work here."

"Kazia? You?"

"It isn't facing the truth that can hurt, but the truth itself. Kazia, why did you come here?"

"I told you—to get Piotr."

"Piotr? I had forgotten him. I heard this morning he was here."

"Then he is here? I asked at the station and hotel, but no one had seen or heard of him."

"But why is he here? And why have you come?"

"He came back to us a few weeks ago, the forlornest waif I've ever seen. I don't know how he had been living—we'd no trace of him since Uncle Roman died. He was starving and his mind was clearly gone. I suppose he wouldn't have come to me otherwise. I ought to have put him away somewhere, but he was harmless and it seemed so cruel. He just sat around poring over books as he used to when he was a boy. He seemed to have forgotten all that's happened since then. And then three days ago he awoke. He asked me for some money—said something about a debt he had to pay. It was little enough—and he's had so little of everything, poor Piotr!"

"So very little."

"He went out and didn't come back. And yesterday—I'd seen she was worrying, but thought it was because he hadn't appeared again—the Matka told me she thought from something he'd said that he might have come up here to try to harm you in some way. Do you know where he is?"

"The doctor here, who told me about him, said he's camping out in an old shed over there in the hills."

"If you'll help me to him, or send some one—"

"I will go myself."

They had reached the lane that led to the main street and the hotel. She would have turned there, but he put out a hand and stayed her.

"Kazia, was it only on Piotr's account you came?"

Her glance wavered, sought wistfully and sadly the hills across the valley, came back to his. "You mean, did I think of meeting you again? I—why should I deny it? I wanted to see your work I had been hearing about—and you again. But it doesn't mean I wanted to change anything. Please believe that. And I didn't want to trouble you—"

"You haven't troubled me."

"Will you please leave me now and bring Piotr to the hotel? I must leave with him tonight."

When she had passed out of his sight, he started quickly villageward. At the cottage he harnessed his horse to a buggy, drove across the bridge and took the road that led to Hedges' Hill.

CHAPTER XXIX.

The Miracle.

"I shall know it," he had thought, "when it comes."

And as he drove there came to him the knowledge of his miracle. It came, not with the lazy luxuriousness of youth drifting, ignorant and caring not for wisdom, toward a mate, nor yet with the ecstatic feverish excitement of the passionate man, but with a deep, solemn, all-pervading joy. Peace followed it—the peace of certitude, for he knew that in the woman who had sinned he had found the one who fitted into him as a member into its body, completed him, with him formed the perfect unity—of content, for he knew that from its infinite preciousness neither trial nor failure, disappointment nor misstep could subtract.

"She must know," he thought. "She must be made to know—that nothing else counts—that we are to begin over again together."

He remembered his mission.

There was a rumble of thunder. He glanced overhead and saw the blackened sky, heard the rushing wind. A few scattered drops fell. He urged the horse forward.

He was miles away from the village and near the foot of a hill that towered well above its neighbors. He smiled as he saw a trace of an old road, almost obliterated by weeds, that led zigzagging up the eminence. It was Hedges' Hill and near the crest, he remembered, was the outhouse that sheltered the unhappy Piotr.

The storm overtook him before he was half-way up the hill. When he reached the clearing on the edge of which stood the shed, he made his horse fast to a tree, and drenched to the skin by the pelting rain, entered the shelter.

At first, in the shadows of the windowless shed, he saw no signs of Piotr. He stood in the doorway, watching the storm.

He had been there several minutes when a queer choking sound came from behind him. He turned quickly, and as his eyes became used to the darkness, made out the figure crouching half hidden behind a bench in the far corner.

"Hello! Is that you, Piotr? What are you doing over there?"

The noise came again.

"Is something wrong with you?" Mark went closer to him. "I'm Mark Truitt. Don't you know me, Piotr?"

"Y-yes," quavered Piotr.

"What's the matter—sick?"

"I'm a-afraid," came the whimpering reply. "It's the storm."

Mark smiled pityingly. So this poor nerve-broken creature, who cowered before a little wind and rain and lightning, was he who had set out to harm him.

"He's in a bad way," he thought. "There, now," he said, gently, "I'm not going to hurt you, Piotr."

Piotr was in his corner, half crouching, staring fixedly at Mark. His eyes made tiny points of light in the deep shadow.

"D-did you come here to get me?"

"Of course I did. I heard you were hereabouts and I wasn't going to let you stay up here and starve to death."

"Wh-what are you g-going to do with me now?"

"For one thing," Mark answered gravely, "when this rain lets up I'm going to take you back to town and get you in the habit of eating three square meals a day. I think it's beginning to let up a little now."

"Who," came Piotr's quavering voice, "who told you I was here?"

"The doctor who found you yesterday—and Kazia."

"Kazia! She—she is here?"

"Yes. She came to get you."

"She knows?"

"She guessed—she and the Matka guessed—you were up to some mischief. You frightened the Matka with your wild talk. But we'll discuss that later. Come, we'll make a start now."

CHAPTER XXIX—Continued.

Piotr did not move from his corner. "Ah!" It was almost a sob. "They're still for you against everybody, against me. It was always so. Everybody was for you. You had everything. It came easy to you. It came hard to me, so hard I could never do anything or get anything. It—"

"Yes, yes, Piotr, I know. But we're going to change that now. Come along—the rain's stopped and I must hurry."

"To get back to her, I suppose?" Piotr sighed.

"I must get back to her. Come on."

"I don't think I—" Piotr's words came between gasps. Something seemed to be choking him. "In a minute. I—I must get—some things."

Mark looked quickly back over his shoulder, caught by an odd change in the plaintive voice. Dusk was gathering rapidly, deepening the shadows in the shed, and he could barely see the figure fumbling about in his corner. There was a pause—Piotr's search seemed to have been successful—then a metallic click. Mark whirled sharply on him.

"Piotr—!"

"Ah!" It was not a sob now, but a low gutteral growl, throbbing with hate and triumph.

Piotr, too, whirled. From his corner a point of flame leaped out toward Mark, another—another—until six shots had rung out. At the last Mark's head drooped forward, his body swayed slowly and fell in a crumpled heap across the doorway. . . .

When he awoke he was being dragged by his wounded shoulder in such fashion that his head scraped along the floor. He did not realize so much, merely that his pain had increased a hundredfold. He tried to cry out, but could only lie limp and silent. Then he felt a hand passing over his face and a voice that seemed very far away muttering fretfully.

"I wonder if you're dying or shamming. It would be like you to sham. I didn't mean to shoot then. I didn't want you to die until you knew the mills were gone. But I had to—when you looked at me that way, I had to."

Mark heard, but the words meant nothing to him. The voice muttered on; detached sentences came to him.

"It isn't so easy as I thought. . . . I'd better go now, while I can. . . . I'm afraid. I never drove a horse. . . . Twice, coming here, I fell. I thought I was dead, but it didn't go off—I don't know why. . . . I'd like to tell you about Kazia's doctor. I saw them one night and followed them. You wouldn't believe it of her, would you? It nearly killed me. . . . It was your fault. You ran away from her. . . . It would be easy to drive off the road and fall in the dark. . . . I'm tired, and I tremble. Seeing you makes it worse. . . . I keep wondering what they'll do to me. . . . When the mills are gone, I'm coming back to you. I guess you'll stay. . . Maybe I'd better finish you now—you're so lucky always."

Mark felt the hand again, now at his throat, pressing hard. He tried to protest: "That is quite superfluous," but the pressure would not let him. When blackness was closing in on him once more, the grip relaxed.

But he did not quite lose consciousness this time. He heard the other move about, still muttering, then pass out. The sound of wheels and the horse's tramping through the tall weeds died away in the distance.

At first Mark lay inert. A mortal weakness held him. He could realize only the pain. He wanted nothing but to lie prone and motionless. . . . A disturbing thought began to tug at his brain. He ought not to be there. There was a thing he must do, some one he must see. What was it?

"Kazia!" The name gave him a thrilling shock that sharpened the pain but cleared his mind a little.

And the mills! The mills! Kazia and the mills! The two thoughts were inextricably mingled.

With a rush came realization of his plight. Piotr, the puny whimpering madman who cringed before a squall, had shot him and was on his way to blow up the mills. Piotr must be forestalled. With an effort he forced his eyes open and held them so until the first giddiness passed. He raised his head; it fell back with a thud.

"I can't do it," he groaned.

But the mills—and Kazia!

"I've got to do it. I must stop him. I must get to her."

Then began a fight to sit up, to stand, to beat off the invisible hands trying to drag him back into the blackness. How long the struggle lasted, by what degrees he progressed, he did not know; but when it was over he was leaning weakly against the door jamb. His brain was reeling, he breathed sobbingly, but by bracing himself desperately with the cane, recovered in the struggle to stand, he managed to hold what he had won.

His brain cleared again, a little steadiness came to the trembling limbs. Summoning all his will, he passed with uncertain dragging steps out of the shed. A cold damp wind breathed refreshingly upon him. He gripped his cane more tightly and started slowly down the weedy road.

He reached the foot of the hill and sank down in a little rain pool, rested pantingly and laved his hot face a few minutes, then staggered to his feet and limped on until weakness overcame him once more and he fell. . . .

More than an hour later he was still lurching along the road. Kazia and the mills! They were in danger, they were being taken from him; he must save them.

So he beat his way slowly along moonlit stretches of rough road, through darkened ravines where only instinct found a path, until at last, rounding a curve, he saw the furnace looming huge before him.

As hours passed and Mark did not return, a sense of an approaching crisis, of a danger, came to Kazia. The squall died away, full darkness fell, the train she was to have taken with Piotr rolled to a stop at the station and out again, and still he had not returned. The sense grew heavier, passive waiting unbearable. To escape her foreboding she went out into the night and walked about again in the place she had once thought of as a haven. But she quickly left the rambling old village, seen for the first time, yet holding so many memories of which she must not think, and went over to the new Bethel with its wide paved streets and rows of pretty little cottages. Many of the cottages were dark and untenanted as yet, but she saw them as they would be when they were the homes of a happy folk who toiled without exhaustion or fear, with kindness in their hearts one for another.

She left the cluster of homes-to-be and retraced her steps over the street that led past the mills to the bridge, started to cross. But at the entrance she stopped. Everywhere it was the same, a redolence of him. After all, to her Bethel, the haven, was just Mark Truitt.

All her fine resolutions and philosophy had become insufficient. The sight of the river, the woods in their autumnal glory, the song of the rapids had revivified the scenes of her one happiness.

She did not think that there might be some to see. She was weeping, head bowed on the bridge rail.

"Oh, I shouldn't have come. I want him—him. And I have no right to have him. It would be the cruelest thing I could do to him—even if he cared. I was wrong to come."

Thus she told hope—the immortal!—it must not live. . . .

Old Simon had no skill for it and hence no part in the building of the mills. But he spent his days watching them grow. Often at night, when Bethel was sleeping, he would slip across the river to realize again that after so many years his dreams were coming magnificently true.

That night he left his seat on the stoop, where he had been wonderingly but patiently awaiting the absent Mark, and trudged down to the river and across the bridge. He saw the figure leaning on the rail at the farther end, but not until he was close did he see it was that of a weeping woman. He would have turned aside, but he perceived that she had heard him and lifted her head.

He stopped short, staring in astonishment at the woman, a sort that had never before come within his ken.

After a moment's hesitation he went to her.

"Is anything wrong, ma'am?"

She shook her head.

"Is there anything I kin do fur ye?"

Again the silent gesture.

"If there is," he persisted: "I'd like to do it fur ye."

She found her voice. "It is nothing." She tried to smile. "Sometimes women cry for nothing, about little things."

"Some women do," Simon answered gravely. "I guess ye're a stranger here, ain't ye? I'm Simon Truitt."

She started. "You're his father?"

Simon noted the unconscious use of the pronoun. "Mark's, ye mean? Yes, ma'am. Did ye know him, back there in the city?"

She nodded, not trusting herself to speak, and turned her face from the moonlight. She seemed to be struggling again with a rising sob.

Simon found himself peering, closely and unintentionally, into her eyes. He stepped hastily back and heard himself speaking with a boldness he did not recognize.

"Mebby it was fur him ye were—But I hadn't oughter ask that. Mebby it's fur ye he's be'n grievin'?"

"It couldn't be that."

"I've wondered. Often I've come on him when he thought he was alone, jest settin' and lookin' at nothin'—an' grievin', I know." Simon's face, too, sought the shadow. "I know."

"It might be because of me but not—not for me."

"Not because he wants ye, ye mean? But it could be that. 'Tain't likely he'd find two such women as ye, even in the city. An' 'tain't likely he'd trouble so much, if there wasn't a woman in it. I wish ye could give him what he needs."

"What he needs is to have his life made over from the beginning. He can't have that."

"If he's jest wantin' some one, there's a way he could have it."

"You don't understand," she said wearily.

"No, I don't understand. That's the trouble. I'd like to help him, to give him what he needs. But I don't know how. There's nothin' I can give him."

He turned his face away from her, looking up at the furnace, big and menacing, outlined against the sky. There was silence among the mills. From the old village behind them came faint vague sounds of life—a distant tinkle of laughter, a crying child, a neighing horse. From the new town beyond the mills came no sound but a single voice in song, a wild eery chant that had been brought from another land. The song was finished. Kazia and Simon stirred, as though they had been waiting for its close to bring their strange encounter to an end.

"What's that?"

Both started. From somewhere near them had come a sudden muffled cackle of mirthless uncanny laughter.

"Sounds 's if it come from the furnace. There hadn't oughter be anybody 'round here. But I guess it's just the watchman in the power house. The still night makes it sound like that."

But even as he spoke they saw the figure of a man crawling from behind the furnace. He scrambled to his feet and began to run, with an awkward hobbling gait, up the tracks toward the bridge. The moonlight fell full on his face.

"Piotr!"

As the cry, in a voice he knew, reached him, the man stopped suddenly, stared wildly about and saw the two figures advancing on him. He raised his hands in a frantic gesture.

"Kazia! Go back—go back!"

She did not heed his warning. "Piotr! What are you doing?"

"Go back!" he screamed. "You'll be killed. It's dynamite!"

Instantly the others guessed what impended. Kazia heard a low moan beside her, saw Simon run, as fast as his age-stiffened limbs allowed, toward the furnace, as if he thought to avert the imminent destruction.

"You mustn't!" she cried. "Come back!"

If the old man heard, he did not obey. She fled after him, in instinctive purpose to drag him back out of danger.

They reached Piotr, passed him. He stood bewildered, glancing uncertainly toward the refuge of the woods. Then, with a low whimpering cry, he, too, joined in that moonlight race. He could not have overtaken her, had she not tripped and fallen over a switch. He flung himself upon her, moaning shudderingly.

"Kazia, I didn't want to hurt you."

Simon sped on.

That was what Mark Truitt, crouching where he had last fallen, saw just before the explosion came. There was a hoarse deafening roar. The great furnace seemed to reel, then toppled and fell.

They found him weakly trying to remove the debris from a place near the edge of the ruin. They drew him aside and a hundred strong hands took up his task. Soon they found the dead Piotr and under him Kazia, still breathing. It was not until daybreak that they came to Simon.

Kazia was carried to the village and laid in Doctor Hedges' own house. All through the night and in the morning, until the great surgeon from the city came, he fought off death. Then the surgeon took up the fight with a knowledge and skill the old doctor did not possess. For two days they did not sleep but watched and battled.

In the adjoining room a man, himself the object of the doctor's care, passed through his Gethsemane. The dead, his own pain and weakness, all else, were forgotten in his agony for the one who, it seemed, could not live. Sometimes he would rise from the couch where they had laid him and creep into the other room to join the watchers there until the sight of the still, bandaged form became more than he could bear. Then he would let them lead him back to his couch. His lips moved constantly, in what words he did not know. Their burden was the cry of all Gethsemanes.

"Let this cup pass from me."

So the miracle was made perfect.

Toward the last of that watch his weakness began to overcome him. The doctors supposed he slept and said: "It is best." He did not sleep. He had lost sense of his surroundings but his brain was alive. He was fighting, struggling supremely, to hold her back from the precipice over which she was slowly falling. Once she seemed to be slipping from his clasp. He heard her piteous cry to him.

He rose with a start and tottered into her room

"She called me," he whispered.

Hedges thought it was delirium and would have led him back to his couch. But Mark resisted.

"I tell you, she called me. I must see her."

"Let him," said the surgeon. "Probably it's his last chance."

Hedges released him and Mark went over to her. He dropped to his knees by the bedside and kissed, very gently, the arm outlined under the sheet.

"Kazia," he whispered. "My wife, my love, don't leave me! Can't you hear, dear?—the miracle has come!"

He thought that she sighed, as does a tired child when it sinks to sleep, and that a little smile touched the pale lips.

The others did not see, but then they had not heard her call.

CHAPTER XXX.

The Ultimate Purpose.

It was an Indian summer day, when the sun paused to smile genially back over his shoulder at the earth he was leaving to winter's cold mercy, and a warm wind blew softly. Toward noon Kazia, leaning on the doctor and his buxom wife, was helped to the front porch, where the Matka was waiting with cushions and shawls. In a big rocking chair the convalescent was made comfortable, with cushions at head and feet and the shawls tucked carefully around her.

"You're sure you're warm enough?" queried Mrs. Hedges, with needless anxiety.

"Quite sure. You all spoil me with kindness."

Mrs. Hedges gave a last pat to the cushion behind Kazia's head. "You take a deal of spoiling, I think, dearie."

Kazia sighed. "I'll hate to leave you." Tears, for some reason, were treacherously ready that morning.

"Then," drawled the doctor, "you're thinking of leaving us?"

"I must—soon." But under the doctor's twinkling gaze a girlish flush sprang into view—perhaps to keep the tears company.

"Too much color," chuckled the doctor. "Let me feel your pulse."

The crimson deepened and as instantly vanished.

"I've a cake in the oven," Mrs. Hedges suddenly remembered. "Doctor, I'll need you."

"Need me?" The doctor started. "Am I a—"

"At once, Doctor," came a stern command from the hall.

"Eh? Oh—!" A light broke in upon him and he chuckled again. "Coming, my dear, coming!"

The Matka, too, would have left her, but Kazia stayed her. "Don't go," she said in the Matka's tongue.

The old woman halted, irresolute. "He, your lover, will be coming soon." Timidly she laid a thin knotted hand on the scarf enshrouding Kazia's hair.

Kazia ignored that. "You will hate to leave this place, won't you?"

The Matka nodded. "There is peace here. Even the old smile and make jests, and they grow old easily, as a child grows into youth. And my Piotr is here." Her eyes sought a distant hillside, where white stones gleamed in the sunshine.

"But we must go. I don't belong here. What would these kind people think if they knew"—the voice broke a little—"what you know."

"They would think as I do. And I—I know nothing, except that you love and are loved. Such love I have never seen. It is not the love your mother and her lover had. All here know and are glad of it. I do not think you can go and leave him unhappy." And the Matka stole away.

"It came too late."

Kazia's lips said that and the waiting tears overflowed, lingering gem-like on the fringe of closed lashes. A thousand times she had repeated the words to herself since the first hour of consciousness when she had seen him bending over her. She thought she believed it. But her fast-beating heart, as she awaited her lover's coming, sounded another answer.

The heavy throbbing ceased, began again, keeping time with a trampling of hoofs from down the street. Her closed eyes did not open even when the trampling ceased and she heard his step, punctuated by the ring of cane on gravel, until his step, too, ceased and she felt him near her, his gaze upon her. She dreaded to meet that gaze.

Slowly the reluctant lids opened . . . and dread took wings, like a night bird that had seen the first light. And the light in his eyes, transfiguring him for her, thrilling her with its summons, was not to be mistaken for the fire that had flamed there at other times, or for the pity of one seeing his cruelties working out.

"It is not too late," her heart was crying, and she tried in vain to stifle its song.

But he did not press her then with impetuous wooing.

"Do you realize," he said gravely, "this is the first time since the accident I've seen you alone?"

"Yes, I—" she began stammeringly. "The others have just gone in. If you call them, they will come."

"Then," he smiled reassuringly, "I will call them at once, for I have many things to show you today, and the doctor sets an absurd limit to our drive."

He rapped on the door and the doctor appeared, and behind him the Matka. Then, while the Matka piled the cushions in the seat, Mark and the doctor helped Kazia over the little walk and into the buggy.

"And mind you," the doctor adjured them, as Mark got in and the horse started, "two hours at the most—if you can keep track of the time!"

Then he gently led the Matka back into the house. For she, who had forgotten how to weep for sorrow, was weeping now for the joy awaiting Kazia.

First Mark drove, very slowly and carefully, through the old village and across the bridge until he came to its middle point. There he stopped.

The mills were no longer lifeless and silent. A row of giant stacks spouted clouds of heavy black smoke that fluttered lazily away in the breeze in long wavering pennons. Through the power house windows the watchers caught a glimpse of great flywheels whirling and bright pistons plunging. From the rolling mills beyond came a low monitory rumble of engines stirring tentatively, testing their sinews as they waited to pounce upon and torture the coming steel. And before them towered the rebuilt furnace, alive now and discordantly vocal with its first labor. Thither Mark pointed.

"Watch now! We're just in time. Our first tap!"

As he spoke, the shriek of the checked blast rose, drowning all other sounds, and the crew of men working at the furnace mouth sprang back. Out of a circle of darting fires forth leaped a molten deadly flood. A channel in the sloping sand-bed received it and bore it swiftly, in a dozen branches, to the waiting ladles. Little gaseous flames played impishly over the golden surface. The stench of burning sulphur arose. As the cascading flood filled the ladles, drops splashed out upon the ground and burst in a thousand tiny points of light.

Almost before Kazia realized it, the flood had subsided and the full ladles were moving away.

He drove on and took the long winding road that led past Hedges' Hill—though he did not remind her of his meeting with Piotr—and after many miles circled back to the village. They talked little, and perhaps that little was hardly worthy of a record. Kazia lay back in her cushions, her eyes following his hand as he pointed out some new beauty to her.

"How could you leave it?" she murmured, as often she had exclaimed when she had heard of it from the adventuring youth.

"But if I hadn't left it, I shouldn't have found you. So—I'm glad I went."

She made no answer to that.

Farther on they came to a branch road that once he had known. He followed it a while until there came to them a delicious spring-like fragrance. He stopped the horse again.

"I thought I could find it. See!"

He pointed to an old tree that stood, a mass of fresh green leaves and snowy blossoms, a little away from the roadside.

"What is it?"

"A pear tree."

"But it's autumn and I thought—" She glanced up at him wonderingly.

"Every fall that tree puts out a new set of leaves and blossoms. You see, there is new life even after spring has gone."

She looked long and earnestly at the blossoming tree. "But winter will come and the blossoms will wither—fruitless."

No longer could he refuse words to his longing.

"Ah! my dear," he cried, "let us forget signs and symbols. There is such a thing as new birth. And it's always spring where there is love. You will forgive me," he laughed unsteadily, "if I talk like a very young poet, for I am very, very happy today."

A touch of the old ready color was glowing faintly in her wan cheeks.

"Have you looked enough?" he smiled. "For, if you have, we must go. It will be getting chilly soon. And besides, they are waiting for us."

"Waiting—?"

"Yes. Didn't you know? Doctor Courtney is to marry us tonight."

The color vanished and she shrank back from him, lifting piteous pleading eyes to his.

"Oh, Mark, don't ask me that. I can't—I can't. Couldn't you let me have this day—"

"Did you think I'd let you go again? Did you think you could? Only one thing in the world could make me let you go—if you can say you don't love me. And you can't say that."

"No, I can't—say that. But don't ask me. Don't you see, it would be cruel to you—it would be worse for me. You forget now—but some day you would remember—that I— Ah! don't force me to say it!"

Her thin wasted hands went to her face, but he drew them away that she might see he had not flinched.

"Kazia, just this once we'll speak of the past, and then we'll put it forever away where the past belongs. One sin is much like another. And for every scar you have I can show many. I ask you to forgive, you have forgiven much. Can't you trust me to forget a little? And, dear, all that—all the sins and shadows—were part of a man and woman we have left behind."

She seemed so weak and fragile, lying there, this wraith of the old Kazia, torn by love and fear! A sudden mist shut her from his sight. An unspeakable tenderness welled up within him, lending to his husky broken phrases a supreme eloquence she needed to hear.

"But this love—the Kazia that called it to life—are part of the new life. It began those days when we thought you couldn't live and I learned what love is and what it would mean to lose

"Ah! Take Me!"

you. It will never end. Is it I you doubt? Dear, I know—I know. And I need you. Can't you understand, I need you? You won't, you can't, fail me now?"

"You don't know what you ask," she whispered. "But I can't fight against it any longer—I want you so. Only promise me—when you remember—you won't let me know."

"I promise. Kazia—!"

"Ah! Take me."

A sob shook her and she swayed toward him. He caught her and drew her very gently to him. . . . After a little she smiled through her tears.

It was evening and the others had gone, leaving them alone again.

There was no light but the glow of embers on the hearth in the little cottage that was to be their home for a while. But it was enough for them, in whose hearts the unquenchable torch was glowing, revealing beauties and glories they never had known. They sat very close, watching—and listening.

For the silence of the hills was ended forever. Throughout that day, as the iron they had seen flowing advanced toward its destiny, the new creature that had come into the valley had been awakening to full life. Section after section had received the life-giving power, until now all the huge mechanism was in motion, driving, whirling, pounding at top speed. The earth quivered in answer to its pulsation. Crunching metal, raging blasts, fires such as served at the creation, lifted their voices in chorus—an ode of the elements to man the master, the song of steel. A terrible song whose beauty only the understanding might discern—singing madly of power and passion and purpose, of struggle and death, of birth and life, of triumph and steadfast strength.

To the lovers, rich in the knowledge that comes only after sin and payment and release, the song came not in vain.

"Ought you to be there?" she whispered.

"Not tonight, dear."

"Could we see it from here?"

He helped her to a chair by the south window and stood at her side while she saw.

The night sketched the drama of steel for her. Again the great furnace was setting free its lambent flood. Under open sheds were gleaming the sun-bright mouths of other furnaces where the iron boiled and boiled and became steel.

"Ah!" Wonderment and adoration were in her cry. "And it is yours—it is you!"

"Not I, not mine! I don't know how many generations of men gave themselves that we might have that. I know it was not for me, for any man. For all who suffer and toil."

His face was set sternly toward the mills. For a long time he was silent.

"What is it?" And she broke the silence with a whisper. "What do you see out there?"

Sternness melted into tenderness.

"A parable," he smiled down on her, "of our lives—of life. Desire and disillusionment, battle and toil, conquest and failure, evil and shame—the fires and pressures that burn us and shape us." His hand rested on her hair. "And the purpose in which the real life begins."

"Ah! I wouldn't have you different. But to me—to me life isn't a parable—it is you. . . . This peace, this content—I can't believe yet that they are true, that they always will be true. Ah! Teach me, teach me!" . . ."

THE END.

Winthrop's Toast.

Our Country—whether bounded by the St. John's and the Sabine, or however otherwise bounded or described, and be the measures more or less—still, Our Country, to be cherished in all our hearts, to be defended by all our hands.—Robert C. Winthrop, July 4, 1845.

THE UNION-BANNER

Published Every Thursday at Clanton, Chilton County, Alabama.
UNION PUBLISHING CO.
W. M. WYATT, Editor.

Subscription price, in advance, per year, $1.00.

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second-class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

The anti-democrats of Coosa county polled a splendid vote on Nov. 3. It would not take a great amount of work to overthrow Democratic rule there; just a systematic organized fight.

"The Progressives carried Chilton county over the Democrats on Nov. 3 by a majority of over 500."—Peoples Advocate.

Correct brother, go head. But we want to see you bring Shelby back into the righteous path.

All the Democratic candidates were elected in Shelby county on November 3 by very small majorities. Commenting on the outcome of the vote the Peoples Advocate of Columbiana says, "The defeat of the Progressive Republican county ticket was caused by the indifference of Progressives and Republicans. More than 300 failed to go to the polls, and in a number of beats the democrats voted illegally."

We are giving this week, the tabulated vote of Chilton county in the election of November 3rd, for all county officers, and for State Senator from this district. The vote for the state officers is practically the same. Mr. W. E. Thomas, candidate for the Legislature, led the Progressive ticket with a vote of 1381. Mr. Sawyer, candidate for the same office on the Democratic side, led his ticket with a vote of 884. The vote of the county was 2,265.

CHILTON WANTS SOME GOOD FLOUR MILLS.

It is evident that something has already wrought a change in the farming methods of this county. Never before has there been a time when so many farmers are including a few acres of wheat in their tenable land. Men who rent land have even made stipulations with their renters that will require them to plant some wheat, instead of the former method of "raise all the cotton you can." And not only are they introducing the culture of wheat, but they are also diversifying their crops in other ways.

But the one paramount question in the minds of those who hope to produce next year at least a part, if not all their flour at home, is "Where can I get my wheat ground into flour?"

There are not (if any at all) nearly enough flour mills in this county to take care of the wheat which we believe will be raised here next year. We need good flour mills. The farmers are going to furnish the wheat to grind, and it behooves somebody to furnish the mills with which to do the work.

But the part of the deal that looks so good to us, is seeing the people of Chilton county living off the bread of their own fields and not dependent as heretofore upon that source of supply which comes from the northern wheat fields, via the speculator, and bearing the mark of his merciless imposition upon those who are helpless to resent.

OUR PREDECESSOR, REV. F. B. TICKNOR.

This esteemed gentleman will be happily remembered by the readers of The Union-Banner, who were recipients of his excellent services as Editor previous to the encumbency of the present occupant of the tripod.

Mr. Ticknor resigned his duties with this paper more than a year ago, on account of ill health and went to Florida for recuperation. Being a minister he found pleasure in an opportunity to pursue that work while casually resting himself, and seeking the "fountain of youth," stories of which entranced the soul of the adventurous DeSoto many centuries ago.

But little hope was entertained by those acquainted with the subject of this sketch, that he would remain long separated from the "shop," for he long ago got his fingers smeared with the one thing which, above all others, is the hardest to remove—printer's ink.

Hence, there will be no surprise when we say that he is again editing a newspaper—The Raiford (Fla.) Tribune, the first copy of which reached our desk last week. In taking charge of that paper, Mr. Ticknor has the following to say to his readers by way of introduction:

"After something over a year's vacation from the newspaper business, during which I had more or less of a frolic in the holiday part of the state, down on the west coast, I decided that I must get back in the harness and go to work. For a jolly good time the coast is all right; all right if you have plenty of money, and time to frolic; but as a working man I saw the necessity of getting among working people, people who were making a living out of the soil itself, and not out of "tourists" and "winter visitors."

The "Tribune" has every appearance of a splendid small town newspaper, and reveals even greater possibilities for the future. And we know that the enterprise and experience of Brother Ticknor in the newspaper field will bring forth from the venture all there is in it.

This editor, together with his readers who know Mr. Ticknor, wish him every success that could be desired.

WOMENS' CIVIC LEAGUE.

The Clanton branch of the Chilton County Improvement Society, which is known as the Women's Civic League, has sprung into action somewhat of a sudden, and rather unnoticed by some, and the work which it has already done toward civic improvement is in many cases yet more or less a surprise. But aside from the fact that some have not yet learned of the organization and what it proposes to do, its aims and intents are none the less worthy of serious consideration.

It is a society composed of ladies of the town who take pride in having their surroundings the most pleasant and creditable that it is possible to have. They hold regular meetings, and lay definite plans to pursue in their work; the result of their concerted action is much good accomplished.

This week we have a column of news items regarding their accomplishments, and would be glad to have this space filled every week with reading concerning the league.

We wish to extend to this worthy cause any service we may be able to give in the way of publicity or otherwise, and sincerely hope it will continue to prosper in its efforts to do good.

RESTRICTING COTTON ACREAGE BY LEGISLATION

South Carolina legislature has met and acted.

It has passed a law looking to the curtailment of the cotton acreage.

The law provides that no person shall plant in any one year more than one-third the acreage he plants in all other crops, and for violation of the act the penalty varies from a fine of $25 to $100.

The governor has signed the act, with a memorandum, "Constitution or not, we shall try it."

It is a question whether the state has a right to restrict the growing of any crop, but there is little doubt that a state has the right to entirely eleminate any crop under certain conditions.

The boll weevil is a coming menace to the cotton interests of Alabama.

It thretens the total destruction of the crop in 1915, and perhaps for many years.

Experts and scintists declare that with the entire elimination of the cotton crop one year that the weevil with nothing to propagte it, and to feed upon, will be destroyed, and that little, if any fear of its ravages need be felt in the future.

Under its police powers which are large, but not well defined, it is claimed by able constitutional lawyers the state would have the right to enact such legislation as would destroy the boll weevil, the ravages of which are such as to require strongest measures to rid this section of it such measures as were adopted to rid the country of cattle ticks, and as are now being adopted to rid the country of diseased cattle.

While it is possible that the South Carolina law may not stand the test, it is not so sure that if the legislature had provided for the entire elimination of a cotton acreage instead of its mere curtailment it would not have been with the constitutional limitations.

But it is an effort in the right direction, and so far it is to be commended, and, as the governor of South Carolina said; Constitutional or not, we shall try it. —Montgomery Journal.

FROM MR. WALDRUP.

Editor Union-Banner:

Please allow me space to thank the voters for the hearty support given me in the election on Tuesday, November 3. I hope that no act of mine may ever cause anyone to regret voting for me.

I hold no ill will toward those who did not vote for me. In my official capacity I hope to have the co-operation of all for the common good.

I am proud to say that I do not feel the pang of any mistreatment of my opponent during the campaign.

I stand ready for counsel, and hope that all will lay down any prejudice they may have, and be friends. As for myself, I want to treat everyone right.

Sincerely,
S. E. WALDRUP,
Jemison, Ala., Nov. 10, 1914.

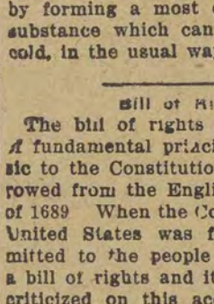
Lambasted.

A new trainer was engaged for the circus and was told to put a lion and a lamb through an act. He seemed nervous, and the next his boss asked him how he got along with the savage lion. "Sure, the lion didn't bother me much," he said, "but that durned lamb butted the daylights out of me!"

Simple Cement.



For mending ornaments and delicate china there is nothing better than rice-flour cement. It is very easily made, it being only necessary to mix rice flour or ground rice thoroughly with cold water, simmering gently over a slow fire until it thickens, thereby forming a most durable adhesive substance which can be used hot or cold, in the usual way.

Bill of Rights.

The bill of rights is a declaration of fundamental principles deemed basic to the Constitution itself and borrowed from the English bill of rights of 1689. When the Constitution of the United States was framed and submitted to the people it did not have a bill of rights and it was so harshly criticized on this account that its friends promised to incorporate or add such a declaration, and the first ten amendments to the Constitution, made after the main instrument was adopted, were in fulfillment of this promise. All the State Constitutions now have bills of rights, practically identical with one another.

Finds Cure for Epilepsy After Years of Suffering

"My daughter was afflicted with epileptic fits for three years, the attacks coming every few weeks. We employed several doctors but they did her no good. About a year ago we heard of Dr. Miles' Nervine, and it certainly has proved a blessing to our little girl. She is now apparently cured and is enjoying the best of health. It is over a year since she has had a fit. We cannot speak too highly of Dr. Miles' Nervine."

MRS. FRANK ANDERSON,
Comfrey, Minn.

Thousands of children in the United States who are suffering from attacks of epilepsy are a burden and sorrow to their parents, who would give anything to restore health to the sufferers.

Dr. Miles' Nervine

is one of the best remedies known for this affliction. It has proven beneficial in thousands of cases and those who have used it have the greatest faith in it. It is not a "cure-all," but a reliable remedy for nervous diseases. You need not hesitate to give it a trial.

Alabama Man Wins Relief By Single Dose Of Mayr's Remedy

Will Glover Take Friend's Advice and Now Can Eat as He Pleases and Sleep in Comfort.

Will Glover of Watson, Ala., suffered for a long time from the most painful of stomach troubles. He coulb not eat—and if he did his irritated stomach would not let him sleep.

He tried just one dose—a sample—of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy.

That one dose did wonders. Read what Mr. Glover has written of his experience:

"I had been suffering for a long while and tried all kinds of medicine, with only temporary relief. A friend advised me to try your Wonderful Stomach Remedy. Before you sent me the free package I could not sleep and was afraid to eat. When I ate I would have heaviness in my chest, and my stomach would swell and I would have a smothering feeling, a headache and pains in my back. But since taking the sample dose of your remedy I can eat anything I want, and sleep good. I feel that I will not need any more of your treatment, as the one bottle worked wonderful results."

We want all people who have chronic stomach trouble or constipation, no matter of how long standing, to try one dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy—one dose will convince you. This is the medicine so many of our people have been taking with surprising results. The most thorough system cleanser we ever sold. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy is now sold here by. Blue Monday.

In Bavaria and some other parts of Europe the Monday before Lent was at one time known as Blue Monday. The churches were decorated with blue and the day was kept as a holiday by classes whose ordinary avocation required them to labor on Sunday. As this led to violent disturbances the custom was legally abolished.

WOMANS CIVIC LEAGUE

THEY STEPPED ON A BENEDICT'S TOES.

As I stood in my open doorway
On a fine October day.
A band of ladies passed along
As bright and happy as a song.

Armed with hoes and rakes and spades;
They seemed bent on midnight raids.
What's all this parade about?
I asked of a passing scout.

Goin' to clean up the cemetery.
Said he in answer to my query.
Ah yes, quite a laudable act,
No one will deny that fact.

At the close of the second day,
I could no longer stay away;
But went to the city of the dead,
With the speed of lightning tread.

When I sought my grandpa's grave,
My it made me madly rave;
They'd despoiled his earthly mound,
And the slab could not be found.

"We will go and view the place,"
Said my aunt with perfect grace,
So well they had done the task,
God's acre seemed to be in mask.

Aunt showed me the sacred mound,
On the smooth and clean swept ground;
I accept with grace the "corn,"
And cast away the look forlorn.

They seemed to step upon my toes,
But they are friends, not foes;
Like mother Eve, they will deceive,
But in finale they always please.

Through the efforts of the organization and its members, both collectively and individually, a number of civic improvements highly worthy of note, have already been accomplished.

It requires no great amount of inspection to discern that something has happened at the cemetery. Somebody has waked up, but not from the dead; just the ladies of Clanton waked up to their civic duties. And the way they have performed them is magnificent.

At the city school building they have materialized a thorough cleaning of the class and study rooms, and made the place a more pleasant one for the pupils and teachers. They are making an effort to employ a janitor to give his whole time to keeping the building cleaned and swept and properly heated.

After a while some farmer will be surprised to come to town and find a splendid hitching ground with substantial posts and all necessary accoutrements on the Gowan lots just south of the jail and back of Mr. B. E. Jones's store. But you had as well look for it. The league is working to that end.

Plans are being made for the improvement of the lot belonging to the county, and lying just across the street in front of the court house, with the purpose in view of making it a delightful place of recreation.

And it may be said that in the minds of these energetic ladies is still that worthy idea of establishing a rest room for the accommodation of ladies who come in from the country to do their shopping.

These are only a part of their doings, and the things they intend to do later on. Another week we will continue the narration of their endeavors and accomplishments.

SUPREME COURT REVERSES ITSELF

Holds That Cities Can Not Participate in the Road and Bridge Fund.

STATE CAPITAL HAPPENINGS

Doings in and Around the State House Chronicled for Our Readers.

—Montgomery.

Reversing a former decision of the court, the Supreme Court at the third special term of the summer recess held that cities could not benefit from the county road and bridge fund where the fund had been created by transfer to the general fund. The decision came in an application for rehearing filed by the county of Montgomery against the city of Montgomery, in which the city obtained judgment for about $30,000.

It probably is the most important case which was decided out of the 225 which cleared the Supreme Court docket. The court opinion held that only where local laws made such provision could cities obtain part of the fund for construction of highways. All cities in Alabama are effected by the decision.

Betty Loses Appeal.

L. Stafford Betty lost his appeal from the decision of the City Court of Montgomery holding the payment of expenses of members of the governor's staff during the trip to the inauguration of President Wilson was illegal, and the Supreme Court granted a writ of recovery. This means that all money paid to members of the staff for this trip will be returned to the state treasury. However, it is suggested that an application for a rehearing will be filed.

Comer Wins Libel Suit.

Supreme Court confirmed judgment of the Birmingham City Court which awarded B. B. Comer, former governor, $5,133.33 from B. M. Starks, as Superintendent of the Birmingham division of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, for alleged libelous statements published in Birmingham newspapers when Mr. Comer was a candidate for the Democratic nomination for President of the Alabama Railroad Commission in 1904.

Supreme Court Cleans Docket.

The 225 decisions rendered by the State Supreme Court November 7 leaves the docket of this court free of open cases.

The session was the third extra session held by the court since adjournment of the last regular term which ended June 30, and when the court convened in regular session is was ready for such new business as was brought before it.

These nearly constant labors of the judges, since the last regular term have cleared the docket for the first time in 20 years.

Gets Tax Refund.

Judge Gaston Gunter issued a writ of mandamus against the state auditor, which will cause the refund of $18,160.59 franchise tax to the Tennessee Coal and Iron company for franchise taxes paid during the three years ending in 1907.

The writ was issued under a recent decision of the United States Supreme Court, which declared the act of the 1907 legislature imposing a franchise tax on corporations to be unconstitutional.

The suit has been pending for some time, but following the Federal Court decision, the Tennessee company asked for a mandamus to cause the immediate refund of the amount alleged to have been illegally collected.

Military Rifle Practice.

A rifle practice is being conducted on the rifle range in Montgomery and will continue for about nine weeks and four companies will spend four days here each week practicing. This will keep from 100 to 120 soldiers in Montgomery each week.

Soil Survey Work.

United States Senator Frank S. White has been advised by the department of agriculture that six experts from the soil survey department had been detailed to work in Alabama during the coming winter. At present soil surveys are being made by the government in Barbour, Walker and Winston counties. According to advices received by Senator White the government has decided to make a soil survey of Clay County. The survey of Clay county will be commenced immediately by the government.

Convict Recaptured.

Robert McElroy, a convict who escaped from the turpentine camp at Roy several weeks ago, was recaptured in Birmingham. He will be returned to the camp according to orders of the convict department. McElroy was sentenced to ten years for robbery committed in Birmingham in 1913. The Birmingham police department is entitled to $50 reward for his recapture and a check for this amount will be forwarded to the chief of police of that city.

Authorize School Tax.

Readoption of a special 1 mill school tax was authorized by the voters of Madison, Marshall and Morgan counties, according to announcement made by Superintendent of Education William S. Feagin. The special school tax was adopted in each of the counties by overwhelming votes.

Elmore county voted to continue its 1 mill school tax for another ten years.

The vote was ten to one in favor of the tax in Marshall county and nearly as big majorities were given in Madison and Morgan counties. Superintendent Feagin spent several days in Madison and Marshall counties speaking in support of the tax and was much gratified to learn that the vote was so large in favor of the issue.

The tax will be in effect for 10 years and is merely the reindorsement of the plan adopted 10 years ago.

Set Apart Day for Morgan.

Appropriate celebration of the anniversary of the birth of John T. Morgan will be observed at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco on June 20, next, according to an announcement made by members of the Alabama Exposition Commission. The governor will soon issue a proclamation designating June 29, the birthday of the great statesman, as "Alabama and Morgan Day" at the exposition, and calling upon all Alabamians who may be in San Francisco at the time to unite in paying tribute to Morgan. Specific plans for the celebration will be made by the state immigration department and by the executive officers. The day will be set apart solely for the purpose of honoring Morgan.

Crenshaw Books in Good Shape.

H. Y. Brooke, state examiner of public accounts, has reported to Governor O'Neal that the books and accounts of E. B. Sikes, Tax Collector of Crenshaw county; J. F. Walker, Tax Assessor, and W. J. Wellington, Sheriff, were found correct in an examination recently.

Mr. Sikes is due the state $5.91 as uncollected interest on state claims, but as he paid the state $972 too much in taxes several months ago and the interest for the time it was in the state treasury is greater than the amount of uncollected interest, Mr. Brooke recommended that he be allowed to hold the amount.

File Amendment to Charter.

The Alabama Methodist Orphanage at Selma has filed with the secretary of state an amendment to its state charter permitting the election of two trustees each year by the Alabama and North Alabama conferences for a term of five years. The board of trustees is composed of five persons. In the past they have been elected each year. It is proposed to elect only two each year in the future. By this plan a majority of the old board will be continued in office.

Brooke to Washington.

H. Y. Brooke who was recently appointed federal bank examiner for the Atlanta reserve district, left for Washington, where he will take his oath of office. Mr. Brooke will begin his new duties about the middle of this month. The governor has announced that he will not fill the vacancy on the state public examining board caused by the resignation of Mr. Brooke, since the new appointee would have only two months to serve.

To Fight Tuberculosis.

Governor O'Neal issued a proclamation calling upon the citizens of the state to spend considerable time, November 29, toward the campaign against tuberculosis. The week following this day he has named Health Week, and wants Alabamians to devote considerable time toward propagating interest in health measures.

To Have Cheap Electricity.

A charter of incorporation was awarded to the Andalusia Light and Power company of Andalusia. The capital stock of the company is $15,000 and the incorporators are J. D. Henderson and others. It is proposed to supply the growing city of Andalusia with electricity at the lowest possible cost.

Roads Satisfactory.

State Highway Engineer W. S. Keller returned from an inspection tour of the recently constructed state-aid highways of Jackson and Limestone counties. He reports the work satisfactory in every respect.

Pope's Sentence Again Commuted.

For the fifth time the governor of Alabama has granted a respite to Ervin Pope, negro, under sentence to be hanged for the murder of James McClurken, a farmer of Calhoun county. The governor commuted Pope's sentence until Friday, November 20th. Respite was granted Pope this time in order that the governor might have an opportunity to confer with the trial judge before taking any definite or positive action on the case. Pope was to have been hanged Friday, Nov. 6.

National Guard Names Officers.

Election of several new officers in the Alabama National Guard was announced by the state military department. The vacancies filled by election were in Company B, Second Infantry, Birmingham, and Company K, First Infantry, Castleberry. The Birmingham officers chosen were: William T. Wingo, first lieutenant, and Richard B. Kelly, Jr., second lieutenant. The Castleberry officer was Capt. Robert A. Baird, who was promoted from first lieutenant.

FRENCH TROOPS GUARDING ROAD NEAR ROYE

ON THE HERO ROLL

Brave Frenchmen Are "Cited in the Order of the Day."

Laconic Paragraphs That Tell of Some Thrilling Deeds of Gallantry by Soldiers of the Republic.

Chicago.—One of the greatest honors which can be accorded to a French soldier is to be "cited in the order of the day," says Paul Scott Mowrer, correspondent of the Chicago News, in a cablegram from Paris. I give the following typical excerpts from a newly published list. Each paragraph covers a thrilling feat of bravery, which, properly told, would quicken the reader's heart. Yet here they are as laconic as telegrams:

"Fragnaud, a re-enlisted soldier of the Sixth infantry, all the officers of the company being killed, took command himself and fell mortally wounded while leading his men into the firing at the edge of a wood.

"Lapouble, second lieutenant in the Fifty-seventh infantry, already twice wounded, continued to lead the combat at the head of his section with an ardor above praise until the moment when he was struck dead.

"Felici, captain, and Han, lieutenant in the Twelfth infantry, during eight days, with tireless tenacity, resisted heroically a heavy artillery bombardment and infantry attacks 50 yards distant. When they quitted the farm which they had occupied they left behind crumbling walls.

"St Ongey, a sergeant in the Forty-ninth infantry, led forward a hesitating section and was the first to fling himself into the enemy's trenches, despite the most violent fire.

"Locaze, second lieutenant in the 34th infantry, an officer of the greatest courage, having received the first wound, which broke his wrist, kept command of his section under the most violent fire. He received a second wound only a few yards from the German trenches.

"Dantin, captain in the 242d infantry, distinguished himself by keeping his company in trenches riddled by bullets and shells. He was killed there with half his men.

"Joly, lieutenant in the 3d tirailleurs, was grievously wounded while charging at the head of his company to cover the retreat of a battalion of Zouaves, to whose rescue he had been sent."

Many feats of heroism are overlooked in the orders of the day. Here is one example: The colonel of a certain regiment, learning that the Germans were about to resume the offensive, wished to warn the various companies of his regiment scattered in a series of trenches along the front. He called for volunteers to carry word and the first man to step forward was Corporal Rene Granger, barely eighteen years of age, who enlisted at the beginning of the war. He reached the first trench safely and had to cross an exposed stretch of 300 yards to a second trench near a clump of trees. Just before he reached it a bullet struck him in the thigh. Granger quietly stepped behind a tree, bandaged himself and dragged himself to the trench. The officer in command there begged him to remain quietly, but Granger insisted that he must visit the two remaining trenches.

He reached the nearest trench suffering but determined. The last trench was 600 yards away and the most exposed of all. He could now hardly walk from the pain and bullets whistled about him, one piercing his cap. Then a shell burst near by inflicting a horrible wound in his abdomen. The men in the trench, seeing him fall, ran to the rescue and succeeded in dragging him to shelter, where he whispered his message in the captain's ear with his dying breath.

BODIES FILL CANAL

Correspondent Describes Midnight Battle on the Yser.

Savage and Desperate Fighting, Men Struggling Hand to Hand in the Water—Dixmude a Cemetery

London.—The correspondent of the Daily Mail in Northern France, telegraphing regarding the fighting on the River Yser, says:

"There are 2,500 German bodies in the Yser canal this morning after the fighting in the night. Many of them were drowned and others were bayoneted. The water itself was bloody, while Dixmude's streets were strewn thick with the dead.

"These ghoulish facts alone give some idea of the savageness of the fighting, the desperation of the German attacks and the stubbornness of the allies' resistance.

"The night was a hell from dark to dawn. At almost every point of the line man was opposed by man, sometimes at a few hundred yards' distance, but more often in close grips. Face to face, men even wrestled and died by drowning each other in the canal's waters. The Germans had had orders to get through that night, cost what it might.

"An officer of theirs, who was captured, said that the delay of more than a week in crossing this waterway has incensed the military mind in Germany.

"Probably 5,000 of them gave their lives last night. They could not give more, yet they failed, but not because the Germans did not literally obey their orders. They crossed the waterway, but once through they could not make good. They were mowed down with rifle shot, torn into human fragments by shells and bayoneted back yard by yard over their own dead into the waters of the canal.

"Into the very gray of the morning this bloody work went on so fiercely that there was hardly a trench or bridge guard in the whole line that did not imagine that he had been singled out for special attack.

"Those who crossed the river to the north and northeast of Dixmude, probably 2,000 were met by a fine rally of the Belgian infantry and of the cavalry, who had tethered their horses, and were driven by main force at the bayonet's point to the canal and into it.

"About three thousand German infantrymen got into Dixmude. They held it for a time, but with shell fire and rifle the place was riddled through and through. The Germans dashed out of the crumbling houses only to be wiped out by shrapnel.

"When Sunday morning broke the dead and wounded were everywhere. Dixmude was a cemetery, but in the woods not far away the Germans lingered. They held a position under a desperate fire and eventually were reenforced. The allies could not oust them and the Germans are still across the Yser."

The Daily Mail's correspondent near the Yser river, under date of Sunday, dilating on the ferocity of the German attempts to get across the river, says:

"In one night, Friday, between midnight and dawn, seven different onslaughts were repulsed. Swarms of Germans rushed up with newly-made bridges of wood. They were dropped across the canal, and, notwithstanding the deadly fire from rifles and mitrailleuses, the Germans burst across. There was no stopping them.

"This sort of thing has happened day after day, but in the daylight that followed each night these marauders were hunted and mowed down. Great batches were killed, crowds were taken prisoners, but that mattered nothing, the next night was sure to bring along more attacks of the same kind."

CALOMEL IS MERCURY, IT SICKENS! STOP USING SALIVATING DRUG

Don't Lose a Day's Work! If Your Liver Is Sluggish or Bowels Constipated Take "Dodson's Liver Tone."—It's Fine!

You're bilious! Your liver is sluggish! You feel lazy, dizzy and all knocked out. Your head is dull, your tongue is coated; breath bad; stomach sour and bowels constipated. But don't take salivating calomel. It makes you sick, you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel crashes into sour bile like dynamite, breaking it up. That's when you feel that awful nausea and cramping.

If you want to enjoy the nicest, gentlest liver and bowel cleansing you ever experienced just take a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone. Your druggist or dealer sells you a 50-cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone under my personal money-back guarantee that each spoonful will clean your sluggish liver better than a dose of nasty calomel and that it won't make you sick.

Dodson's Liver Tone is real liver medicine. You'll know it next morning because you will wake up feeling fine, your liver will be working, your headache and dizziness gone, your stomach will be sweet and your bowels regular. You will feel like working; you'll be cheerful; full of vigor and ambition.

Dodson's Liver Tone is entirely vegetable, therefore harmless and cannot salivate. Give it to your children! Millions of people are using Dodson's Liver Tone instead of dangerous calomel now. Your druggist will tell you that the sale of calomel is almost stopped entirely here.

LIMITED CHOICE OF VIANDS

Guest Who Didn't Care for Salmon Was in Fair Way to Have Hot Breakfast.

In some parts of the Canadian back country the recurrence of boiled salmon, broiled salmon, salmon cutlets, and salmon steak at every meal becomes, after a few weeks, a trifle monotonous. To the native palate, brought up on it, this constant reappearance of the selfsame dish is a matter of course; but to the newly arrived tourist it grows at least into a feeble joke.

"Is there nothing else for breakfast?" said one such victim of colonial hospitality, as a whole fish and a pot of mustard were laid before him on the table."

"Nothing else!" replied the host, in surprise. "Why, there's salmon enough there for six, ain't there?"

"Yes," responded the guest, mildly; "but I don't care for salmon."

"Well, then, fire into the mustard," was the rejoinder.

A REBELLION
Food Demanded.

The human body will stand a lot of abuse, but sometime it will surely rebel and demand proper food in place of the pasty, starchy, greasy stuffs on which it has been made sick.

Then is the time to try Grape-Nuts, the most scientific and perfect food in the world.

A lady of Washington says: "Three years ago I was very ill with catarrh of the stomach and was given up to die by one doctor. I laid in bed four months and my stomach was so weak that I could not keep down medicine or hardly any kind of food and was so weak and emaciated after four months of this starvation that my daughter could easily lift me from bed and put me in my chair.

"But weak as my stomach was, it accepted, relished and digested Grape-Nuts without any difficulty the first time that wonderful food was tried.

"I am now strong and in better health than for a great many years and am gradually growing still stronger. I rely on Grape-Nuts for much of the nourishment that I get. The results have certainly been wonderful in my case and prove that no stomach is so weak it will not digest Grape-Nuts.

"My baby got fat from feeding on Grape-Nuts. I was afraid I would have to stop giving the food to him, but I guess it is a healthy fat, for his health is just perfect." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

It is the celebrated dividing engine, which makes it possible, to the delight of mathematicians, to divide a circle accurately, even to within one second of arc—surpassing the records of all previous dividing engines. This degree of accuracy was accomplished after years of experiments in a room heated to 80 degrees, or as near as practicable to the heat of the body of the operator, for even a breath might interfere with the tiny scratches on the silver bands of the revolving disk.—An Afternoon with Ambrose Swasey, by Joe Mitchell Chapple, in National Magazine.

This may be a base libel on an honored profession, but it is told by the man who perpetrated the faux pas. He was a reporter for a Baltimore paper—or had been one for about an hour, this being his first experience in newspaper work—when the city editor sent him out to see Cardinal Gibbons. The "cub" rushed down to the modest white house where the venerable prelate lives, says the Philadelphia Evening Ledger, and rang the bell. A man servant opened the door.

"Is the cardinal at home?" asked the reporter.

"No, sir."

"Oh, Mrs. Gibbons will do," ejaculated the "cub."

All prospects for an extra session of the legislature to relieve the cotton situation in the state were dissipated by the Governor of Alabama in a statement in which he outlined the views of the 108 members-elect of the next legislature relative to the enactment of laws dealing with the situation. Only 27 members of the next legislature advocated the calling of a special session to consider the cotton problem; only 31 members expressed approval of the Bankhead plan for the issuance of bonds; only 31 members favored a reduction of cotton acreage, and only four members of the next legislature favored the prohibition of cotton planting. Moreover, only six members stated to the governor that they had any plans of relief. The governor's statement was issued for the purpose of giving publicity to the views of the members-elect of the next legislature.

After passing a resolution indorsing woman suffrage and electing officers for the coming year, the thirtieth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union adjourned. Mrs. Annie K. Capps of Opelika, who declined to accept another term. Mrs. E. A. Parker of Montgomery was again elected treasurer, all the other officers were re-elected. The next place of meeting was left to the executive committee.

From $5000 to $1,000,000 is a great step, but such is the record of the State of Alabama in providing for the relief of needy Confederate soldiers and their widows in the past 38 years. The condition of the pension fund at the close of business on September 30, 1914, showed that there had been available during the year, for all purposes, $1,025,774.77, which was distributed among something like 16,500 pensioners of the state and used in the payment of all expenses of the departments. The balance in the treasury was more than twice as much as the annual amount which the state paid out to pensioners in 1876, when the legislature of Alabama appropriated $5000 for that purpose. Alabama now spends annually approximately one-sixth of her revenues in providing for the relief of needy Confederate veterans and their widows. Thirty-eight years ago the state spent for that purpose a little over one-one-hundred and forty-third of her revenues.

DEFENDS POPULAR REMEDIES

Speaker Says Newspapers Should Investigate Merits of Medicines Before Barring Advertisements.

That an organized attempt has been made to blacken the reputation of the popular family remedies of this country, and to mislead the newspaper publishers into rejecting the advertising of such medicines, was the charge made by Carl J. Balliett, of Buffalo, N. Y., at the convention of the Advertising Affiliation at Detroit.

Mr. Balliett is a director of the Proprietary Association of America, which includes in its membership two hundred firms which make the popular prepared medicines of America.

Mr. Balliett pointed out that it is the duty of the newspaper publisher to refuse the advertising of any fake or fraudulent medicine, just as it is his duty to refuse any fake or fraudulent advertising, but it is not right to shut down on all medical advertising because there have been some fakers, any more than it would be right to refuse to publish all department store advertising because certain stores have made a practice of lying about bargain sales.

Disease and death are mysteries. People who are perfectly well are skeptical. They laugh at the time-worn patent medicine joke, just as they laugh again and again over the many variations of the operation joke—"The operation was a success but the patient died." This so-called humor has perhaps hurt the medicine business with well people, but when the hitherto healthy man feels a severe pain or illness, he immediately wants medicine, and will bless the cure whether it be at the hands of a regular doctor, a homeopath, an osteopath, a Christian Scientist or patent medicine. There is nothing more deadly than disease; nothing more honorable than to cure it.

Mr. Balliett refuted the idea sought to be spread about that patent medicines are unpopular by showing that from 1900 to 1912 the amount of prepared medicines consumed in America increased from $100,000,000 to $160,000,000 annually. He showed that, although the American Medical Association is trying as an organization to exterminate so-called patent medicines, the family doctor, individually, is not fighting them but prescribing them. He estimated that 40% of the prescriptions written by doctors today include proprietary medicines.

The writings of Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, he said, have also aimed to destroy confidence in proprietary medicines; but that Dr. Wiley's ideas are not infallible is shown by cases where his analyses were entirely wrong. Mr. Balliett mentioned a case where, with all the power of the Government, he fought a preparation as being dangerous to health, and was ingloriously walloped.

There has been spread the idea that a clever faker can mix a few useless ingredients and, by smart advertising, sell tons of it and win sudden wealth; whereas, as a matter of fact, the medicine business is notoriously difficult, and, where there has been one success at it, there have been a hundred failures. Any medicine which has no merit cannot live, because persons who are duped into buying it once will not buy it again, and the profit from advertising a medicine can only come from repeat sales to the same, satisfied people. Therefore, any medicine which has been on the market for a number of years, and is still advertised, must have merit behind it to account for its success.

In conclusion Mr. Balliett declared that no newspaper is doing justice to its readers in the matter of medical or other advertising, unless it investigates, not only the wording of the advertisement offered for publication, but the merits of the article advertised. He pointed out that the few newspapers who have been deluded into the policy of barring out medical advertising have adopted this general policy, rather than to form an investigation bureau of this kind which could, in a constructive and useful effort, investigate and decide what is a good product and what is a fraud, in not only the medicine business, but in every other business which advertises its wares to the public.

The audience seemed to agree with Mr. Balliett's ideas on the subject and the chairman decided the question at issue in his favor.

Comparative Values.

"I suppose you had the usual trouble in Europe this summer," said Mrs. De Jinks.

"Yes," said Mrs. von Slammerton; "chiefly in the matter of getting money, however. Why, would you believe it, Mrs. De Jinks, a letter of credit over there wasn't of any more value than a treaty of neutrality!"—Judge.

Put That Pain to Use

The network of nerves in your body, like the network of wires in a burglar alarm system, gives quick warning when anything is going wrong inside. Looking at it in this way a pain is a useful alarm. Now, kidney weakness is a dangerous thing—a condition not to be neglected—and it is wise to know and pay attention to the early alarm signals of sick kidneys.

Backache is a common warning of congestion or inflammation in the kidneys. It may be dull, nagging pain, or a sharp twinge when stooping or lifting. There are likely to be disorders of urination, dizziness, headaches, and drowsy, despondent, tired feelings.

It is very hard to strengthen weak kidneys at first, but neglect invites rheumatic or neuralgic attacks, gravel, dropsy, and fatal Bright's disease.

As a special medicine for weak kidneys Doan's Kidney Pills have been used for years all over the civilized world, and surely are considered reliable. The patient can always help the medicine immensely, however, by dieting lightly, using little or no liquor, tea or coffee, keeping regular hours and drinking lots of pure water.

"I can hardly straighten up."

As to Doan's Kidney Pills, read the following enthusiastic endorsement by one who has tested them.

ALL RUN DOWN

Disordered Kidneys Caused Terrible Suffering

G. Magee, Dale St., Columbia, Miss., says: "I was in such bad shape with kidney trouble that the doctor told me I wouldn't live long if I didn't go to some hot springs and take the cure. His prescriptions didn't help me and I kept getting worse. I lost weight steadily and began to suffer from constant pains in my back. At night I could hardly sleep and I often noticed blood in the kidney secretions. I was all run down and I spent a lot of money for medicine that didn't do me one bit of good. My limbs got badly swollen and I went down from 180 to 125 pounds. I could hardly walk and I never expected to get well. I dieted, but this made me weaker than ever. I had seen Doan's Kidney Pills advertised and one day I got a box. They acted on my kidneys right away and the kidney secretions passed profusely. I kept on with Doan's Kidney Pills and when I had finished three boxes the swelling left my limbs. I commenced to recover my lost weight and I now weigh 133 pounds. I have practically no trouble from my kidneys now and can say that I am cured. I am only sorry that I didn't hear of Doan's Kidney Pills sooner, as they would have spared me the awful suffering."

OBJECTION PLACED ON AGE

But Young Lady's Idea Was Altogether Different From What Corporal Had Feared.

"What pensions, what millions and billions in pensions, this horrible war is going to entail," said Major Fitzgerald of Boston. He added:

"And some of these pensions will go on longer than they should, because some of the pensioners in their old age will marry young girls—for an old pensioner makes a good parti, since his pension, you know, falls on his death to his widow.

"I heard the other day about an old Civil war pensioner who proposed to the hired girl next door, a very pretty girl of twenty or so. But she refused him.

"'Perhaps,' he stammered then, stroking in his embarrassment his long and snow-white beard, 'perhaps I am too old.'

"'No,' said the pretty hired girl calmly; 'no, corporal, you're too young.'"

EASY WAY TO CLEAR BAD COMPLEXIONS

Weak Heart

Many people suffer from weak hearts. They may experience shortness of breath on exertion, pain over the heart, or dizzy feelings, oppressed breathing after meals or their eyes become blurred, the heart is not sufficiently strong to pump blood to the extremities, and they have cold hands and feet, or poor appetite because of weakened blood supply to the stomach. A heart tonic and alterative should be taken which has no bad after-effect. Such is which contains no dangerous narcotics or alcohol.

It helps the human system in the constant manufacture of rich, red blood. It helps the stomach to assimilate or take up the proper elements from the food, thereby helping digestion and curing dyspepsia, heart-burn and many uncomfortable symptoms, stops excessive tissue waste in convalescence from fevers; for the run-down, anæmic, thin-blooded people, the "Discovery" is refreshing and vitalizing.

The Attraction.

A rather eccentric man, calling on a family blessed by an observant little son, wore kid gloves that had been cleaned. The little boy, seeming to be much attracted by the visitor, stayed close at his side. "You like to stand by Mr. Blank and hear his funny stories, don't you, Jimmie?" presently asked Jimmie's father. "I don't care about his stories," replied the honest youngster, "but his hands smell just like our automobile."

Modesty.

Brought Out by Trial.

There can be no true virtue in those who have never been tried—or at least we cannot be sure of its existence; it may be there, or only its semblance may be there. In real life we have to do with realities; let us make sure that our defenses are real.—Arthur L. Salmon.

Unfreezable.

"Can any one name a liquid that doesn't freeze?" asked the teacher. There was a moment's silence, says the Berliner Illustrirte Zeitung. Then a voice in the rear of the room answered, eagerly, "Please, teacher, hot water!"

Greatest of All Human Blessings

The most wonderful thing in the world is love expressed in the helpless infant. And among those aids and comforts for expectant mothers is the well known "Mother's Friend."

This is an external application to enable the abdominal muscles to become more pliant, to expand naturally without undue pain from the strain upon cords and ligaments.

In almost every settled community are women who have enjoyed the blessing of this famous remedial and helpful embrocation. Their daughters have grown up to learn of its splendid assistance.

Applied as directed upon those muscles involved it soothes the fine network of nerves with which all the muscles are supplied. Thus a great share of the pains so much dreaded may be avoided and the period of expectancy passed through in ease and comfort.

Anything that adds so much comfort must be counted as a blessing indeed.

In a little book sent by mail much useful information is given to inexperienced mothers. It tells how to use "Mother's Friend" and how to avoid caking breasts. Get a bottle to-day and write for book to Bradfield Regulator Co., 409 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Be sure you get "Mother's Friend."

If You are Subject to Colds This Editorial will Interest You.

A Great Majority of People Get One or More Colds Every Season and It is of Vital Interest to All to Learn How to Avoid and Relieve Colds Quickly, Since Colds are Said to be Contagious.

Some people think colds are only caught through exposure. This in return is contradicted by the fact that Arctic explorers are peculiarly free from colds. It is more generally accepted that colds are the result of civilized life, due to super-heated rooms and a very rapid change in temperature which causes the nerve centers to be depressed, and still more largely due to contagion—one member of a family imparting a cold to another by sneezing or coughing.

A cold means nothing if relieved quickly. That such a purpose may be accomplished, a quick aid to a cold is an essential. A remedy especially devised to relieve colds quickly is PERUNA.

PERUNA contains such ingredients that have an especially beneficial influence upon the inflamed mucous membranes and the quicker these mucous membranes are given the benefit of a remedy like PERUNA, the quicker the relief and the less contagion.

A neglected cold may become a serious menace to one's own life, and far worse, may endanger one's family.

We insure our homes against fire, our lives against death. Why should we not insure ourselves against colds if possible by having a medicine in the family chest that can be used at once?

PERUNA is a reliable household remedy for colds and should be in every home, for there should be a desire to combat a cold as quickly as possible. This is enlightened hygiene.

People who are feeble and run down are more subject to colds than persons in normal health. Such persons need outdoor life and PERUNA to help build up a strong constitution. If you have a poor appetite that is often a warning that you probably need a tonic like Peruna for Peruna aids the digestive organs. When your appetite is fair and work and exercise do not quickly tire you, your susceptibility to colds diminishes very much.

Persons who object to liquid medicines can now obtain PERUNA TABLETS.

Our Reputation

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company is not only the name of a railroad; it is the sign of standard service in Southern Transportation.

Through long and intimate association with the general public in the Passenger Department we have, to our regret, made some enemies. However, those who condemn us will do us the justice to affirm that our passenger service can not be excelled by any other railroad in the South.

Through long and intimate dealings with shippers of freight we have, much to our regret, made some enemies. But those who disprove our methods and policies will do us the justice to affirm that the freight facilities of the L. & N. Railroad Co. can not be surpassed by any railroad in the South.

This has reference only to those who disagree with us. This disagreement arises sometimes from our unintentional negligence, sometimes from our error in judgment and sometimes from the disposition of the individual himself to find fault.

Through our long and intimate association with the general public we have made thousands of friends due to the high character of the service we render in both the Freight and Passenger Departments. We appreciate the praise accorded us by our friends and endeavor to profit by the criticism of those who disagree with us.

Whatever may be our course in this regard we at all times exert our every effort to not only maintain the present high standard of our service but to so improve and enlarge on it that we will keep abreast of the times and contribute to the more rapid development of the business interests of the South.

Our hope is for mutual prosperity and close co-operation of all the people.

BELIEVES COTTON WILL ADVANCE

James A. Greer, editor and business manager of the Textile Manufacturer, of Charlotte, N.C., has complied figures relative to the cotton mill industry which show a very healthy condition. "The slight falling off in opearations during June, July and August have recovered," he said. "For instance, September showed a gain of 240,000 spindles over August and more than 480,000 spindles over the previous September. While I have not figured October, it is evident that it will show a material increase over September.

"Cotton is now selling at from 18 to 20 cents per pound in Germany, what little is being sold. On account of the high rate of insurance it is almost impossible to ship cotton to Germany, although there is a strong demand for it. England mills are not operating on full time and are not consuming very much cotton. Belgium, that under normal conditions, operates 1,000,000 spindles, was practically devastated by the war.

"Conditions abroad means that the United States will handle the greater part of the cotton crop and that cotton has reached its lowest level. From now on the price will advance."

Frank Takes A New Life Lease

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 16.—The case of Leo M. Frank, whose last appeal has been refused by the Supreme court of Georgia, will remain in the courts for eighteen months more, or longer, if his attorneys succeed in getting it before the Supreme court of the United States. It they fail in this effort it is expected that the last chapter of the Mary Phagan murder case willl be written in February or March.

Mr. R.J. Williams Gives his Thanks

Editor Union-Banner:—As the Commissioner-elect from the second district of Chilton county, I wish to thank the voters through your paper for their support and influence in the campaign and on election day.

I shall strive to merit the confidence of those who supported me, and will endeavor to fill the office to the interest of all the citizens.

I trust to have the co-operation of all—those who voted against me, as well as those who voted for me. We all have common interests, and should work together for the good of all.

Sincerely,

R. J. Williams.

From Beat 11

Editor Union-Banner:—As the election is all over, and the outcome was so pleasing to us, I desire to congratulate those who voted the Progressive ticket. We won a splendid victory, and we should be proud of it.

But we want to begin to look toward the election two years from now. Let us not be idle one moment; for it will not be long till the time will be at hand. We want to be prepared, so that we can carry off everything then as we did this time.

Yours for the cause.

John S. Dennis.

Big Show Coming to Clanton

Saturday, November 21st.

One of America's oldest, richest tented shows, a modernized great combination of the very greatest trained wild animals, the most superb horses and ponies, the greatest European and American artists, the latest "thrillers" that mankind can devise and in fact the newest novelties of the present day, all in one union, will be found with the Sun Brothers' World's Progressive Shows, now on their twenty-second annual tour, and will give two full complete exhibitions at Clanton.

This stupendous aggregation is under the direction of the Sun Brothers personally, and the assurance is made that the programme for the present season is newer and richer than ever.

To add to the variety, a complete Japanese Circus Company will exhibit the very cleverest oriental acts ever imported to this country and now seen in America for the first time.

Over one hundred great artists appear with this great show. Dean and his matchless band appear at every performance and they are a delight to all that hear their great concerts. The menagerie and wild beast exhibition is complete and an educative diversity.

This great exhibition will appear in its completeness, rain or shine, at Clanton Saturday, Nov. 21.

County Health Officer's Report

To the honorable probate judge and commissioners of Chilton county, Ala.

Gentlemen: I beg to submit my report for the month of October. As required by law, I inspected the county jail and poorhouse, and found both to be in good condition.

All doctors have reported except the following: M. A. Mason, Stanton; J. J. Dubose, Stanton; and A.M. Wooley, Jemison. All coffin dealers have reported except J. M. Langston Jemison. All midwives have reported.

The vital statistics are as follows:—Births: white, 72; colored, 3; total, 75. Deaths: white, 17; colored 7; total, 24.

The following cases of infectious diseases were reported, and have been carefully looked after: typhoid fever, 7; scarlet fever, 6; diphtheria, 1.

Respectfully,
V.J. Gragg, M.D.
County Health Officer.

Mt. Pisgah

Health of this community is very good at present.

The farmers are nearly all done gathering their crops.

There will be preaching at this place next Sunday at eleven o'clock.

Prof. J.W. Lowery will sing here in the afternoon. Everybody is invited to come and take part. Books to be used are Perennial Praise.

MT. PLEASANT

Hard—harder—hardest—times

Jim Hawkins of Birmingham spent Sunday with J.A. Louis and wife.

L. O. Vickers made forty bushels of sweet potatoes on one-sixth of an acre.

Misses Fannie Childress and Arsula Collins of Cedar Grove attended the singing here Sunday.

Mr. Ross Cooper of Texrs is visiting relatives here.

The little boy of Jack Jones who fell out of a tree three weeks ago and broke his leg is improving and will be able to be up before long.

Miss Jane Sims fell and broke her arm, but is improving.

Let's have more country correspondence next week than the Union-Banner has ever had before.

50 PER CENT LESS COTTON PLANTED IN 1915

Joseph O. Thompson, one of the largest land owners and most intensive farm operators in Alabama, goes so far with cutting down the acreage planted in cotton in the state as to believe Alabama would be better off if none were planted. He is not among those who advocate legislation along this line, but rather believes that the farmers of the state are moving toward larger crops of other products and smaller ones of cotton of their own accord. He said: "The farmer has never before been so deeply impressed with the folly of growing one crop where he is dependent entirely on foreign nations for a market. Throughout the entire state I find that they are realizing and becoming awakened to the fact that diversified crops is the things, and in the northern part of the state are sowing large quantities of wheat and corn and in the central and southern part they are sowing oats and alfalfa.

"I believe without any kind of legislation the farmers will reduce their cotton acreage at least 50 per cent next year. Enhancement of land would at once take place. Our state offers superior opoortunities in view of the fact that we can raise, besides cotton, three crops per year on the same land.

Cotton Report

The tabulation of the separate returns from the ginners for Nov. 1st, shows that there were 13,972 bales of cotton ginned in Chilton county prior to Nov. 1, 1914, as compared with 11,845 bales ginned prior to Nov. 1, 1913

The above figures are from the telegraph summary furnished the United States Bureau of the census, by R.J. Jones, special agent of the department for Chilton county.

RESOLUTIONS FOR CAPT. SIMPSON

There was a regular meeting of the old veterans of Camp 1711, United Confederate Veterans, in the auditorium hall today. The attendance was good and the following new members were admitted: Veterans B. J. Hendricks, S. O. Donegan and James T. McMullin.

After the routine business was transacted Veteran J. P. Hobdy submitted the following, which was seconded by Comrade B. J. Hughes, and unanimously passed:

"Whereas, as this is the 11th day of November, 1914, and the 76th birthday of the worthy commander of the Alabama Old Confederate Soldiers' Home, be it.

"Resolved, That we, the members of Camp 1711, join in wishing Captain Simpson many more days and years of health, happiness and prosperity.

"Resolved, further, That his uniform kindness and many lenient acts during his eight years as commandant of the home has won for him the love and appreciation of the men watched over during his administration here."

Captin Simpson was absent, on business, and therefore, no response was made by him.

Veterans John H. Toner and Samuel J. Andress submitted a report as to the late Mobile reunion and the pleasant reception extended by the people who reside in Mobile.

THE UNION-BANNER

Published Every Thursday at Clanton, Chilton County, Alabama.
UNION PUBLISHING CO.
W. M. WYATT, Editor.

Subscription price, in advance, per year, $1.00.

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second-class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

The new Sheriffs which were elected recently in the several counties of the state take charge of the offices in January.

We wish to extend you an invitation to visit the Union-Banner office while you are here at court, and incidentally tip the "devil" about a dollar on your subscription.

The fall term of Circuit Court of Chilton county will convene here next Monday. The first week will be devoted to the disposition of the civil docket, which is extraordinarily large this time.

If you are a farmer and intend to sow some of your land in wheat to make your biscuit next year, you should begin to get busy along that line. Wheat in this section should be planted as near the middle of November as possible.

We are publishing elsewhere in this issue, a splendid lecture by our County Health Officer, Doctor Gragg, on "The better Care of the Child." The lecture was prepared and read at the Chilton county Fair, at the time the babies which were entered in the Better Babies Contest were examined and awarded prizes. The subject is indeed a vital one, and we hope it will receive the careful study of those to whom it might be adapted.

At a convention of the Alabama bankers in Montgomery Tuesday, resolutions were passed, pledging banks not to "render financial aid or encouragement to anyone directly or indirectly interested in the raising of cotton for the year 1915, unless such person will enter into an agreement to curtail the production and reduce the acreage in cotton at least one-half of what it was for the year 1914." Further agreements were made by bankers to aid in securing crop diversification in Alabama.

What Alabama needs is smaller cotton production, and more diversification. If the banks stick to the above resolution it may be truly said that they have gone their "bob" in bringing such about. But there are many farmers whom such a practice as this on the part of the banks would not reach or affect. For them some other means must be devised. But the farmer who is well enough situated to carry on his business independent of the bank or local merchant, will in most cases, be ready to join in the movement without being forced to. Let the merchants make such a declaration now as the banks have done, aud the the thing will be practically accomplished.

But what are we to do with the merchant who is rather hard up and depends on cotton to redeem himself. Well, the bank will catch him on its provision in the resolution for the man who may be directly or indirectly interested in the raising of cotton.

LET US MAKE THIS A GOOD LOOKING TOWN

If every man who reads this—and every woman, too—would make it his or her business, the next hour he or she has, to look around the home premises and see how they could be fixed up to look better it would be a great thing for this town. It might not induce people to do any more than rake up the sticks that are lying around. That would be a great help alone. But maybe while raking up the loose leaves you would find there is a loose board in the sidewalk, a broken picket in the fence, that the corner of the porch has sagged or that the front steps need a new plank in them. And, as you would want to make a complete job of it, you would see that these repairs are made. Maybe the house has needed a new coat of paint for a long time. Perhaps new curtains are needed at the front windows. And the inside of the house is quite as important as the outside—is more important for it is on the inside you live and where visitors get their real impression of you and of the town. Maybe before you get through, if you will really look about you, there will be several things that can be made to look vastly better with the aid of a few boards or nails or a little varnish or a small expenditure of money. Collectively the effect on this town will be great. There is no economy in letting things run down and putting repairs off. A house that needs repair is going down hill; and a house that is going down hill is loosing value—value both in money and comfort. Let's make this a better looking town; and let's begin, like charity, at home.

WHAT THE FARMER DID

A city man recently visited his "country cousin." The man from the city, wishing to explain the joys of metropolitan life, said: "We have certainly been having fun the last few days. Thursday we autoed to the country club, and golfed until dark, then trolliied back to town and danced untill morning." The country cousin was not to be stumped in the least, so began telling of some of the pleasures of the simple life: "We have had pretty good times here, too. One day we buggied out to Uncle Ned's and went out to the back lot, where we baseballed all that afternoon. In the evening we sneaked up into the attic and pokered until morning." A sturdy old farmer who was listening, not to be outdone, took up the conversation at this point and said: "I was having some fun about this time myself. I muled to the cornfield and geehawed until sundown. Then I suppered until dark, and piped until 9 o'clock, after which I bedsteaded until the clock fiyed, after which I breakfasted until it was time to go muling again."

His Answer Was Correct.

Papa (concealing something in his hand)—"Willie, can you tell me what it is with head on one side and tail on the other?" Willie (triumphantly)—"Oh, I know! It's a rooster on a fence?"—Judge.

First American Admiral.

Esek Hopkins was the first admiral of the American navy, being appointed in 1775 by the continental congress commander-in-chief of the navy. While he at first achieved great success, he was removed in 1777 on the ground of incompetency. He died in 1802 at Providence, R. I., where a monument has been erected to his memory.

Better Care of the Child.

By Doctor V. J. Gragg.

If you would ask me what a child most needed, my answer would be, "A healthy, intelligent and educated mother." It is impossible for a doctor to treat a child fairly well, to have them well clothed, and well nourished without the proper co-operation of a mother or nurse. Much of the benefit to be derived from the doctors instructions are without the realms of the drug store. For example; the diet, fresh air, cold, heat, baths, Massage etc, are all important in the care of children. An infant or young child can never be treated the same as an adult, neither by drugs or other measures. The mother or nurse should be flexible and should make the care and treatment of each individual adaptable to that particular child.

It must be remembered that children vary greatly in their physical and mental equipments, much more than do adults. The physician who invariably treats all his cases alike and the mother who undertakes to treat all her children alike will necessarily make many mistakes. Every child must be studied from its own peculiar standpoints.

The disorders of nutrition form a large part of ills of children, and a tremendous amount of patience is required in dealing with these cases. In fact, if a mother loses patience in cases of malnutrition or intestinal disorders in children, the battle is virtually lost.

Chronic colitis, mal-nutrition, or nephritis may require months or even years for correcting, and yet the final results may be satisfactory. In giving children medicine, two points should ever be kept in mind. First, the good we expect to accomplish. Second the possible harm that might result from the treatment. For example; we can make a baby stop crying by giving it a soothing syrup containing opiates. In this case the only good results is to stop the baby's noise, while the evil effect of the opiate, recklessly administered, is to ruin his digestive system, clog up his excretions, form a bad habit of acquiring medicine and do many other harmful things. Therefore, a great deal of good judgment should be used in administering drugs to a child.

In order for a doctor to secure the full co-operation and coufidence of a mother; who is and should be the nurse, in most cases; he should explain to her the requirements of the growing child. Let us take for example, a case where the mother does not furnish the proper nourishment for the child, and the matter of artificial feeding must be gone into; if he explains to a mother of fair intelligence, that condensed milk and the ordinary proprietary foods, when prepared for use, are weak in fat, weak in proteid, and contain much less nutrition than does mothers milk the birth right of the child, she will at once be convinced that such food is not suitable for her baby, and it will be comparatively easy to show her that cow's milk in a majority of cases, is the proper substitute for mothers milk. It is certainly right to have the mother know as much of child life as she is capable of understanding. She should be encouraged to attend lectures to mothers, or if she cannot do this she should subscribe to a good mothers journal, where she will find from time to time many helpful hints and much valuable advice.

Children of such mothers will be better specimens of their race and as adults, they will always always have reasons to be glad and thankful that their mothers were educated in child management. The fundamental principle in the life of the young, are growth and developement. This applies to the lower animals as well as to man, and the type of animals, whether it be man or the lower animal depends in no small measure upon the way in which it has obeyed natures laws during its growth.

Heredity, of course, is an important factor, but care and surroundings count for more. The young of the lower animals may possess the finest of heredity, but if its early life is neglected, the animal will tall short of what it might have been. On the other hand another animal without the benefits of good blood may, when given all the advantages of faithful and scientific care during its growth; surpass, and be decidedly superior to, the more fortunate in birth.

The child is not here through a choice of its own, why should it be neglected any more than the lower animal?

Now, the nutrition of a child under the varying circumstances of health and age is too broad a subject to take up in detail today, so we shall go on and touch on a few of the most important ailments of the young.

Let us take Gastro-Enteric diseases, that is, the diseases of the stomach and bowels, that is so fatal in the young. The principle and immediate cause of diseases is the infection of the stomach and bowel contents by bacteria. These germs are usually carried into the stomach by contaminated food, and are allowed to remain and flourish there by feeding improper foods. This group of diseases, commonly called "summer complaint" of children, probably offers the greatest field of life saving measures that are available to the intelligent mother or nurse.

When a young child develops a diarrhoea or dysentery, the mother should at once stop giving milk, should give a dose of castor oil, and give a carbohydrate diet, and if the child does not improve, the mother should call a physician. It would be well for her to know that these summer diseases are produced by bacteria, and that milk furnishes the best culture medium for these germs. Another thing she should know, is how to dress the child in summer and winter. She should know the necessity of fresh air day and night, and the value of outdoor life at all seasons of the year. She should know that a so called "cold" in the head is usually an infection of the mucous membrance of the nose and throat and is more often due to dusty streets or close ill ventilated rooms, than it is to being exposed to the open air. She should know that a child cries from many other causes than hunger and that it should not be allowed to nurse every time it complains; she should know that fever, whatever its cause requires a light diet; she should know that the giving drugs to children is a habit that should be condemned, and that a healthy child requires little or nothing in the drug line.

Another very common ailment and one which demands attention and is easily relieved, is adenoids. This is a hypertrophy or overgrowth of the mucous glands of the nasopharyngeal vault. They are frequently associated with enlarged tonsils, but are found entirely independent of tonsilar diseases. The age of the child appears to have but little influence upon the character of the adenoids; they may occur at any age, but are more common with children from two to six years old.

These symptoms vary and depend on the character and the amount of growth. When the growth is small, there is usually some discharge from the nose with a slight but persistent cough which is usually regarded as a chronic cold. There may at times be nothing more than a desire to clear the throat. Such cases are often not recognized, the presence of the adenoids not being suspected because they do not close the air passages.

When the growth is larger more characteristic signs are sure to be present. The mouth is kept open, there is snoring when asleep, a stupid expression more or less disturbed articulation, a persistent nasal discharge deafness, inability to blow the nose, and more or less cough. This condition causes the child to be backward in school, many times stunts the growth, ruins the expression, injures the sight and hearing, deforms the chest, etc. And because of the constant inflamation of the mucus membrane, makes the child a ready prey of diphtheria, scarlet fever, tuberculosis, or any other disease which may chance to get in through the mouth while breathing and alight on this highly inflamed mucus membrane. Operation is the only method of treatment, It may bt done either with or without any anaesthetic. It is not dangerous. It is one with which every general practitioner should familiarize himself. It is an operation that should never be neglected, and is done so quickly that it should not be dreaded.

If time would allow, and space permit, much might be said in regard to diseased tonsils, defective eyes, ears, and teeth, and other ailments, but we will not be able to cover so much ground at this time, so will close.

Note: I am informed that Dr. Marcus and Mrs. Marshall, who made the examination at the Baby Contest at the Chilton county Fair found in the 25 babies examined, mhre thrn thirty per cent adenoids, 5 per cent defective ears, and 10 per cent diseased tonsils.

IT IS NOT YOUR TOWN—IT'S YOU

If you want to live in the kind of a town
Like the kind of a town you like,
You needn't slip your cloths in a grip
And start on a long, long hike.
You'll only find what you left Behind
For theres nothing that's really new.
It'a a knock at yourself when you knock your town.
It isn't your town—its you.
Real towns are not made by men afraid
Lest somebody else gets ahead.
When everyone works and nobody shirks
You can raise a town from the dead.
And if while you make your personal stake
Your neighbor can make one too,
Your town will be what you want to see.
It isn't your town—its you.

Newt Riggins is Finally Located

Will return to Clanton to Face Trial.

After baffling all officers and and detectives for more than a year, Newt Riggins has been located and arrested in San Antonio, Texas. He will be returned to Clanton to face the indictments which he was under when he retired himself from these parts, leaving his bondsmen soaked for the amount of $1,500.

Deputy J. T. Jones left Clanton Wednesdey morning with the credentials for returning Mr. Riggins to the Chilton county officials, who will bring to account before the courts for the indictments which are still registered against him.

Personal Ambition.

Personal ambition is a quite honorable motive. The desire for approval and praise is something which nobody should despise. But a man should not stake everything upon those; otherwise, when his works fail to obtain recognition he is disappointed. He should have in himself as his primary motive something which makes him independent of those things, something which prevents him from doing all those little things which impede public work, and make it difficult for men to work with others.—Sir Edward Grey.

Father of Income Tax.

Britain's income tax, which the prime minister thinks should be revised, was first imposed in January, 1799, by the ingenious financier, Pitt. it was submitted to by an indignant nation, who got rid of the abomination in three years. But Napoleon could not be conquered without it, and it made spasmodic entrances and exits, until in 1842 it became a hardy annual. Ireland managed to struggle on without it until 1857.

The Attraction.

A rather eccentric man, calling on a family blessed by an observant little son, wore kid gloves that had been cleaned. The little boy, seeming to be much attracted by the visitor, stayed close at his side. "You like to stand by Mr. Blank and hear his funny stories, don't you, Jimmie?" presently asked Jimmie's father. "I don't care about his stories," replied the honest youngster, "but his hands smell just like our automobile."

Modesty.

Brought Out by Trial.

There can be no true virtue in those who have never been tried—or at least we cannot be sure of its existence; it may be there, or only its semblance may be there. In real life we have to do with realities; let us make sure that our defenses are real.—Arthur L. Salmon.

Unfreezable.

"Can any one name a liquid that doesn't freeze?" asked the teacher. There was a moment's silence, says the Berliner Illustrirte Zeitung. Then a voice in the rear of the room answered, eagerly, "Please, teacher, hot water!"

Boy or Girl? Great Question!

This brings to many minds an old and tried family remedy—an external application known as "Mother's Friend." During the period of expectancy it is applied to the abdominal muscles and is designed to soothe the intricate network of nerves involved. In this manner it has such a splendid influence as to justify its use in all cases of coming motherhood. It has been generally recommended for years and years and those who have used it speak in highest praise of the immense relief it affords. Particularly do these knowing mothers speak of the absence of morning sickness, absence of strain on the ligaments and freedom from those many other distresses which are usually looked forward to with so much concern.

There is no question but what "Mother's Friend" has a marked tendency to relieve the mind and this of itself in addition to the physical relief has given it a very wide popularity among women.

It is absolutely safe to use, renders the skin pliable, is penetrating in its nature and is composed of those embrocations best suited to thoroughly lubricate the nerves, muscles, tendons and ligaments involved.

You can obtain "Mother's Friend" at almost any drug store.

It is prepared only by Bradfield Reg[illegible] Co., 301 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

THORSBY NEWS

The next number on the Lyceum Course will be an entertainment by W. Powell Hale, Elocutionist, to be given at the Baptist church on Monday night, November 30th. Mr. Hale has been in Thorsby before, and comes well recommended by those who have heard him. The attendance at the first number of the course was large, and the audience was well pleased. There will still be a chance to get season tickets for the balance of the course at some reduction.

The Christian Endeavor Society will give a Mock Trial at Bates Hall on Friday night, November 20th. Admission ten cents. The proceeds will be used as a contribution to the fund for a Headquarters Building.

A double header basket ball game was played on the grounds of the Baptist High School on Thursday, November 12th. The game between the first team resulted in a score of 11 to 7 in favor of Thorsby Institute. The game between the second teams resulted in a score of 5 to 1 in favor of the Unity-Chilton Baptist High School.

The Institute Basket Ball Team will probably have a game with a Birmingham team on Saturday, November 28th, at Thorsby.

The Agriculture class at the Institute have begun work on their individual garden patches in the school garden, and are much interested in the possibilities of winter crops. On Tuesday of this week they made a trip to the farm of M. J. Barrett for a practical demonstration of the working out of the principles of Animal Husbandry which they have been studying on the text book.

Miss Mary Lizzie Hughes has returned to the Girls' Dormitory after an absence of three weeks because of sickness.

Mr. John Husby has enrolled at the Institute, and is staying at the boys' dormitory.

The Alkahest Favorites will give a Concert in Thorsby on Thursday, December 10th This will be the third number on the Lyceum course.

Preparations are already under way for the contest of the Helen Keller Literary Society to be held the Friday night before Christmas. The question chosen for debate is "Resolved: That the United States should not build any more battleships until 1925."

The county meeting of the Farmers Union will be held in Thorsby December 29-30th.

TAXES

Without indulging in self praise the L. & N. takes occasion to call attention to extracts from newspapers commenting on the necessity for advanced payment of taxes.

The Montgomery Journal, in its issue of Oct. 20, stated:

"As a result of the appeal to the tax-payers to settle their indebtedness, which was made by Gov. O'Neal, the Treasury collected about $500,000. The Louisville & Nashville Railroad was the first to pay. This assessment does not mature until Jan. 1, but the road has promptly responded to the appeal for aid."

The Montgomery Advertiser, in its issue of Oct. 20, stated:

"The Louisville & Nashville Railroad was the first pay * * * This guarantees that the state will be in a position to meet all obligations until Jan. 1st. * * The assessment against the Louisville & Nashville does not mature until January, but the officers of the company promptly responded to the appeal for aid."

The L. & N. pays one-seventeenth of the ad valorem state taxes in Alabama and the same proportion of the ad valorem county taxes in Alabama.

In response to this appeal the L. & N. paid nearly $500,000. The interest rate in Alabama is 8 per cent. Therefore the state was not only able to meet matured and maturing obligations promptly, but was saved the interest on this payment, which would amount to a considerable sum.

This action on the part of the L. & N. is but another evidence of its disposition and constant desire to cooperate with the people. Whether the issue be great or small, the L. & N. stands ready to render any assistance in its power for the general public good.

We say in all sincerety and earnestness that we have never entertained or favored any movement designed to be solely of benefit to the L. & N.

Anything detrimental to the people is detrimental to the L. & N. Anything beneficial to the people is beneficial to the L. & N.

May we indulge the hope that the people appreciate our desire to continue to be a vital force for the profitable development of the territory through which our lines operate?

FRANK LOSES HIS LAST BATTLE AGAINST DEATH

Justice Lamar Refuses to Bring Case into The Supreme Court

Attorneys for Leo M. Frank under death sentence for the murder of Mary Phagan in Atlanta in 1913, will carry to other members of the United States Supreme Court their application for a writ of error in Frank's behalf, refused today by Justice Lamar.

This announcement was made tonight by Henry Alexander, of Frank's council, who will remain in Washington to continue the attempt to get intervention by the Supreme Court on the ground that Frank's constitutional rights were violated because the verdict was rendered during his absence from the court room.

Mr. Alexander said he had not lost hope that a writ would be issued. He did not say, however, to which member of the court he would apply next.

Attorneys applied to Justice Lamar for the writ on the ground that a right under the Federal constitution had been denied Frank when the jury's verdict was returned during his absence from the court room.

Henry Alexander, attorney for Frank, stated he was unable to say whether the application for the writ would be presented to the other justices or not until he had consulted with his associate, Henry Peeples, who is in the suburbs of the city.

Justice Lamar in denying the writ explained his action in a written formal opinion.

After a conference between attorneys Alexander and Peeples, who represent Frank, it was announced no further move would be made today. The attorneys still have the choice of applying to other justices of the court for the writ they sought unsuccessfully from Justice Lamar or they may apply to the court as a whole when it hears motions next Monday.

There were some indications, however, that the next move in the fight for Frank's life might be directed towards efforts to obtain clemency from the Governor of Georgia or the state pardon board.

WAR DEVELOPMENTS

Paris—Allies have been successful in number of minor engagements against Germans. Along the Aisne French artilery was able to drive Germans from the partially constructed trenches. Two infantry attacks at Hollebeke were swiftly repulsed.

Washington — White House denies that United States has already decided to demand reparation of Turkey on account of the Smyrna incident. Every opportunity will be given Turkey to make appology or explanation.

Berlin—Violent attacks by the French forces near Servon near western border of Argonne, been repulsed with heavy losses. Campaign continues to be successfull against Russia.

Petrograd — German attempts to break through armies in Poland been checked with severe losses. The battle intensified on both ends of 400 mile front. For most part Germans been forced upon defensive and everywhere Russian positions have been well maintained.

Kills Own Child To Provoke Wife

A most revolting murder was perpetrated at Flower Hill, eight miles west of Courtland, Ala., when a man named Willingham killed his nine months old child by throwing it into a well.

Willingham went home about dark, and became angry with his wife because supper was not ready. To vent his spleen on her, he committed the deed.

Willingham (who is a white man) and his wife then went to the house of a negro and spent the night. Sometime during the night the woman told the negro what her husband had done and the next morning the negro told a Mr. Robinson, who got together some men and went to the scene of the murder. A search of the well revealed the dead body.

Willingham was arrested by Constable Terry, and carried to Moulton jail, where he now is confined. He professes to think that he did nothing wrong in committing the crime.

A FEW WORDS FROM MR. J. N. SCOTT

Well, Mr. Editor, the election is over and we are again down to business—what little we have left. Times are so hard and business is so dull that the farmers up this way are a little blue; but they are sowing wheat and other fall crops, and by this, we hope to pull through.

I have been amused at some politicians since the election, trying to explain the awful blow the democrats received. The defeated Democrats are trying to console themselves by saying it was because the people were ignorant; but they know better. We all know why they voted against the democrats; and we know it was not because they were deceived by the Progressives. We are not very wise, but we know the democrats. We know how they have burdened us, and we shall not forget it. We do not have to read history to find out the record of the democratic party. We have only to look about us and see these hard times and other visible evidences. And these things will be remembered two years from now too.

I see in the Clanton Press that Mr. Adams has made his complaint against our speakers in the last campaign. Now, Mr. Adams, you ought not to make any complaint, just because you cannot get up and tell the democrats of their rottenness as you used to do when you were going around for the interests of the people, making speeches in your cotton bagging suit. Yes you know you told us that if we did not give you the Judge's office, you would have to go to plowing an ox; and we ignorant people did it. If you were not satisfied with the campaign, you ought to have taken the stump and have made some democratic speeches. You would have gotten satisfied right soon by that means. If you are not content with defeat by 550 majority this time, next election will hand it to you at the rate of about "three 0 nothing."

Respectfully,
J. N. Scott.

Jemison, Ala., Nov. 20, 1914.

Union Springs

Hard times, and we fear worse coming. People here are about done haryesting their crops. Everybody seems to have made enough for present needs, then why cry hard times? Ah! the low price of costly cotton, and the high cost of living, that is it. But we think the cost of living will be reduced next vear. Why? Because people will not be able to get the luxuries and necessities of life, as they have done. So it will not require so much cost, thus relieving the present administration somewhat.

The election here was quiet; people turned out well. We call to mind only two democrats and one republican that failed to vote. The results in the nation shaw that the party of Lincoln, Grant and McKinley still lives,—the party that makes America prosperous.

Some of our people say they prefer the Cleveland panic to the present one. Back then much was said about reducing the cotton acreage, but that all hushed when William McKinley was elected. The same cry is going forth again; but is overproduction the trouble?

We expect singing at Union Springs Chappel on the 5th Sunday afternoon in Vov., at one o'clock. Will use the old books.

The past week has been a noted hog killing season here. Excuse us Mr. Editor, but our remedy for the stringency of the times is, be sure to make our corn and feed crops large enough for all demands, and in addition, all the cotton we can.

"Republican."

Dr. Roper is Valedictorian

Dr. G. C. Roper, one of Clanton's most estimable young men, who is this year graduating at the Birmingham Medical College is undoubtedly winning a standard with his class that is worthy of high commendation. In the Birmingham Age-Herald of last Sunday there appeared a likeness ot the officers of the graduating class of the college, and Mr. Roper has the honor of being the valedictorian.

We are proud of the fact that he has reached this place, and all his friends here will congratulate him. It means that the occupant has established a record among his class mates that is not to be despised.

In the class is also another young man from Clanton, of whom we have just reason to be proud, in the Person of Dr. H.G. Broadhead.

Wetumpka Hotel Damaged by Fire

Last Sunday night the Lancaster Hotel in Wetumpka of which Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Lamar were managers, was gutted by fire.

The fire started in the rear of the building and was extinguished after doing considerable damage. The fire occurred early in the night and, for that reason, was more effectively fought than if it had broken out later, for the reason that scores of volunteers assisted the firemen.

Free Springs

Editor Union-Banner:—All the farmers up in this corner of Chilton are busy sowing oats and are putting in, I think, a much larger acreage than usual. We have made a lot of syrup in this community, and most all will have corn to do them. We have a very good supply of meat, and nearly all are blessed with a plenty of milk and butter. So I hope we will not get very hungry. Although cotton will not bring much, we are blessed with plenty of wood and can have a good fire to stay by in cold days. So we can keep warm even if we can't have money to get winter cloths with. So let's thank God for what we have and be content with it.

Samie Warren was kicked by a mule last week and his leg was broken.

J. C. Prim had some ribs broken a few weeks ago and is just able to get around in the yard again.

The singing at J. C. Prim's Saturday night was well attended, and all seemed to enjoy it very much. The music was rendered by Miss Leavy Coffer and Prof. C. N. Oden.

Let's not plant cotton for the boll weevil next year but plant such crops as we and our stock can eat, then we will not be held up to the world as subjects of charity. I am so tired of hearing the plea to the government for help. If everybody will do as we did after the Civil war—eat plain food and wear plain cloths, stay out of debt and learn not to want so many things that are not really necessary,—we will make it all right after a few years and will be independent; for it is humiliating to some at least to be held up to the world as a nation of beggars.

Death of Mr. James Logan

On Thursday evening, November 19, at six o'clock, the death angel visited Mr. Jim Logan and took him from this life of care and suffering. Mr. Logan was born December 30, 1885. He leaves a wife and one little daughter, Kathryn, about fifteen months old, and a host of friends and relatives to mourn his death.

Mr. Logan was a careful, loving father and a devoted husband. But he has finished his work; he has written the last line of life's record.

He had been sick for about five months and was in the Vaughn Memorial Hospital of Selma until about two weeks before his death. He bore his suffering with great patience.

The deceased was laid to rest in the Plantersville Cemetery. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Brasher of Plantersville.

God in his wisdom has called. The boon his life had given, and though the body moulders here, the soul is safe in heaven.

T'is hard to break the tender cord, with which love has bound the heart. T'is hard! so hard! to speak the words—We must depart forever,—Yet again, we hope to meet thee when the day of life is fled, and in heaven with joy to greet thee where no farewell tears are shed.

A precious one from us is gone and a voice we love. A place is vacant in our homes forever.

His loving niece,
Florence Logan.

Thomasville is Swept by Fire

Fire destroyed the oil mill of the Thomasville Mill and Storage Co., together with about 500 tons of cake, 300 tons of seed and 500 tons ot hulls Tuesday.

The fire originated in the hull house, and was under good headway when discovered. Several hundred citizens of the town turned out to fight the fire but only succeeded in saving the cotton warehouse, oil tanks and ginnery. There was about 1500 bales of cotton in the warehouse and this was in great danger for several minutes. The oil tanks, containing several thousand gallons of oil, caught fire several times, but each time the flames were extinguished before they could get under headway.

The total amount of property destroyed is estimated at about $100,000 with less than half that amount of insurance.

ERVIN POPE NOT TO HANG FOR MURDER

Ervin Pope's sentence to die on the gollows for the murder of James McClurkin, Calhoun county farmer, was yesterday commuted to life imprisonment by Governor O'Neal. Pope who is a negro, has been a central figure in one of the most unusual criminal cases in Alabama history. After repeatedly respiting the negro in order that he might the more carefully examine the evidence in the case, the Governor reached the conclusion that "the weight of the evidence was not such as to justify the death penalty."

The negro was convicted five times in the Anniston City court and each time the punishment was fixed at the maximum. Four times the verdict was set aside, and a new trial granted on appeal to the supreme court. Sentence was affirmed by this tribunal after the fifth conviction, whereupon counsel for Pope sought executive intervention to save the negro's life.

Cotton Report of Chilton County

There were 16,154 bales of cotton ginned in Chilton County prior to November 14, 1914 as compared with 13,557 bales ginned prior to November 14, 1913. The above figures are from the official report as complied for the bureau of government statistics by R. J. Jones, special agent for this county.

HOW MUCH SYRUP WAS MADE?

We would like to have a fair estimate of the number of gallons of syrup made in this county from this season's crop. In order to obtain this we will ask all farmers who made any syrup to bring or send a report of the amount to the Union-Banner office as soon as possible, so that your name and amount may be placed on the list. The total for the county will interest everyone.

Mr. J.C. Culp's Pig Wighed 454

Mr. J. C. Culp, who lives on a farm near Clanton was in the Union - Banner office Monday, and while here related the story of a pig which he recently killed at his house for meat. The animal was of the Poland China variety, and weighed 454 pounds. It was a thoroughbred, and ten months old. Mr. Culp's son, R. G. Culp, killed a mate to the same pig which weighed 394

"Democracy, thou art a jewel."

Let us this day give thanks unto God for the myriads of blessings He has thrown around us from time to time.

If the people of this county ever have been fooled and deceived in an election, it surely must have been in the one two years ago. Almost every play that is made in the enactment of the county affairs now, seems to uncover to someone the fact that he did not get what he thought he was voting for.

Listen, Mister! What do you think about a man, born and reared in Chilton County, and who has all his life been a recipient of kindnesses and favors at the hands of the county's citizens, sticking his fist to an affidavit which states that he does not believe a jury made up of the county citizens will grant a fair and impartial trial to a corporation in court? How would it sound to you to hear some of the "tip-tops" in your county affairs say that they do not believe you would, under the oath that is administered to a juror, be honest and impartial in exercising your candid opinion of right and wrong? It appears to us that somebody has recently been handed a lemon.

Circuit Court seems to be making rather slow progress in the disposition of the civil docket this week. Up to Wednesday night we are informed that they were not through with all the cases set for Monday. There seems to be a considerable halt over the matter of removing the cases of various citizens against the Alabama Power Company to the Federal court. The question has been argued by the lawyers, and Judge Pearson will, in all probability render his decision when court re-convenes today (Thursday).

DISASTROUS FIRE AT MAPLESVLLE.

Fire broke out in the plant of theTwin Tree Lumber Company at Maplesville last Thursday, and swept the planer sheds, dry kilns and rough lumber sheds of the immense mill. The fire department from Selma arrived on a special train, but before it could get into action the hungry flames had completed a terrible destruction estimated at about $120,000. The fact that the wind happened to be blowing in the right direction saved the entire town from being destroyed. The loss to the company is partly covered by insurance.

Jonithan Bice of Thorsby was in Clanton Wednesday.

Charles Cooper of Mountain Creek, President of the Empire Construction Company of that place, was in Clanton Wednesday looking after some land matters. He payed the Union-Banner office an interesting visit.

Scott E. Chesnutt of Birmingham is in Clanton again this week.

ARE THE COURTS OF CHILTON JUST?

We believe in the plan or thinking twice before you speak, when the matter of laying censure upon the acts of another is being discussed. Caution is very appropriate in such cases, and should be judiciously exercised.

But when a candid conclusion is thus reached, we believe in "giving the devil his dues."

Much has been said recently regarding conditions in the norhern part of the county, which have been occasioned by the erecting of the power plant, and the forming of the great pond of water at Lock 12 on Coosa River. Practically all the people of the county are more or less familiar with the matter, as it has been discussed freely, and has been investigated and reported upon by various public health authorities.

Many citizens who lived in the country adjacent to the pond, and who were affected by the unhealthful conditions caused by the excessive amount of water, claim damage at the hands of the promoters of the power plant, and have carried the matter into the circuit court of the county for settlement.

In connection with these suits, somewhere the idea has sprung up that the Power Company will not receive a fair and impartial trial at the hands of the juries in the courts of Chilton County. We are utterly surprised at anyone, whoever and wherever he might be, having the gall to make such assertions about our citizens, of whom the juries in the circuit court are composed.

The evidence in all these cases will be carefully assimilated by counsel for all parties concerned; and to say that a jury composed of Chilton County citizens is, any less than any other jury, capable of weighing the matter and reaching a just conclusion, is on the face of it, to us the essence of absurdity. We do not believe there is the least foundation for advancing such an idea.

But there is a still greater extreme which has been expressed by some—that the power company would not be given a just and unprejudiced verdict, whether the jury were a capable and competent one or not.

We believe there is absolutely no ground for either of these opinions. They must have been "hatched" by someone who had other things in mind and purpose than justice to all, both corporations and individuals alike.

We do not believe the people of the county are prejudiced against the promoters of great power interests at Lock 12. On the other hand we think that our people are proud of it. All they want is justice. If those people who have been affected by the peculiar conditions imposed by the great lake of water have been treated wrongfully and suffered damage, it is only the natural conclusion of the general citizenship that they should have reparition from those who inflicted the wrong. Could any party firm or corporation ask anything more fair?

As stated above, all testimony touching the matter will be developed in the court. And the juries here are sufficiently just honest, and competent to decide the cases, without showing any prejudice, partiality or narrowness for or against anyone.

CORRECTION IN LIST OF PRIZE WINNERS

Editor Union-Banner:

Please allow me to correct an error in the list of prize winners at the recent county Fair, as published in your paper.

The list furnished you showed that Mrs. O. C. Mastin won first prize for the largest and best display of canned fruits, and second prize for largest and best display of canned vegetables. This was an error of the Secretary in making up the list, for the report of the judges gave these prizes to Mrs. L. O. Vickers.

Yours truly,
J. N. DENNIS, Secty.

OUR COMBINATION SUBSCRIPTION OFFERS

There are some of our subscribers who are behind with their dues for The Union-Banner, and it is very necessary that they be paid up right away; necessary for two reasons. First, we are greatly in need of the money; second, the papers must be stopped if they become a year behind. As an enducement to those who who are delinquent, we have arranged some very attractive combination offers, whereby we are able to give the very best values for their money. Following are some of the clubs we have secured:

(1) The UNION-BANNER and the Tri-Weekly Constitution, both	$1.50
(2) The UNION-BANNER and the Montgomery Daily Times, both	2.00
(3) The UNION-BANNER and the Alabama Weekly Times, both	1.00
(4) The UNION-BANNER and the Progressive Farmer, both for	1.25
(5) The UNION-BANNER and the Southern Ruralist, both for	1.00
(6) The UNION-BANNER and the Yellow Jacket, both for	1.00

We want you to look over this list, and if you are behind with your subscription, select one of the clubs, and let us hear from you. If you send remittance by mail, simply give the number of the club you want and send the proper amount—we will do the rest.

AFTERMATH

From the Southern Ruralist.

The national election for 1914 has become history. The all-important fact which politicians are now laboring to explain—from their opposing viewpoints—is that the Democratic party in the national House of Representatives has lost 117 votes. Its overwhelming majority has shrunk from 141 to the bare working majority of 24.

We are neither surprised nor disappointed. We are unequivocally pleased. We are pleased because we want to see real democratic principles triumphantly perpetuated. This warning—this foundstion-shaking shock—was indispensable to future success. If party leaders heed the warning administered by the people all may yet be well with Democracy. If they do not heed, they and the party go down in defeat and contumely the next time the voter has a chance at them.

A few party apologists are making bad matters worse—and themselves ridiculous—by claiming a Democratic victory on the theory that the marked replacing of Progressive votes by Republican makes this a two-party contest, so that the Democrats really won against a solid opposition.

They are welcome to this doubtful conclusion. What satisfaction can they find in the breaking of the solid South by the election of a Republican to Congress from North Carolina? Then explain the bearing of the election of a Progressive Congressman in Louisiana, and the victory of Progressives in thirty counties and one senatorial district in Georgia.

One more such "victory" and the solid South is smashed to smithereens. One more such victory snd the only national Democratic administration in a generation goes down under the verdict of failure written by the American people.

These reflections are inspired by no desire to criticise. We are moved only by sincere interest in the welfare of the country, which we conceive as being inseparable from true Democracy. Nothing can be gained by equivocation. The more quickly and candidly we acknowledge the real facts, the greater the possibility of correcting mistakes and successfully appealing for renewed confidence.

The correctness of our assertion that "the present administration has never been strong with the farmers" is more than proved true by the result of the election. It was largely the farmer vote in all parts of the country which turned against the Democratic party of broken promises. It was country districts in New York, Illinois and Kansas that bade Democratic Congressmen to stay at home. It was farmer counties which went against the old party in Georgia. The issue and verdict were not sectional; they were country-wide and country-made.

The ballots which came so near changing the political control of Congress were cast by hands calloused by holding the plow. They were intended as a rebuke to a party which had wilfully failed to redeem its platform pledges.

To the new congress great opportunity is afforded. Again we insist that the only hope lies in redeeming these pledges.

The writing is on the wall. DO or GO!

The tone of the above article is interesting, as it comes from a Democratic source. It is the most fair and conservative estimation we have seen given out from any Democratic view of the recent elections.

We believe Democracy received more than a mere warning of future defeat. The warning has been flashed to the party leaders constantly for the past two years and that which was handed them in November was really a part of the repudiation which they had been warned would come if they did not make good their pledges.

The golden opportunity of democracy to establish itself in the faith of this nation is passed. To attain success at any subsequent stage would require a terriffic struggle with a fate already written in compensation for its numerous sins of omission

But even granting, as does the Southern Ruralist, that now is the moment of opportunity, we can but judge that in a case of "do or go," now, Democracy will continue to GO.

HISTORIC FIND IN PALESTINE

Chicagoan Reports Discovery of Floor of Church Dating From Third or Fourth Century.

Dr. George L. Robinson of the McCormick Theological seminary, who has returned to Chicago after a year's study of ruins in Palestine, reports the finding of an ancient mosaic floor one mile south of St. Nebo.

"The floor was discovered by an Arabian farmer who dug into the earth to build a foundation for a barn," he said. "The floor was in one of the early Christian churches and was built in the third or fourth century.

"Flowers, animals and Greek inscriptions are inlaid in most artistic manner. The mosaic is in a perfect state of preservation and looks as though it might have been laid yesterday."

As a result of his studies Doctor Robinson has come to the conclusion that the true Kadesh of Moses and the Israelites is properly located at Aim Kadees. Doctor Robinson said he believed that the Catholics were correct in their contention that Zion is located on the southwestern hill of Jerusalem and that Calvary is underneath the church of the Holy Sepulcher.

MORTGAGE SALE

Under and by virtue of the power of sale contained in the mortgage executed by J. A. Welden and wife, Mattie T. Welden, to J. E. MEASURING LIGHT OF STARS

With Improved Instruments, Johns Hopkins Professor Hopes to Secure Most Important Results.

A recent number of Le Radium contains a paper by Dr. A. H. Pfund of Johns Hopkins university, in which he describes some preliminary tests he has made of a new apparatus for measuring the light of a star. The work was done at the Allegheny observatory, the Keeler 30-inch reflector being used. In the focus of the telescope, either of two small blackened disks, which formed the junction of a thermo-circuit, could be placed. The wires used for the thermo-element were alloys of bismuth and tin, and of antimony and bismuth respectively. They were enclosed in an evacuated capsule, closed at one end by a plate of fluorite and substituted for the eyepiece of the telescope. The thermo-current was measured by a moving-coil galvanometer. The sensitiveness of the arrangement was such that a candle at a distance of 80 miles would give a deflection of one millimeter. The deflections obtained from celestial objects were: Vega, 7.5; Jupiter, 3.0; Altair, 2.0 millimeters. The author hopes, by using a more sensitive galvanometer and materials for his thermo-elements, to increase the sensitiveness considerably, and in this way to open up a new field of astro-physical research.

Planning for the Stork's Arrival

Among those things which all women should know of, and many of them do, is a splendid external application sold in most drug stores under the name of "Mother's Friend." It is a penetrating liquid and many and many a mother tells how it so wonderfully aided them through the period of expectancy. Its chief purpose is to render the tendons, ligaments and muscles so pliant that nature's expansion may be accomplished without the intense strain so often characteristic of the period of expectancy.

"Mother's Friend" may therefore be considered as indirectly having a splendid influence upon the early disposition of the future generation.

Whatever induces to the ease and comfort of the mother should leave its impress upon the nervous system of the baby.

At any rate it is reasonable to believe that since "Mother's Friend" has been a companion to motherhood for more than half a century it must be a remedy that women have learned the great value of.

Ask at any drug store for "Mother's Friend," a penetrating, external liquid of great help and value. And write to Bradfield Regulator Co., 402 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for their book of useful and timely information.

Finds Cure for Epilepsy After Years of Suffering

"My daughter was afflicted with epileptic fits for three years, the attacks coming every few weeks. We employed several doctors but they did her no good. About a year ago we heard of Dr. Miles' Nervine, and it certainly has proved a blessing to our little girl. She is now apparently cured and is enjoying the best of health. It is over a year since she has had a fit. We cannot speak too highly of Dr. Miles' Nervine."

MRS. FRANK ANDERSON, Comfrey, Minn.

Thousands of children in the United States who are suffering from attacks of epilepsy are a burden and sorrow to their parents, who would give anything to restore health to the sufferers.

Dr. Miles' Nervine

is one of the best remedies known for this affliction. It has proven beneficial in thousands of cases and those who have used it have the greatest faith in it. It is not a "cure-all," but a reliable remedy for nervous diseases. You need not hesitate to give it a trial.

TRAINING BOYS FOR WARFARE

Youth of Australia, From an Early Age, Undergo a Compulsory Military Service.

Australian lads of twelve years begin a more or less voluntary form of military training. It is an indulgent, happy-go-lucky sort of thing, designed primarily to be of physical advantage. When the lads are fourteen years old, a limited military service is severely compulsory, with penalties for evasion, and fines laid upon employers and parents who interfere, and thus continues, with physical exercises, drill, parades, and rifle practice, for four years, whereupon these cadets are passed into the citizen forces. Four whole-day drills are required each year, and 12 half-day drills and 24 night drills. A perfunctory attendance upon these grave obligations—inapt, sullen, frivolous behavior—counts for nothing at all. If the cadet fails to be marked efficient by his battalion officers he must perform his service all over again. In Kalgoorlie of western Australia—A great dust storm blowing that night—we watched a column of these "little conscripts" march past with rifles and bugles and drums; and they were smart to see—brown uniforms, with tricks of green, and wide-brimmed Australian hats caught up at the side in the Australian way. It is no farcical affair. When we were in Brisbane of Queensland, a score of truant youngsters were packed off to the military barracks for ten days of close confinement and drill; and away they went, in a big cape wagon, in charge of a sergeant major, and under escort of some brilliant artillerymen—a melancholy little crew, these truants, then, facing ten days of absence from home, with six hours of drill on the hot parade-ground, under a sergeant major, who doubtless knew how to improve the patriotism of small culprits, and would do it with a switch.—Norman Duncan, in Harper's Magazine.

The Farmer and His Customs 40 Years Ago To the Present Day

(By Gus Jackson)

What did the farmer do, and what were his customs forty years ago?

He produced from one to three bales of cotton to the plow; from fifty to one hundred bushels of corn; from ten to fifty bushels of wheat; from twenty-five to one hundred shocks of oats; and a few vegetables for family use during the spring and summer. He had one or two milk cows, and killed four or five hundred pounds of meat. He got 7 or 8 cents per pound for his cotton, and 35 to 50 cents per bushel for his corn, provided he had any to sell. For winter use he would have a nice hill of potatoes, and a turnip patch. He would visit his neighbors and talk about the good meetings they had Saturday and Sunday, and what a good prayer meeting they had Sunday night.

And if John or Tom went to church Sunday, they did not ride pa's horse; they put the horse in the pasture, and walked to church

If Sister's or Mollie's sweetheart came to see them on Sunday afternoon, he left in time for the girls to get the cows milked before sundown. And if Sis or Molly wore a salico dress with a green border on it to church, nearly every boy wanted to walk home with them; and he who was brave enough to take her by the arm and assist her up the church steps would almost blush his hat off his head.

Everybody enjoyed life and thought they were having good times.

Sometimes we would hear mother say something about hard times when she had to dig up the dirt in the smoke house and soak the salt out of it for table use, and make meal bran coffee.

What does the farmer do to-day?

He produces from five to twenty bales of cotton to the plow; from 100 to 500 bushels of corn; watermelons, peanuts, sugar cane, cabbage, and all kinds of vegetables for the market. He hardly has time to go to church; hardly ever goes to see his neighbor; has to work from daylight till dark, and cannot dress nor educate his children as he would like to.

What is the trouble with the farmer of to-day?

Everything that he produces is bringing a good price, except cotton, and it is bringing as much as it did forty years ago. Now what is the trouble, and how is the farmer going to get relief?

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

New Food Supply for England.

A former pest is now about to become of great value. At the present time, when any matter affecting the food supply of the United Kingdom is of special moment, it is interesting to learn that the Australian rabbit pest is now an important factor in the lists of foodstuffs arriving in the old country from the over-sea dominions. Sir T. A. Coghlan, the agent general for New South Wales, states that within the last fortnight four ships arriving from New South Wales have unloaded at London 576,336 frozen rabbits from that state. All the consignments came to hand in excellent condition.

Representative Denis O'Leary of New York simply can't get himself accustomed or hardened to the amount of time devoted to talk in congress.

Nearly every day he looks into the chamber, shakes his head sadly and walks back to his office.

Mobile Man Thanks Chicago Chemist For Swift Recovery

Jerome Nicholas Suffered a Long Time, Then Found the Way to Health Quickly, Easily,

Here is the story of a man who long suffered with stomach trouble—how his health slowly failed and how in the end he made a rapid recovery—a joyous surprise.

Jerome Nicolas of Mobile for considerably more than a year knew he was not in good health.

One day, by good fortune, he learned of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy.

In a short time he found himself with new life and energy. He was so well pleased that he urged others to use this truly remarkable remedy. Part of a letter from Mr. Nicholas will tell you his experience.

"I received your medicine and was very anxious to continue the treatment. After taking three doses I felt better than I have felt in a year. I have passed several hundred gall stones, besides other secretions."

We want all people who have chronic stomach trouble or constipation, no matter of how long standing, to try one dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy—one dose will convince you. This is the medicine so many of our people have been taking with surprising results. The most thorough system cleaner we ever sold. Mayr's Wonder-Stomach Remedy is now sold here by. THE UNION-BANNER

VOL. 3 THE UNION 11th Year CLANTON, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1914 THE BANNER 21st Year NO. 34

REPORT OF GRAND JURY OF CHILTON COUNTY

Fall Term Circuit Court, 1914

The State of Alabama, Chilton County.

Hon. W. W. Pearson, Judge of the 15th Judicial Circuit:

We, the Grand Jury, duly empanneled and sworn for the Fall Term, 1914, of the Circuit Court of Chilton County, Alabama, beg to submit this, our final report.

We have investigated 51 alleged violations of the law, and have returned into your Honor's Court, 29 true bills.

COUNTY OFFICERS

Because of the fact that one of the State Examiners has recently made an examination of the books of our county officers, we deemed an examination by our body unnecessary, and did not make same.

We examined the bonds of our county officials, and found same to have been given in such sums as is required by law, and in our opinion the sureties on said bonds are good and sufficient.

The County Treasurer furnished us with his report as to the finances of the County, and we have attached said report hereto, and ask that it be made a part of this, our final report.

COUNTY PROPERTY

We have looked over the Court House and jail, and found them to be in good condition. Repairs are about completed on the Court House, which will add much to its comfort and appearance; and we recommend that our county officers prosecute offenders if necessary, in order to maintain good sanitary conditions in and around our county buildings.

Our committee appointed to investigate conditions at the county poor farm report one of the buildings in need of repairs, which can be made at small cost; and we recommend that the Commissioners Court attend to the matter at an early date.

COUNTY POOR

Our committee appointed to visit the Poor House report that the inmates are receiving good attention, and that at this time there are five white male and thirteen white female inmates.

GENERAL CONDITIONS

The small number of violations of the law reported to the Grand Jury, in comparison with previous Grand Juries indicates a decrease in lawlessness throughout our county.

A majority of the cases examined by us have been for violation of prohibition law, and carrying concealed weapons. We wish to follow the lead of former Grand Juries in recommending hard labor where convictions can be made in these cases.

PUBLIC ROADS

Reports from over the county, with few exceptions, show that our public roads are being steadily improved, under the new system of working now in use in the county, and it is our opinion that if the citizens will use a little well directed effort to maintain roads after they have been graded by the road working machinery, that in a short time good roads will exist all over our county.

Reports from Beats 7, 8 and 15 are that roads in those Beats are in bad condition, and in view of the fact that the county has done no work in these Beats, we recommend that the Commissioners Court send the county road workers to those Beats at an early date.

The following prisoner confined in jail has had no indictment returned against him by this body, and we respectfully ask that your Honor issue such order as is required to have him discharged from custody; to-wit: Ben Kendrick.

Thanking your honor for your able charge covering our duties as Grand Jurors, also the Solicitor for his aid and assistance in our work, and the Sheriff and his deputies for the prompt manner in which they have executed the summonses of this body, and the Bailiff for his services, we respectfully ask that we be finally discharged.

Not being able to get witnesses in No. 44, same is continued on docket to next term, and ask that your Honor have proper order made continuing same.

W. H. WILLIAMS,
Foreman.

November 23rd, 1914.

To the Honorable Solicitor and Gentlemen of the Grand Jury, of the Fall Term, 1914, of Circuit Court of Chilton County, Alabama,

Gentlemen:

I beg to report to your Honorable Body that I have cash on hand to credit of following funds:

Nov. 23, 1914, to cash on hand, general funds	$2605.42
Nov. 23, 1914, to cash on hand, special road funds	2306.12
Nov. 23, 1914, to cash on hand, fine and F. fund	2104.02
Nov. 23, 1914, to cash on hand, redemption of land	68.89
Nov. 23, 1914, to cash on hand, state aid road funds	6.78
Total	$7091.23

I, J. W. Littlejohn, Treasurer of Chilton County, Alabama, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct statement of the finance of Chilton County, as appears from my books.

Respectfully submitted,
(Signed) J. W. LITTLEJOHN,
Treasurer Chilton Co., Ala.

Power Co. Cases In Court Here

According to a decision rendered last week by Judge Pearson of the Circuit Court of Chilton County, the several suits of citizens of this county against the Alabama Power Company for alleged damages will be given disposition in the courts here. The decision was given as an outcome of an effort on the part of counsel for the Power Company to have the cases removed to the Federal Court before going to trial here.

Kendrick Released By Grand Jury

The Grand Jury last week recommended to the court that Ben Kendrick, who was held in jail here for several weeks for the shooting of Otis Robinson, be released, on the grounds that no indictment had been made against him. The judge will issue the proper orders for releasing the prisoner from custody, and he will be set free at once. Kendrick is a young man about sixteen, and Robinson, the man he shot, is also young, being only about eighteen.

Thorsby Notes

The Alkahest Favorites, the next number on the Entertainment course, will come Thursday night, Dec. 10th at 7:30 p. m. at Bates Hall. This entertainment is a concert by three talented young women. Miss Gailey, the violinist, played last summer at Chautauqua, N. Y., and was enthusiastically received. Miss Beatty, the soloist, has sung on the best lyceum platforms with marked success. Miss Cawthon, the reader, is an Alabamian, whose home is in Mobile, and who has brought honor to her home state by her success as an elocutionist.

This is the last concert on the entertainment course, and everyone within reach of Thorsby should make it a point to attend and hear these artists. Admission 50 and 25c.

The entertainment by W. Powell Hale at the Baptist church on Monday night of this week was attended by a full house, and was enjoyed by all.

The East Lake Basket Ball Team, which was to have played the Institute team last Saturday, did not come because of the rain, but are planning to come on Saturday of this week, Dec. 5th. The game will be called at 2:30 p.m. A good game is promised. The institute boys have put their ground into better shape than ever before, and have been doing some good practice work the last week.

A large number of the members of the Ladies' Guild met at the home of Mrs. M. Anderson on Friday of last week. A very pleasant afternoon was enjoyed.

Members of Thorsby Institute passed a pleasant evening at the home of Mrs. A. K. Horn last Thursday, and on Friday night at the home of Rev. E. W. Butler. Several of the pupils went to the County Farm on the afternoon of Thanksgiving Day and held a service.

The Congregational and Baptist ccurches united in a Union Thanksgiving Service at the Congregational church Thanksgiving morning. Rev. John A. Pool preached the sermon.

Rev. J. M. Graham, of Ashland, Ala., preached at the Congregational church Sunday night.

Arrangements are being made for the County meeting of the Farmers Union at Thorsby on Dec. 29th and 30th.

War Tax Went in Effect Tuesday

The war tax hits you Tuesday. If you ship a package by express you must pay one cent. If you telephone and the call costs 15 cents you must pay one cent extra.

If you get your life insured you must pay one-half cent for each dollar of the premium, if the company agent does not pay it.

There are many more taxes, but the corporations are going to try to absorb them.

For instance: The manufacturer will pay four cents on every hundred sticks of chewing gum.

The proprietors of theatres, bowling alleys, and other places of amusement and sellers of liquors, cigars and tobacco, perfumes and other luxuries must pay a tax for each $1000 of capital invested and the Pullman company will pay one cent for each berth ticket sold.

Union Springs

"Grandma's" letter in last Union-Banner was fine. It seems as man sinks lower in the scale of imperfection, his wants become so numerous that Divine chastening is necessary to save him from ultimate ruin. For the past eighteen years a wave of prosperity rolled over America; but our people with plenty all around became too saucy and discontented. Now with such a radical change they are better prepared to appreciate prosperity. Grandma's letter is good; and "Little Viewer" is Johnny on the spot.

Elbert Gothard has had a serious attack of pneumonia, but is better.

Rev. J. N. Scott knows how to go down after them. When he speaks, they sit up and take notice.

Prof. Mullins of East Chilton has charge of the school at Ervin Schoolhouse. The people of that district are erecting a nice new school building.

Mr. Jackson's correspondence in last week's paper was quite interesting.

Sunday afternoon singings are getting to be quite common; but real good singing is not appreciated by the majority. Just a few that keep the work going have the Cause, and are on fire with the Heavenly art. Age, bad weather, or trifling circumstances do not stop them, because they are in touch with heavenly things—then sacred song does not grow monotonous.

Same applies to the Sunday school. Last Sunday being unfavorable, doubtless many remained at home; but those whose hearts were burning with love were there to study that saddest of all lessons; but through the dark pall of sadness shone the efficacy of Christ's sacrifice, that does and will reach all humanity, both living and dead, that all may secure life.

"Scribbler."

Teachers Examination

The next State examination for Teachers will be held at Clanton at the Court House, beginning at ten o'clock, a.m., on the third Monday in December, 1914. All applicants should be present by 9 a.m. for registration, except those who intend to file a second grade and take for first grade; and they must be present by noon Tuesday.

WAR DEVELOPMENTS

While comparative quiet prevails along the battle lines in Flanders and northern France, official reports from the eastern theatre of the war indicate that the fighting at various points, particularly in Russian Poland, has been of a very stubborn nature.

The Russians admit that between the Vistula and the Warta rivers the Germans still maintain strongly fortified positions, although their losses are reported very large. The Russians again have occupied Czernowitza and the Austrians are retreating precipitately from Bukowina.

Emperor William, according to Berlin advices, is with the Germany army east.

Field Marshal French, commander of the British expeditionary forces, in an official statement, gives an optimistic view of the situation in France and Belgium. His report brings the operation only up to November 20, but he concludes by saying signs are in evidence that "we are possibly in the last stages of the battle from Ypres to Armentieres," as the German artillery fire had slackened and infantry attacks virtually had ceased.

MORE GOOD FROM WOMAN'S CIVIC LEGUE

Anyone who has in mind the suffering and privation of the poor and needy, while they themselves are enjoying camparative plenty, and have something to be proud of, and something to spare,—he or she is a measure of breadth in the estimation of sympathy and mercy. And there need be no fear that full compensation will not be returned to that benefactor.

Such is what the Women's Civic Leage of Clanton is proving to be. Besides the things that they are doing for the immediate satisfaction and comfort of the the town and its people, its schools and public places, it will be noticed that the good ladies have had a thought of how the poor and destitute of this community would pass through the Christmas season, which is soon to be here, with its universal song ot gladnes.

They have started a movement to raise funds with which to purchase something useful and worth while to give to those who need help, and give it at Christmas, that their song of thankfullness may join with that of the whole Christian world.

You have an opportudity to help in this movement. A subscription list has been started for this fund, and anyone who desiree may give what he or she wishes. The money will be placed in the hands of of a committee of the ladies of the league, to be disposed of as they may deem best, but with the sole intention of making some poor hearts glad that would otherwise be left without anything to cheer them tn the jubilant period of all the world.

Of course we are all poor; none of us are rich. But some will be better prepared to enjoy Christmas than others. Let us who can help those who can't, and all join "Tiny Tim" in his hearty and happy outburst, "God bless us all."

At a meeting of the National Committee of the Progressive party held in Chicago, Wednesday, Hiram W. Johnson, Governor of California, was boomed for the presidedcy in 1916.

RELATIONS BETWEEN THE CHURCHES OF EUROPE AND OF AMERICA

The Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America will recommend to the executive committee, consisting of official representatives of all the constituent bodies of the council, which meets at Richmond, December 9th to 11th, that messengers, to include the Secretary of the Council, be sent to visit the Christian churches of the nation of Europe to convey the goodwill and sympathy of the Christian churches in America, and that they may hold prayer and conference together, at such a time as may be found most advisable and opportune.

It is also to be recommended that the Federal council issue a suitable utterance with the same end in view, in response to the communications which have come to the council from the leaders of the various European churches.

The council's commission on Relations with Japan some time ago designated the president, Prof. Shailer Matthews, to go to Japan for conveying to all those Christian churches, missionaries and people of that nation, the good-will and desire for friendly relations, of the American churches.

Abont a year ago the council projected plans for a world congress for the general work of the churches, which will be continued, it being felt that the war should not afford any reason for that cessation of Christian activities, especially those for the united action of the churches.

GINNERS ASSOCIATION MEMPHIS, TENNESSSEE

Announcement has been made of the National Convention of Ginners, to be held at Memphis, Tennesssee, on January the first and second, 1915. We are requested to invite every ginner in Chilton county to attend the Convention. Reduced rates will be given on all railroads.

Following are a few of the things that may be done at the Convention:

Unless prices advance on lint and seed, to consider the adyisability of nailing each gin up in 1915 as soon as it has ginned one-half of the number of bales ginned in 1914. By such steps in all the South, lint and seed will advance.

To start a movement to use nothing but cotton bagging. This will consume $8,000,000,00 worth of cotton at home.

To extend the present system of the Ginners Association in buying bagging direct from the factory, and which has saved the ginners who have co-operated with the Association, thousands of dollars.

The plan provides that each ginner sign a pledge or petition, not to gin more than half the number of bales in 1916, as he ginned in 1914; and each ginner to pay $10.00 per bale for each bale he gins in excess of the half. And the ginner to receive twice the fee or toll in 1915 that he received in 1914.

It is contended by many that the only salvation for the cotton grower in years to come is curtailment of production. It seems that with the production hereafter cut in half, there should be no trouble in getting a reasonable price. And it is certain that if the ginners will not gin more than half as much cotton in 1915 as they ginned in 1914, right there is all the curtailment that is needed in production. The farmer will not raise his full crop of cotton if he knows he cannot get over half of it ginned.

The proposed system will not affect the ginner at all; he will get double price for the half crop he gins, and consequently his earnings are the same as before.

Loyal to His City.

"I understand," said a visitor from Philadelpia to a friend in Boston. "that you have so high an opinion of your city that you think heaven must be like Boston." "Well," was the reply, with a shrug of the shoulders, "I believe I did say so some time ago, but you know Boston has improved a great deal in the last few years."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

There are three relationships in human life—commercial, which depend on what you have; social, which depend on what you do; and real, which depend on what you are.

Cause of Water Bubbling.

There is an erroneous impression that water bubbling violently is hotter than water at the boiling point. As a mater of fact, the ebullition is caused by the escaping steam, which means lost heat. All water (except in a high elevation) reaches the boiling point at 212 degrees Fahrenheit and however fast or slow the water may be boiling it remains at that temperature.

Truly Remarkable Family.

A laborer's remarkable record surprised the Baltinglass (County Wicklow, Ireland) rural council when applications for cottages were being discussed. It was stated that one of the applicants, John Murphy, had been married five times, and has 41 children. Murphy proudly asserted that his eldest "child" was aged fifty, and the youngest a baby, and all the family were fed on rabbits.

Same Old Referee, "Irregardless."

At a smoker given by an athletic club in Kansas City recently, at which several lively boxing bouts were the chief attraction, the master of ceremonies announced: "There has been some criticisms made about the decision of the referee at the last smoker. But I want to say the same referee will continue to act, irregardless of them aspersions."—Kansas City Star.

Nicknames of Prize Fighters.

There was a time when nearly every prominent prize fighter had a nickname more generally used by admirers than his real name, and some of these were picturesque. William Thompson, who won the championship in 1835, was known as Bendigo. The Australian mining town was named after him, and although some of its inhabitants managed to have it rechristened Sandhurst, the new name never caught on.

OUR COMBINATION SUBSCRIPTION OFFERS

There are some of our subscribers who are behind with their dues for The Union-Banner, and it is very necessary that they be paid up right away; necessary for two reasons. First, we are greatly in need of the money; second, the papers must be stopped if they become a year behind. As an enducement to those who who are delinquent, we have arranged some very attractive combination offers, whereby we are able to give the very best values for their money. Following are some of the clubs we have secured:

(1) The UNION-BANNER and the Tri-Weekly Constitution, both	$1.50
(2) The UNION-BANNER and the Montgomery Daily Times, both	2.00
(3) The UNION-BANNER and the Alabama Weekly Times, both	1.00
(4) The UNION-BANNER and the Progressive Farmer, both for	1.25
(5) The UNION-BANNER and the Southern Ruralist, both for	1.00
(6) The UNION-BANNER and the Yellow Jacket, both for	1.00

We want you to look over this list, and if you are behind with your subscription, select one of the clubs, and let us hear from you. If you send remittance by mail, simply give the number of the club you want and send the proper amount—we will do the rest.

Government Advises Farmers To Raise Live Stock for Money.

Washington, D. C. Dec. 1.—Four measures are being recommended by the U. S. Department of Agriculture to the farmers of the South in order to remedy the conditions created by the collapse of the cotton market. These are:

1. The reduction of expenses by the production of more food for the family and more grain and forage for the live stock.

2. The substitution of other money crops for part of the cotton acreage.

3. The raising of more live stock.

4. The addition of humus to the soil in order to make fertilizer less expensive.

The first thing to be done, say the Government specialists is to plant winter crops to be used partly for winter and spring grazing, partly for spring hay and grain and partly for cover crops to be turned back into the soil for fertilizing puposes. These crops should include oats for grain, and oats barley, or rye for hay, and any one of these for winter and spring grazing or for the humus value. Altough October and November are fhe best months for planting these crops in the cotton country, the time may be extended into the winter. The winter crops should be followed by summer legumes such as cowpeas, clover, etc. Fall and winter vegetables should be planted for home use and for the market.

Hogs are recommended as the best form of live stock to grow. Immediate steps should be taken to increase the profits from hogs and hog products by the planting of crops for winter and spring grazing, to be followed by summer and fall crops for the same purpose. Growers are also being warned to take rigid precautions against hog cholera. If strict quarintine measures are adopted and if the animals, when threatened, are inoculated with anti-hog-cholera serum, growers should suffer little loss from this source.

In Alabama and Mississippi attention is called particularly to the possibilities in oats. They can be grown with a minimum amount of labor, can be used as a grazing crop in the winter, will greatly reduce the feed bill the following summer, and any surplus can be readily marketed. An instance is given of a Mississippi farmer who raised 12,440 bushels of oats on 300 acres and then made it yield in addition some forage crop. To this man cotton was a surplus crop.

The character of the forage crop depends on the nature of the land. On sandy soil oats may be followed with peas or with a mixture or peas and sorghum. On the lime lands of the black prairie belt melilotus sown on the oats in February or March should furnish two cuttings of valuable hay after the oats are harvested. On the rich alluvial soils of the "delta" and bottom lands along rivers and creeks lespedeza sown on the oats in February will produce a fall crop of fine hay and also greatly improve the fertility of the land.

ATTRACTIVE BOOKLETS SOUTHERN EXPRESS CO.

The Southern Express Company, with its four thousand offices throughout the South, has inaugurated a system of co-operative marketing which means much to the dealers, shippers and growers in Alabama.

In an effort to bring the dealer, shipper and grower into closer contact with the consumer, this Company has compiled four most attractive booklets on the following subjects:

List of dealers in and shippers and growers of Oranges, Lemons, Limes, Pineapples, etc. on the lines of the Southern Express Company; another pamphlet containing information with reference to Fish, Oysters, Shrimp, Crabs and Clams; another on Butter, Eggs and Poultry, and still another on Fruit and Vegetables.

These pamphlets give the names of the shippers and post office address, the products to be shipped, and during what season shipments are made.

The pamphlets are placed in the hands of the agents at the large distributing points in the territory covered by the Company, and on the front page of the publications there is written "Agents cannot more effectively solicit business than by creating it through the placing of consumers or dealers in direct communication with producers."

The Southern Express Company is conducting an extensive advertising campaign in the interest of its service, laying special stress upon the features enumerated herewith and the first of the series of advertisements to be run by this Company along this line appears elsewhere in this issue.

This campaign promises to do much toward enlarging the market for Alabama products in the nearby states.

Alabama Sufferers Are Saved Health Comfort And Fortunes

Users of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy Tell of Remarkable Results Quickly Gained.

Most human ills come from the stomach. Most of these ailments can be cured. Thousands suffer from stomach troubles needlessly, but thousands of others nave found health in the use of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy—the remedy with the most remarkable of records.

Here are the words of two users of this remedy in Alabama:

"I feel like a new man. I am thankful I saw your ad. I am satisfied deyond a shadow of a doubt I am on the 'road to Wellville.' "—H. R. DE LAYE, DeLaye's News Agency, Birmingham Ala.

"I have taken your trial treatment and it has done me wonders of good. I had four attacks of what the doctor called gall stone colic before I took your treatment, and I have not had one since."—J. W. TIDWELL, R. F. D. No. 2, Jasper, Ala.

These statements show just how quickly you may expect results from Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. It clears out the mucoid and catarrhal accretions and removes poisonous matter naturally. Many declair they have been saved from operations; many are sure it has saved their lives.

We want all people who have chronic stomach trouble or constipation, no matter of how long standing, to try one dose of Mayr's Wondeful Stomach Semedy—one dose will convince you This is the medicine so many of our people have been taking with surprising results. The most thorough system cleaner we ever sold. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy is now sold her by. Upchurch Drug Company and druggist everywhere.

DEVASTATION

Devastation is rampant in Europe. Thousands of people are giving up their lives. Not only are millions of dollars being spent, but production has ceased. Industry is paralyzed.

Any great world disaster casts its shadow around the entire earth. People in every walk of life suffer. Just now the South, the cotton producing section of the world, is in a slump.

The brains and energy and financial resources of the entire country are busy, devising ways and means to relieve the situation.

In the meantime it is encumbent on our people to look conditions squarely in the face; to fully realize the necessity of meeting the situation with hope and determination.

The South is not pauperized. It has experienced, and risen superior to, far greater troubles. Let us conserve our possessions, readjust our resources, plan our economies, and get down to business on a basis imposed by changed conditions.

The L. & N. writes of these things because, like the people, the L. & N. has suffered. Nothing can affect the people without having a corresponding effect on the L. & N.

Both freight and passenger traffic has dropped with a thud. Fixed charges remained the same. Net result, loss in revenue. There is no alternative other than to reduce operating expenses. You cannot live at the rate you have been accustomed unless you go into debt.

While we are not alarmists in any sense of the word, we wish to express the opinion that this is a time for repression of our fault finding tendencies; a time to control our extravagant impulses.

We mention these things because they are pertinent to the times and because the L. & N. is in the same boat as the individual who must be careful in the management of his business affairs.

Let's help one another.

Little Viewer,

Way Out of the Difficulty.

Before being taken to visit friends for luncheon she was admonished not to ask for her favorite portion of chicken, the drumstick. Upon being asked which piece she would like she remarked, at the same time looking at her mother wistfully, "You put it over here and I'll help myself."

Too Long to Be Entirely Valid.

Oliver Knox read some published letters in a breach-of-promise suit, and laughed. "This idiot wrote to the girl that he would love her always," he commented. "Now I contend that 'always' is the longest word in the dictionary, and no wise man ever uses it." "No," retorted his discerning wife, "and no wise woman would believe him if he did."

GREAT NEED FOR COURTESY

Matter Really Costs Very Little, Yet It Means So Much to the Recipient.

After the nations of the world have proved that they are through with war by melting up all their armament, the great reform next in order will be that of instituting universal courtesy. This reform may be said to be on its feet, even at the present time, but it is wobbly-legged and needs a great deal of encouragement.

We have some very courteous individuals in our midst, most of whom were born that way and who insist on staying that way despite all temptations to the contrary; but we have some who are almost hopeless.

Courtesy is just another name for unselfishness. The greedy, self-centered individual is never courteous, no matter what kind of manners he displays in public. Courtesy does not reveal itself for effect; it is not calculating. It acts out of the promptings of consideration for the just claims and rights of others, and, in smaller matters at least, it is even willing to make sacrifices. It is the sense of service revealed in action.

When you give your neighbor a smile instead of a frown you do him a real service, for you cause him to smile and be happy. It is courteous, therefore, to smile.

When you smother the needless word of criticism you save some one a pang. It is courteous, therefore, to control your tongue.

It doesn't matter very much at just what angle you tip your hat to a lady, although it is commendable to regard such points. The important thing is to look like you were glad of the opportunity to tip it. That is the real courtesy.

If the world would start out today to follow two rules—smile and avoid mean gossip—it would be almost civilized at the end of a year.

COULDN'T ATTEND TO BOTH

Grocery Clerk Found That Putting Up Orders and Talking Baseball Didn't Go Together.

The manager of a large Portland (Ore.) grocery store took great pleasure in relating a few "plays" pulled off by one of his clerks. This clerk is a "fan." One of those absorbed, wild and woolly baseball lovers who can talk, expand and argue the great game at any time and anywhere. His duties at the store keep him anchored most of the time, though on special occasions he is assigned to the teams.

Among his duties is to put up orders for customers in the high-toned section of the city. While he was engaged in this work the other day one of his chums (also a "fan") came in and they began to talk baseball. The grocery clerk kept on putting up the orders, but his thoughts were all on that important subject, baseball.

In the course of his argument he went to the shelf and got a case of starch instead of a package of sugar; put up tomatoes instead of potatoes, put in a bag of flour in place of an order for lard; read maple sirup instead of condensed milk, and would have drawn molasses into the kerosene can if some one had not called him away for a moment as he started for the molasses barrel.

For a time this was the way that his orders went out and it caused a riot among three or four of the best customers. He is still a good deal of a "fan," but he is not going to put up any orders while engrossed in his favorite subject.

Protested War With England.

One hundred years ago Massachusetts sent a circular letter to the other New England states inviting them to send delegates to a convention in Hartford to protest against the continuance of the war with England. The presence of the British and the demoralization of the shipping had long weighed heavily on the people of New England. While the loyalty and patriotism of the citizens were never in question, there was a certain element, made up principally of the political opponents of President Madison, who were confirmed in their hostility to the war. It was said at the time that their opposition went so far as to contemplate secession or obstruction to the government in prosecuting the war, but this was stoutly denied by those responsible for the Hartford convention.

Land Engagement in 1812.

One hundred years ago the Americans and British met in a skirmish at Lyons Creek, near the Niagara frontier. This was the last long engagement fought in the North in the War of 1812. The action was between several detachments of United States regulars, with a small party of dragoons and riflemen, about nine hundred men in all, and a select British corps of 1,300 men. The British made the attack, and after some sharp fighting were repulsed with considerable loss. The loss on the American side amounted to 68 killed, wounded and missing. Soon after this date the American army, after destroying Fort Erie, retired across the border and went into winter quarters at Buffalo, Black Rock and Batavia.

The New Baby is World's Wonder

Every tiny infant makes life's perspective wider and brighter. And whatever there is to enhance its arrival and to ease and comfort the expectant mother should be given attention. Among the real helpful things is an external abdominal application known as "Mother's Friend." There is scarcely a community but what has its enthusiastic admirer of this splendid embrocation. It is so well thought of by women who know that most drug stores throughout the United States carry "Mother's Friend" as one of their staple and reliable remedies. It is applied to the abdominal muscles to relieve the strain on ligaments and tendons.

Those who have used it refer to the ease and comfort experienced during the period of expectancy; they particularly refer to the absence of nausea, often so prevalent as a result of the natural expansion. In a little book are described more fully the many reasons why "Mother's Friend" has been a friend indeed to women with timely hints, suggestions and helps for ready reference. It should be in all homes. "Mother's Friend" may be had of almost any druggist, but if you fail to find it write us direct and also write for book to Bradfield Regulator Co., 403 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

American Invasion of Canada.

One hundred years ago an American force of 720 men, in command of Gen. Duncan McArthur, penetrated 200 miles into Canada and captured numerous prisoners and large quantities of war supplies before beginning the return to Detroit. The raid was a part of a bold plan projected and partly accomplished by General McArthur with the object of conquering upper Canada, and the total success of which was prevented only by the failure of the forces of General Izard to co-operate with him. General McArthur was a distinguished soldier of the War of 1812 and at the time of his daring raid he was in command of the Army of the West. In later years, following the close of the war, he served as representative in congress and as governor of Ohio. His death occurred at his home near Chillicothe, O., in 1839.

For Study of Aeronautics.

There are already six great aerodynamical laboratories scattered throughout the world. The oldest of these is that directed by Doctor Riabonchinsky, at Koutchino, in Russia; next comes that of M. Eiffel in Paris, a private institution where this famous engineer has carried out research work of inestimable value for years past. Paris possesses another laboratory, planned on an ambitious scale, founded at St. Cyr through the generosity of M. Deutsch and controlled by the University of Paris. At Rome there exists a well-quipped laboratory belonging to the Italian aviation corps, and finally there is the admirable aeronautical section of the national physical laboratory at Teddington.

The "Orto" in Georgia.

An indignant Georgia farmer sent this inquiry to the Atlanta Constitution: "One o' them city ortomobiles killed my bull, and I don't know what number it was. The number of the bull was branded to him, but that don't do me no good. What I want to know is: Can the state give me the number of the orto? Hit was a red one, with a white man in it and going like heli, so to speak."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Surprise Party At Mt. Creek

On last Tuesday evening Misses Katie Smith of Mt. Creek and Florence Smith of Clanton, who is visiting at the home of Mr. Tom Smith, were surprised by a number of the young people of the village at an early evening hour.

Mrs. Thos. Smith was "on to the fact" of the young people coming in time for her to make arrangements for refreshments and goed eatables. Miss Kate and Miss Florence met the visitors on the veranda and welcomed them. Games and music caused the hours to pass hurriedly away until the hour of midnight, when the genial "Tom" announced that he had "sealed up" 275 gallons of syrup that evening and that he had lots of cain yet to grind the next day. This, the young people understood as a gentle hint and immediately commenced to "crawl into their buggies and hit the road for home."

Danger in Taking Cold.

The public health as well as private comfort both would profit if general heed were given to the warnings of the departments of health and charities as to the dangers involved in catching cold. To remind people that pneumonia and consumption often have their origin in a common cold ought in itself to be enough to lead them to guard against what is in its after effects oftentimes one of the most dangerous of diseases.

Fan-Shaped Tree.

Elm trees have been planted in the squares and parks of our city where you may make their acquaintance. They are trees you can learn to recognize at a distance because of their general form or habit of growth. A well-grown tree is broad and rather flat across the top, and for this reason it is called a fan-shaped tree.

James T. Wheeler

Mountain Creek, Ala., Nov. 28

Veteran James T. Wheeler, aged 70 years, died at the Old Soldiers' Home Hospital on November 27th. The deceased served during the Civil War as a soldier in Russell's 4th Alabama Cavalry, Company D.

Captain J. M. Simpson, commandant of the Home, notified Mr. Wheeler's friends at Athens, Ala., of his death, and they ordered the body to be shipped by Saturday afternoon train to Athens, where interment was made on Sunday, November 29th.

Best Way to Keep Apples.

The best vessels in which to keep apples are crates or baskets that permit ventilation, and also permit handling the fruit to prevent bruising When it commences to reach its full stage of ripening it is well to sort it occasionally, and remove and use any that are commencing to decay, or that are becoming soft or overripe. Firm specimens can be wrapped in pieces of ordinary newspaper and put in ventilated crates, baskets or barrels in a cool place, and there kept for a longer time than when not so wrapped.

Peculiar Harvest Festival.

At the end of the harvest season in Malabar there takes place the dance of the drummers, a popular function, in which the principal character is a weird figure supposed to represent the sacred cow of the gods, Kamachenu. A small boy carries this about while the other performers, decked out in primitive fashion with painted bodices and hideous masks, go through a weird dance, accompanied by much drum-beating and singing.

NOTICE TO NON-RESIDENTS

The State of Alabama, Chilton county.

In Chancery at Clanton, Ala., 7th. District, N.E. Chancery Division. Leona Sanders vs. Ocie Sanders. In this cause it is made to appear to the Register, by the affidavit of J. O. Purifies Blood With Telling Effect

Gives Conscious Evidence of Its Direct Action.

S. S. S., the famous blood purifier, almost talks as it sweeps its way through the circulation. Its action is so direct that very often in some forms of skin affliction the appearance of the eruptions changes over night, the itch and redness are gone and recovery begins immediately.

As a matter of fact, there is one ingredient in S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating each cellular part of the body to the healthy and judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. That is why it regenerates the blood supply; why it has such a tremendous influence in overcoming eczema, rash, pimples, and all skin afflictions.

And in regenerating the tissues S. S. S. has a rapid and positive antidotal effect upon all those irritating influences that cause rheumatism, sore throat, weak eyes, loss of weight, thin, pale cheeks, and that weariness of muscle and nerve that is generally experienced as spring fever. Get a bottle of S. S. S. at any drug store, and in a few days you will not only feel bright and energetic, but you will be the picture of new life. S. S. S. is prepared only in the laboratory of The Swift Specific Co., 534 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., who maintain a very efficient Medical Department, where all who have any blood disorder of a stubborn nature may write freely for advice and a special book of instruction. S. S. S. is sold everywhere by drug stores, department and general stores, but beware of all substitutes. Do not accept them.

OLD CUSTOM STILL SURVIVES

Austrian Peasants Retain the Subserviency That Was Enforced During Days of Feudalism.

While I was the guest of Prince A. at his Austrian castle, writes a contributor to Chambers' Journal, Princess Karl took me under her special guidance. She insisted that I should make acquaintance with the village the morning after my arrival.

"You had better put on gloves, or at any rate the right-hand glove," she said, as I met her at the great entrance.

"I never wear gloves if I can help it," I answered. "And on a hot day like this!"

She laughed. "Well, I have warned you. You must buy your experience."

We descended the steep slope to the village, and stopped at the post office; it was likewise a cafe and a general provision store. Several peasants sat at a table drinking beer, and two or three women were talking with the postmistress. When we entered, the postmistress ran from behind her counter, the peasants rose from their bench, and crowding round the Princess Karl, they all kissed her right hand. To my intense surprise, after they had kissed the princess' hand, they each bestowed a similar attention on me.

"I warned you to wear a glove," said the princess, when the ceremony was over. "Now you know the reason. You will find that whenever you meet peasants, they will kiss your hand, They even leave their work in the fields, and run out into the road if they see you passing. Last year a young attache from the French embassy was staying here, and he had a great fright. He was walking along a road between some bean fields. The peasants were taking in the harvest, and to his horror he saw them all, men and women, suddenly throw down their scythes and rakes and rush toward him from both sides. He was convinced that they were going to attack and rob him; and so he took to his heels and ran. He never stopped until he got to the Schloss; to this day he will not believe that the poor peasants only wished to kiss his hand as a mark of respect to an excellenz. At my home in Hungary the peasants kneel down and kiss the hem of your dress."

In these days such subservience seems incredible; but the custom is a survival of the days when all the peasants were slaves, and the nobles had the power of life and death over them.

WOULD AID COTTON GROWERS

Flour-Milling Firm Urges Its Customers to Accept Deliveries of Product in Cotton Sacks.

In order to increase the demand for cotton, one of the largest flour-milling firms in America has directed its managers and salesmen all over the country to urge its customers to accept deliveries of flour that are shipped in cotton instead of jute sacks. Hitherto jute imported from India has been used extensively for shipments of flour, both to home and foreign markets. The sacks employed hold 140 pounds each. If the trade can be induced to accept shipments in cotton sacks holding 98 pounds each, there will be a marked increase in the demand for home-grown cotton, and the action of the flour-milling firm is regarded as a long step in this direction. Anything that will improve the financial condition of the cotton growers, it is pointed out, will increase the volume of their cash purchases and thus benefit general business conditions. For this reason it is believed that the trade will not insist on the jute sacks used hitherto.

One Result of War of 1812.

One hundred years ago the War of 1812 had virtually closed so far as the operations in the North were concerned. Henceforth the activities of the opposing forces were to be confined to the South. The hope of obtaining the Floridas had encouraged the Southern states to enter into the war. The president had expected congress to approve the seizure of Spanish Florida. Andrew Jackson, as the most prominent military man in the South, was appointed major general of militia. Congress was at first reluctant to act in the matter of Florida, which belonged to Spain, a friendly power. But at last a bill was signed authorizing the seizing of Western Florida and the occupation of Mobile, Pensacola and other points. Shortly afterward Pensacola was captured. This was the only gain of territory made during the war.

Important Inheritance Decision.

(By Gus Jackson)

Forty years ago the farmer ginned his cotton with horse power, and fed it into the gins with his hands; he pressed it into bales with a large wooden press. He ground his sorghum on a wooden mill, and cooked the juice in a wash pot. He made his own plowstocks of white oak timber, and his horse collars of corn shucks. He built his garden fence without a singie nail; put his posts in the ground and bored holes in them to insert the railing; then as he called it, he "wattled" the palings in.

How does he do today? His cotton is ginned by steam and electric power; fed into the gins, pressed into bales, weighed, and handled all by the same method. His cane is ground by an expensive foreigh manufactured mill, and the syrup boiled in a copper pan. His plows, stocks and all other utensils are of a manufactured variety. His garden fence is built of costly wire.

Under the former conditions forty years ago, he had time to enjoy life too, and hardly ever said anything about hard times.

When he had "laid by" his crop he hunted sqirrels and other game, and killed it with a flint and steel rifle. He would visit his neighbor in the afternoons, eat water melons, play marbles and have a good time, not worried about anything. He would take his family and go sit with his nearest neighbor till bed time; parch peanuts, eat water melons and out of it all get pure and wholesome enjoyment.

Mother cooked in ovens and skillets in front of the fire on the hearthstones—and the cooking she did was not the kind to be sneered at, nor easy to be excelled. It was good. She and the girls "carded" cotton into rolls, spun them into thread, and with the family loom made the cloth that was used to clothe themselves and father and brother.

Such is not the case today. The farmer has learned to produce more stuff with easier means. But some of them let style and custom get ahead of them, that it takes digging from daylight till dark to keep up.

It takes twenty dollars to keep Sis just "sorter, with the styles now, where it took only two dollars to foot the bill then. For Tom it is still worse. He can't work like he could forty years ago. It takes ten times as much to dress him, then he sometimes get a bit disorderly, and father has to pay out a big fine on him or let him go to jail.

Again the same question arises: "How can the farmer get relief?"

Beads' Place in Art.

In the archaic art of all the prehistoric civilization the use of beads is shown on even the crudest paintings and sculptures; and, as we approach the later ages, of which we possess at least crude written records, we find the bead still maintaining its importance as the chief feminine decoration. In fact, it may be accepted without hesitation that practically all our own articles of jewelry are derived from prototypes which were originally but manners of wearing strings or pendants of beads.

The Rothschilds.

Of course any attempt by an outsider at estimating the wealth of the Rothschilds must be in the nature of a guess, but there are excellent reasons for concluding that the family is worth at least $1,400,000,000.

$100 Reward, $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

"Clean Up the Bowels and Keep Them Clean"

There are many remedies to be had for constipation, but the difficulty is to procure one that acts without violence. A remedy that does not perform by force what should be accomplished by persuasion is Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets. After using them, Mr. N. A. Waddell, 315 Washington St., Waco, Tex., says:

"Almost all my life I have been troubled with constipation, and have tried many remedies, all of which seemed to cause pain without giving much relief. I finally tried Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets and found them excellent. Their action is pleasant and mild, and their chocolate taste makes them easy to take. I am more than glad to recommend them."

"Clean up the bowels and keep them clean," is the advice of all physicians, because they realize the danger resulting from habitual constipation. Do not delay too long, but begin proper curative measures.

Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets are a new remedy for this old complaint, and a great improvement over the cathartics you have been using in the past. They taste like candy and work like a charm. A trial will convince you.

Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets are sold by all druggists, at 25 cents a box containing 25 doses. If not found satisfactory after trial, return the box to your druggist and he will return your money. 12

WAVED FAREWELL BY PROXY

After This, Who Shall Say English Business Man Is Not Full of Resources.

The other morning, as a departing transatlantic steamer was casting off its lines and swinging out into the stream, an elderly business man hastily embraced a lady who was one of the passengers, and rushed down the gang-plank to the wharf, says the London Answers.

Going hurriedly up to a melancholy loafer who was watching the busy crowd, the gentleman drew him behind a pile of baggage and said:

"Want to earn a shilling or two?"

"You bet I do."

"You see that lady in black on the bridge there?" said the elderly one.

"Certainly."

"Well, that's my wife going abroad Now, of course, she'll expect me to stand here for the next 20 minutes while the steamer is backing and filling in, waving my handkerchief and watching her out of sight. D'ye see?"

"I do, sir."

"Well, I'm too busy to humbug about here; stock to buy, biz to attend to She's a little near-sighted, so I'll just engage you to wave this handkerchief instead. It's a big one, with a red border, and as long as she sees it she'll think it's me. Come up to 202 Bangup street when they are well off, and I'll pay you."

"S'posin' she looks through a telescope, or somethin'?"

"In that case you'll have to bury your face in the handkerchief and do the great weep act."

"That'll be extra payment."

"All right. Time is money. Look sharp, now. You can kiss your hand a few times at, say, a penny per kiss."

And closing his watch with a snap, the overdriven business man rushed off.

Today's action by the supreme court was taken on his final recourse in the courts.

PROMINENT CLANTON CITIZEN DIED SUNDAY

Early Sunday morning Mr. M. C. Jones, better known to his many friends in this county as "Crit" Jones, passed away at the termination of a lengthly illness. For many months he had been confined with an affliction of the heart, under circumstances of very feeble health.

The deceased was a brother of Sheriff Jones and Mr. B.E. Jones with whom he was engaged in the mercantile bnsiness here. He is survived by a wife and two children.

Mr. Jones was unquestionably one of the most highly esteemed citizens of Clanton. Every man was his friend, and he at all times and in all ways showed himself to be a free hearted, kind and patriotic citizen. He was a member of the Clanton Camp, W. O. W., under auspecies of which Order the funeral services were held with his remains Sunday afternoon. Judge S. M. Adams pronounced the last sad tributes to his earthly remains from the pulpit of the Methodist church here.

Little Girl Died Here Monday

Early Monday morning the little six year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Wagoner succumed to an attack of throat trouble, following an illness of short duration.

Teachers Examination

The next State examination for Teachers will be held at Clanton at the Court House, beginning at ten o'clock, a.m., on the third Monday in December, 1914. All applicants should be present by 9 a.m. for registration, except those who intend to file a second grade and take for first grade; and they must be present by noon Tuesday.

W. T. Bean,
County Supt. Education.

District Sunday Schools Convene

The District Sunday School Convention was held at Shady Grove Saturday, December 5th. The meeting was splendid. The state workers present were Mrs. Palmer and Miss Shaw of Montgomery. All present took forward steps to improve all the schools.

Mountain Creek

As Moses lifted up the serpent in the Wilderness, so it is that dear oid Chilton has been elevated far above the other counties of the state. Moses instructed the Children of Israel to look upon that Brazen Serpent if they wished to be saved. We can, with equal candor, invite other counties to take a look at Chilton, and let it be a lamp unto their feet and a light unto their pathway.

Thanksgiving day has recently passed, and we have much for which we feel thankful. We are very thankful that the Lord in His kindness has spared our lives through another year, and we are very thankful for His kindness in many other ways.

We are very proud of the fact that we rounded up over five hundred majority in our last election in this county.

We learn from the sacred text that there is joy among the angrls, and their praise rings more sweetly when a sinner has repented and from evil turns away. We strive to be like those heavenly messengers, and we too rejoice to see so many converts. We gladly receive those who have long wandered in darkness and now desires to be shown the light.

Like a drowning man clinging to a straw, those few Dems we have left say, that if it had not been for the European war business would have been good,—that cotton would have been a good price. Well, they can induce some people to take that medicine, but as for us we will let them pass it on.

With best wishes and kindest regards, I am

Your Progressive friend
Chas. Cooper.

A FEW OLD RECORDS

Editor Union-Banner:

Thanksgiving day has just past and I want to say that I have many things to thank God for. I have always had fairly good health. Will soon be 51 years old, and have always had something to eat about all the time. But I have come through some very hard places in my life.

Mr. Editor, I got to rambling around in my old thinkin trunk the other day and came across some records of some things I remember happened something like twenty years ago. You all know I am ignorant and don't read history; but I remember they elected Grover Cleveland president and we had very good times during his first administration. Why? Because the Republicans had the powor in Congress and Senate.

But Grover said if you will elect me the second time, and give the Democrats both houses, we will do great things. So the people did it, and they went to work, put us on the free list, all kinds of business went to the bad, they put men to tramping and children and women to starving. The old farmers cotton went to 4 and 5 cents, and wheat to 45 and 50 cents per bushel.

With such conditions the people became disgusted, and elected McKinley, who with Roosevelt and Taft following, set things right again and we had prosperity till 1912.

Remember when Roosevelt got after Rockfefeller and Morgan they called in their money and were going to bring a panic on his administration. But the government was given power to issue script, and business went on at its normal.

Now, we are on the free list again, with Wilson at the head and a full Democratic house and senate. The national treasury has been exhausted in less than two years. Women and children are daily nearing starvation and men are idle by the thousands. Just as soon as the war tax is collected we will have the soup houses again.

But old farmet, there is no help for you. About the best you can do is to let your cotton go at half price, live scanty on peas and corn bread, wear your old patched cloths next year and get as near out of debt as you can. Then be ready to put that Wilson gang out in 1916, so we may enjoy prosperity again for another twenty years.

Mr, Editor, I will try to continue my records in another article some time right soon.

Very respectfully,
J. N. Scott.

Jemison, Ala., Dec. 4, 1914.

Jumbo

Editor Union-Banner.—Please let me have space in your paper to say a few words. We are having some bad weather and a lot of bad colds.

The death angel visited the home of Mr, and Mrs. Dothard Noah and took from them their little seven months old baby. It is hard to give them up but God knows best and we might as well submit to His will. All was done for the little dear one that the doctor and its relatives, could but God Saw fit to take him.

Churches of The Unity Association

Dear Brethren: It has been my desire to have a church to church campaign in the Association for some time past. Such a campaign would do a world of good to the churches visited.

A church to church campaign means that we are to have a representative of the State Board, a representative of the Foreign Mission Board, a representave of the Sunday school Work, and a representative of the Women's Work to visit the churches and hold a one day meeting in each church. There will be no expense, except to entertain the speakers the day they are with you. Will every pastor and church in the Association write me at once if you will join in such a move as this? I beg you Brethren, not to disappoint me, but write me now, and let's make our Association one of the best in the state.

Yours for service,
R. R. Brasher.

UNION SPRINGS

Everything is quiet. The holidays are drawing near, but dull, Oh my! The panic is on every tongue. The people voted away confidence and prosperity, and received distrust, panic and poverty; but they will make a change the first opportunity. Until then we must wait and endure.

We had a good singing Sunday afternoon; it was well attended.

Mr. Will Smitherman has moved near Cox's.

On the 18th of December, Mr. J. A. Gillespie, who is now in South Alabama, will lecture on Bible subjects at the Waldrup schoolhouse, in the afternoon and night of the same day. All are invited to come; especially ministers. All interested visitors will be cared for. His lecture will be in line with the far-famed pastor Russell of Brooklyn. His talks will doubtless be right up to the minute, and are calculated to give much light on the future outlook, and be food to those entirely devoted to Christianity. Service strictly undenominational.

Robert Waldrup of Marvel came home last week.

Grady Nix made a flying visit to Beat 2 last week.

J. S. Atchison and wife visited at J. L. Smith's Sunday.

S. M. Ross has lately visited New Orleans.

Miss Vic Martin visited her friends, Miss Waldrup, of Frenwood Sunday.

Prof. Mullins was a welcome visitor at Sunday School Sunday

The Sunday school elected officers and teachers sor the ensuing year on last Sunday as follows:

W. A. Redding, Miss Omar Smith and Mrs. Crumpton were chosen teachers; Miss Tempie Smith was elected Secretary.

Those who studied last Sunday's lesson, "The resurrection of our Lord," doubtless received blessings. The great event foreshadowed the awakening and rising of the dead myraids of the euman race. People are being educated and prepared so the great event will not frighten them. J. A. Logan, a former Chiltonian, once said in a lecture that "We would probably read in bold headlines in the papers that Abraham had appeared in Palestine restored to life." People should be prepared for that event by increasing light and knowledge so that it would not shock them.

Thanks

Editor Union-Banner. — Will you allow us space in your dear paper to express our thanks on behalf of the inmates of the county alms house, to the teachers and pupils of Thorsby Institute as well to the generous citizens and ladies of the town, for their extreme kindness in remembering the unfortunate inmates under our care, in way of the splendid thanksgiving report sent by them as well as the beautiful songs rendered by the teachers of the Institute. These ever generous people never forget the inmates, but on every occasion remember the poor in a very substantial manner. The world would be much better off if there were more such people as constitute Thorsby; and the miserable lives of the poor would be rendered much brighter. To say that all enjoyed the thanksgiving dinner but slightly expresses it.

Again thanking each and every one of those good people as well as the paper for publishing this, we remain

W. A. Huckabee, Supt.,
Mrs. Fronie Huckabee,
Mrs. Annie Mae Culp.

In Memory Of Mrs. N.A. Dobbs

Elizabeth Dobbs, the loving and devoted wife of Rev. N. A. Dobbs, departed this life on the 19th day of last month. The lady was striken with paralysis last January, and has been helpless ever since. Her remains were laid to rest in Pleasant Grove cemetery on Nov. 20., in the presence of many of her friends and mourning relatives. The deceased was a lady of 92 years of age.

Notice of the incorporation of the Coosa County Bank of Rockford has been filed with the Secretary of State at Montgomery. The new institution is capitalized at $20,000.

WAR AT A GLANCE

The Germans have been driven from Ternelles by the heavy artillery fire of the French. This news was contained in an official communication from Berlin. The Germans claim to have repulsed attacks by the allies at other points along the battle front.

The allies have advanced their lines at many points in Belgium, as well as on the right wing. Along the Aisne, says the Paris despatch, there is nothing new to report.

A great battle for the possession of Lodz and the railroads leading through northern Poland continues without abatement but little news as to the development of the fighting has been allowed to filter through the strict censorship. From unofficial sources it is learned that the Germans having sierced the Russian center, have tried an enveloping movement on both banks.

Despatches from Copenhagen say a fleet of forty British and French warships are outside of Weihlmshaven, the naval base at the Liel Canal, and that they are ready to make an attack on the great fortification.

Anti-Tuberculosis League of Alabama

The first duty of government is the physical protection of the people, but the people must cooperate to protect themselves, however good the law. But in Alabama there is no state protection against tuberculosis. Those who have studied the situation are convinced that the first thing to do is to secure county tuberculosis hospitals under the most efficient management.

The Alabama Anti-Tuberculosis League exists to promote those and other lines of protection.

Its only sonrce of income is the Red Cross Seals. The motto of the League is, "Some seals in every home," for every home alike needs protection, black as well as white, rich as well as poor.

May I not urge therefore upon every one of your readers immediate purchase and use of as many seals as possible? All local anti-tuberculosis service will profit, and the State League will profit in proportion. "Buy and use the seals" should be the slogan for all Alabama. Proper laws will come if the people want them.

Allow me in conclusion to thank the Union-Banner for its hearty support of this work and to say that when the times are hard and danger of infection is increased, because the powers of resistance among the poorest of tne people are so greatly decreased. The time to strike is now.

Again thanking you, I am
Yours cordially,
Geo. Eaves, Secy,
Ala. Anti-Tuberculosis League.

Rev. Chappelle Goes to Tallassee

In the list of appointments that was given out from the Methodist conference recently held at Andalusia, Rev. L. H. S. Chappelle, Sr., who for the past two years has been pastor of the Clanton Methodist Church, was assigned to Tallassee for the ensuing year. Rev Chappelee will be succeeded here by Rev. I. W. Chalker.

Clanton regrets to lose Rev. Chappelle, and his family, but we should not grumble at dividing our blessings with sister cities and churches.

MORTGAGE SALE

Under and by virtue of the power of sale contained in the mortgage executed by J. A. Welden and wife, Mattie T. Welden, to J. E. Weldon on the 13 day of January 1913, which said mortgage is recorded in the office of the Judge of Probate of Chilton county, Alabama, in the record of mortgages in volume 125, beginning on page 532, default having been made in payment of said mortgage, the said J. E. Weldon will proceed to sell on Monday, the 21 day of December, at the court house door in Clanton, Chilton county, Alabama, at public outcry, to the highest bidder for cash, within the legal hours of sale, the following described real estate, situated in the county oi Chilton, state of Alabama, to wit: the west half (w1-2) of the northwest quarter (nw1-4) section 17; the west half (w1-2) of the southwest quarter (sw1-4) section 8; the southeast quarter (se1-4) of the southeast quarter (se1-4) section 7, all in township 20, range 14, and containing 200 acres, more or less.

And said sale will be made for the purpose of paying the balance due upon said mortgage, and the expenses incident to said sale, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

This Nov. 18, 1914.

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second-class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

With the convening of the special session at Washington Monday, the sixty-third Congress of the United States started "the beginning of the end of its career."

Preparations are being made for taking a test vote on Capt. Hobson's proposed prohibition amendment to the Constitution in Congress about December 15.

The Philadelphia Press says that if it is going to be a race between Bryan and Hobson for the prohibition Presidential nomination, fairness requires the statement that Hobson saw it first.

Out of the appropriations that will be made by Congress for the improvement of waterways in the country, Alabama is to receive over $2,000,000,000.00. This provides for improvement of rivers and harbors within the State, making them more adaptible for navigation.

Announcement has been made of a bill which will be introduced in Congress now in session, providing for the appropriation of over $53,000,000.00 for improvement of waterways in the United States. Advocates of the measure in Congress express rigid determination to push it successfully through the course incident to final passage.

CHILTON FARMERS AND HOG RAISING.

There are a number of farmers in this county who know the practical monetary value of the hog raising industry, and are practicing it with a good measure of success. Many of them, besides raising hogs enough to stock their own smoke house in the fall, raise meat to sell; and they make money from selling pigs to other farmers who raise their meat from them.

Mr. John W. Patterson of Route 2 has a record as a hog raiser that is probably not excelled by any in the county. He makes his own meat, meat to sell, and sells his neighbors all the fine pigs they need to make their meat. This farmer has all pastures and necessities for hog raising pretty well perfected.

Since the 20th of last August Mr. Patterson has sold $172.50 worth of pigs, besides the meat he will kill himself this winter. These pigs were pastured on 6 acres of peanuts, and 4 acres of Bermuda grass.

The greatest lesson that is to be learned from the instance we mention of Mr. Patterson, is the value to the southern farmer of the plan of raising what you need at home, and not having to depend on the merchant for it. When the farmer removes from his yearly ration bill that part which goes for his meat supply, the bulk of the load is shifted from his shoulders.

THORSBY NEWS

A recital by the music pupils of Thorsby Institute will be held at Bates Hall Tuesday evening, December 15th., at 7:30 p.m.

Don't forget the concert by the Alkahest Favorites at Thorsby Institute on Thursday night, December 10th, beginning at 7:30 p. m. This will be the best concert given by outside talent which the people of Thorsby will have a chance to hear this season. Admission 50c and 25c.

The county meeting of the Farmers Union will be held in Thorsby December 29 and 30. A number of speakers from the outside are expected, and a good time is assured for all. Farmers of the county, whether now members or not, are invited to attend. Public sessions will be held on both days.

An interesting game of basket ball was played here last Saturday between the team from East Lake and Thorsby Institute. In the first half of the game the visitors had everything their way; but in the second half the Institute Boys got in some good work and surprised the visitors by very nearly winning the game. The referee announced the score as 14 to 13 in favor of East Lake.

Mineral Springs

There was a debate at this place last Friday night between the boys of the Collins Chapel school. The subject was, "Resolved that the Southern States had a moral and constitutional right to secede." Those who represented the affirmative were: Burnie F. Martin and Dalton K. Martin; those on the negative were J. Herlie Mims and Herbert W. Lowery. The speakers selected the judges as follows: J. Leynord Harris, Eddie R. Yeargan, Joner McKee. The affirmative side came out victorious, but it can be truthfully said that both sides were well represented. The good people of Mineral Springs community showed their respect to the boys by furnishing such a large crowd on such an unfavorable night. The Collins Chapel boys are invited to come back again and debate soon.

We realize that a debating society should be organized at this place, and hope that all the boys will help out in securing it.

"Use No Fertilizer" Is Poor Advice.

From "Progressive Farmer."

A friend writing regarding the farming conditions in his section says: "We won't buy any fertilizer."

The ideas of the average man about the use of commercial fertilizer are hard to understand. If there ever was a time when the South should "buy fertilizers" and use them intelligently it will be for the crops grown in 1915. Never before have we needed them more. Every acre planted in cotton and other crops should be fertilized liberally, for from liberal fertilization along intelligent lines the largest net profits are obtained. We need to raise the cotton next year on the smallest possible acreage and put the remainder of the available land in food and feed crops.

The South owes much of the progress it has made during the last quarter century to the use of commercial fertilizers, and it is indeed strange that anyone should look upon their use as undesirable. No system of farming ever devised will permanently build up or even maintain soil fertility without the purchase of phosphorus, and in many sections phosphorus, potash and lime should be purchased by Southern farmers. No matter what criticisms may be justly made of our agricultural practices in the past, the question for every Southern farmer to ask himself in this time of depressed cotton value is will the use of a dollar's worth of commercial fertilizers increase my yields sufficiently to justify the expenditure of a dollar? If a dollar invested in commercial fertilizers for the crops to be grown in 1915 will produce an increase in these crops sufficient to give a liberal profit on the investment, no man who can possibly do so should fail to use commrcial fertilizers for, as previously stated, the need for producing maximum yields, or at least maximum profits, is as great now as at any time in our past history. We have used commercial fertilizers in the past because experience proved beyond doubt that their use was profitable. If this be the case, why in these times of depression should we discontinue a profitable practice?

Southern men who take their opinion from popular clamor and prejudice and some of our Northern friends speak of commercial fertilizers as if such was a reflection on the intelligence of the Southern farmer, but the use of commercial fertilizers is an evidence of good farming and correct knowledge, far beyond that displayed by those who decry their use.

It is true that no man should buy commercial nitrogen five years from now, for general field crops, and the fact that he should buy it for the crops of 1915 may be proof of poor farming in the past; but no matter what the past may show, if his crops in the year 1915 need nitrogen and by purchasing it he can make the transaction profitable he should make the purchase this year, and as soon as possible adopt a system of farming that will avoid that expense in the future. As to the purchase of phosphoric acid, he will probably always find that profitable.

The South has not used too much commercial fertilizer. In fact, good farming will probably call for a much larger use of commercial fertilizers than has yet been dreamed of. What is needed is a system of farming that in time will do away with the purchase of high-priced nitrogen which will permit the expenditure of all our fertilizer money for phosphoric acid and in some sections also for potash and lime.

Yes, we have wasted some of the money paid for fertilizers in past years, because of a lack of information regarding the needs of our soils and crops; but on the whole, the South has benefited immensely by the use of commercial fertilizers, getting back the money spent with large profits added.

Those who advise the use of no fertilizers in 1915 are either ignorant of past results from the intelligent use of commercial fertilizers or they must reach their conclusions by some very mysterious system of reasoning. We certainly need large yields per acre in 1915; and the man who would advise the use of no fertilizers would by the same system of reasoning advise a man who wished to grow a large hog to reduce the feed.

The use of commercial fertilizers has been worth many millions of dollars to the South over and above their cost, and the need is for the use of more fertilizers instead of less, although this increased use should be along more intelligent lines.

Helping Kidneys By Clearing Blood

A Function Greatly Assisted By a Well-Known Remedy.

Most readers will be interested to more clearly understahd why analysis of urine is so important. In the use of S. S. S. to purify the blood, its action is a stimulant to the myriad of fine blood vessels that make up the constructive tissues of the kidneys. All the blood from all over the body must pass through the kidneys. They act as testers and assayers. And according to what they allow to pass out in the urine, both as to quantity and materials, the health of the kidneys and the quality of the blood is determined. The catalytic energy forced by S. S. S. is shown in the urine. It is also demonstrated in the skin. And as the blood continues to sweep through the kidneys the dominating nature of S. S. S., acting as it does through all the avenues of elimination, shows a marked decrease of disease manifestations as demonstrated by urine analysis. This assistance is a great relief to the kidneys. The body wastes are more evenly distributed to the emunctories; their elimination is stimulated by the tonic action afforded the liver, lungs, skin and kidneys. Thus, in cases of rheumatism, cystitis, chronic sore throat, huskiness of voice, bronchitis, asthma and the myriad of other reflex indications of weak kidney action, first purify your blood with S. S. S., so it will enable the tissues to rebuild the cellular strength and regain the normal health.

S. S. S. is prepared by The Swift Specific Co., 527 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., and if you have any deep-seated or obstinate blood trouble, write to their Medical Dept. for free advice.

Hold Your Cotton and Reduce Your Acreage.

(FROM THE PROGRESSIVE FARMER.)

Why sell, or rather give away this year's cotton crop? It will not pay your debts, neither will it purchase much food and clothing for you to live upon. The whole South should arise as one man, the merchants, bankers, and farmers should pull together and hold the present cotton crop until September, 1915, or until such time as may be necessary to secure a reasonable price therefor. If this could be done the 1914 crop would sell for more than two crops will bring under the circumstances that will prevail if we go in our blind unintelligent way, selling this crop for less than the cost of production and planting another crop to suffer, probably a like fate. The man who sells his cotton at the present prices admits that he has played the part of a slave during the past year and that his master has not even fed and clothed him in return for his slavery.

The farmer must in self defence, guard against a reputation in 1915, of the present calamity. He must cut his cotton acreage down to almost or quite nothing. This, in itself, will help the price of this year's crop to a great extent. Secretary McAdoo of the treasury has said that the $135,000,000 cotton loan fund will have little substantial effect unless the cotton acreage is greatly reduced and other crops grown in the place of cotton. When the world realizes that there will be little or no cotton grown next year, nothing can keep cotton now on hand down to the present prices.

This is the opportune momen and the accepted time for making the long desired change to diversification. Heretofore the farmer has been subjected to, in a large measure, a controlling pressure from merchants and business men generally against diversification and toward the planting of cotton as the chief crop. Large landholders have demanded that their tenants secure rent and advancement by the cultivation of liberal cotton crops. But, since cotton is no longer a security, this has ceased. Merchants and bankers are interesting themselves in finding markets for the products of diversification and are encouraging farmers to raise other crops than cotton. Landlords are renting their lands for so much hay, corn, and meat instead of so much cotton or money to be derived from cotton. It is clearly up to the farmer, individually, to throw himself, body and soul, into the cause, to take advantage of all the help and encouragement offered him, and to strive to help himself.

$100 Reward, $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Astonishing Supplication.

A famous college principal used to give out notices at the morning devotional exercises, which always closed with a prayer. One morning he forgot a certain notice until he had begun his last prayer. Praying for the professors and students of the college, the notice from the French professor came to mind, and the assembled students were astonished to hear the president say: "And, O Lord, bless Professor Karge, whose French class will be held this morning at nine o'clock instead of at half-past nine, as usual."

Cultivate Observation.

To behold is not necessarily to observe, and the power of comparing and combining is only to be obtained by education. It is much to be regretted that habits of exact observation are not cultivated in our schools. To this deficiency may be traced much of the fallacious reasoning and the false philosophy which prevails.—W. Humboldt.

By His Own Deposition.

A policeman, whose evidence was taken on commission, deposed: "The prisoner sat upon me, calling me an ass, a precious dolt, a scarecrow, a ragamuffin, and an idiot." And, this being the conclusion of his depositions, his signature was preceded by the formal ending, "All of which I swear is true."

All Must Be Well Done.

Nothing is done well enough for the present which is not well enough for all time. The idea that imperfections are of no consequence now, and that the crooked lines can be straightened, and the rough corners smoothed off by and by has put many a worker in the failure class.

Keeping It Up.

Shortly after the death of one of England's great poets one of his devoted admirers visited the little village where the poet had lived and died. The stranger entered into conversation with an old man, a native of the village, remarking sadly on the death of the poet. "Aye, aye," answered the old man encouragingly; "still I mak' no doobt but the wife'll carry the business on."

Hint for Coming Maternity

In a little book designed for expectant mothers more complete instruction is given in the use of "Mother's Friend." This is an external embrocation applied to the abdominal muscles for the purpose of reducing the strain on ligaments, cords and tendons.

In thus bringing relief and avoiding pain great good is accomplished. It serves to ease the mind, indirectly has a most beneficial effect upon the nervous system and thousands of women have delightedly told how they were free of nausea, had no morning sickness and went through the ordeal with most remarkable success. "Mother's Friend" has been growing in popular favor for more than forty years. In almost every community are grandmothers who used it themselves, their daughters have used it and they certainly must know what a blessing it is when they recommend it so warmly. Strictly an external application it has no other effect than to ease the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments involved hence is perfectly safe to use by all women. It is used very successfully to prevent caking of breasts.

LEO M. FRANK TO HANG ON JANUARY 22, 1915

Man Convicted for Murder Of Mary Phagan Sentenced third time.

Atlanta, Dec. 9.—Leo M. Frank today was sentenced in Fulton county superior court to be hanged on Friday, January 22, for the murder here in April, of 1913, of Mary Phagan, 14-year-old factory girl.

Before receiving sentence, pronounced by Judge Ben H. Hill, Frank made a statement denouncing the "spirit of mob violence which pervaded the courtroom" at his trial, declaring his death would "lay an indelible stain upon Georgia's name for justice," and charging that James Conley, a negro, who was the state's principal witness against Frank had committed perjury.

Today marks the third time Frank has been sentenced to die for the Phagan girl's murder. Resentence is in accordance with the state supreme court's refusal to set aside the conviction on the ground that Frank was absent from the courtroom when the verdict was returned.

Frank was taken from the jail to the court house under the escort of deputy sheriffs. The prisoner walked into the courtroom with a firm step and faced Judge Hill with the calmness which has characterised him throughout his fight for life.

Young Man Died Of Appendicitis

Arthur Headley, a young man about eighteen years old, a son of of Mr. Pate Headley who lives about nine miles west of Clanton, died in an infirmary in Montgomery last Thursday nignt following an operation for appendicitis. The complications from the affliction had reached a very acute stage before the young man was removed to the hospital, and little hope was held out for his recovery from the operation; but he seemed to possess usual vitality despite his desperate condition. In making the trip it seems that he persisted on being allowed to travel sitting up rather than on a cot, and was able to walk apparently well. His remains were brought back to Clanton Friday, and carried home for interment.

Teachers Examination

The next State examination tor Teachers will be held at Clanton at the Court House, beginning at ten o'clock, a.m., on the third Monday in December, 1914. All applicants should be present by 9 a.m. for registration, except those who intend to file a second grade and take for first grade; and they must be present by noon Tuesday.

Principal Elected For Public School

Prof. G. S. Rogers has been elected by the city school board of Clanton as Principal of the city public school for the second half of the present session, which begins after the holidays. The new Principal comes from Tuskeegee, and is highiy recommended as an educator ot worth and ability. He succeeds Prof. J. J. Pickens, who for the past three years has been principal of the Clanton school, but accepted the place this year with the understanding that he would hold it only for the first half of the session.

Byron Patterson, second prize for the acre of corn grown at the smallest cost per bushel, $2.50.

John Short, third for the greatest yield on an acre, $1.00.

Johnie Winkler, third prize for the acre of corn grown at the smallest cost per burhel, $1.00

Glover Smith, first prize for the best composition on corn growing, $3.00.

W. A. Huckabee, first prize for best acre of corn (not corn club) $5.00.

Total amount of prizes given, $23.50.

Mountain Creek

It is with the profoundest regret that it is my privilige to announce that the Chilton Mining and Manufaturing Co. has gone out of business. The remains are now being shipped away and sold. We fear that many other enterprises will cease operation before Mr. Wilson leaves the chair.

We notice that Montgomery is soon to have a free lunch counter, for the benefit of those, who cannot otherwise obtain their meals. This luch counter is only to provide one meal a day. Free trade and free lunch seems to work hand in hand; in fact, they seem to be the Democrat's "Long Suit."

To see so many white men working on the streets in Montgomery reminds us of—what? Why, those Cleveland days.

The Trans-Continental Highway will be my subject for next week.

Yours very truly,
Chas. Cooper.

Cotton Report of Chilton County

There were 18,622 bales of cotton ginned in Chilton County prior to December 1st, 1914 as compared with 15,442 bales ginned prior to December 1st, 1913. The above figures are from the official report as complied for the bureau of government statistics by R. J. Jones special agent for this county.

Although Sunday was quite unfavorable, the Sunday school turned out well. One of the great thoughts of the lesson was the fact the Redeemer would be with His people until the end of the world—the end of the age—the Gospel age.

"Tell me watch man, Oh, what of the morning, do you see as the mist rolls away? And it seems I can see by the dawning that we are nearing the end of the way." Doubtless, many in studying the lesson caught glimpses of the beautiful light that cheered those present at the gathering in Galilee when the great commission was given. "Each cooing dove and sighing bough! That makes the eve so blest to me. Has something for dinner now. It bears me back to Galilee."

Quoting fron the private correspondence of a gentleman in one of the northern states he says: "I believe President Wilson is a great and good man, but by carrying out the policies of his party has brought devastation to the nation." Later the same writer said: "The cry of dull times is in every mouth." This seems to harmonize with Mr. Scott's letter of last week.

Report of County Health Officer

To The Honorable Probate Judge and Commissioners, Chilton County, Alabama

Gentlemen—I beg to submit my report for the month of Novenber. As required by law, I inspected the county jail and poorhouse and found both to be in good condition.

All doctors have reported births and deaths except the following: Drs. A. M. Wooly, Jemison; M. A. Mason and J. J. DuBose, Stanton; I. G. Armistead, Maplesville.

All midwives and coffins dealers have reported.

The vital statistics are as follows: Births, whites, 44; colored 1; total 45. Deaths whites, 10; colored, 3; total 13.

The following infectious diseases were reported and have been properly looked after: Small pox, 1; Diphtheria, 5; Scarlet fever, 2.

Respectfully,
V. J. Gragg M. D.
County Health Officer.

In Memory

On last Monday morning, December 7, just at the dawn of day death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Wagoner and took a darling of their home little Myrtle. She was sick only a few days. Just five years and one day being little Myrtle's age God saw fit to take her from this sinful and troublesome world to be a shining little star for heaven Myrtle will be a dear sweet little angel treading heavens streets but tis so hard to give her up. Young and small tho she was still always cheerful, loving and speaking sweet to everyone. Little Myrtle was obedient to all and loved by everyone. But let us be comforted for Christ the loving Savior who died that we might live. To all the little children his blessings he did give; young children dear, to whom Christ said suffer them all to come for of such is the kingdom of heaven. The will of God be done. She leaves a father mother two brothers one sister and a host of friends to mourn here but weep not for little Myrtle is at rest and some sweet day will meet you all with outstretched arms at heavens gate. Be comforted relatives and friends and prepare to meet death as innocent of sins as little Myrtle was then you too will meet her by and by up in heaven. She was laid to rest at Chestnut Creek cemetery Tuesday, Rev. J. D. Hughes conducting the funeral services.

There will be a box supper at Sardis on December 23. The girls are cordially invited to come and bring boxes well filled; and the boys are asked to come prepared to buy them.

JUDGE CLAYTON REFUSES A CHANGE OF VENUE

Power Company Damage Suits Must be Heard In State Courts.

Judge Clayton, in the United States District Court Friday afternoon remanded to the state court the test suit argued by the Alabama Power Company in support of their plea to have suits brought by 500 other citizens in Chilton and adjoining counties removed to the Federal body.

Arguments in the case were heard before Judge Clayton, last Tuesday, and continued Wednesday. The power company contended that the matter was a federal question, and shoald not be allowed to remain in the state courts. The removal had also been refused by state courts.

The suits were brought against the power company by numerous citizens in the section of the dam at Lock 12, where they have made evtensive improvements on the Coosa River. Most of them were based on the grounds that sickness and other damages have resulted from the back water and other nuisances incident to the improvements.

State News Items Of General Interest

It is little better than throwing away seed to sow clover, vetch, rape, etc. this late in the season although in some exceptional cases one may sometimes succeed by sowing almost anytime. —Progresive Farmer.

Considerable disappointment seems to have arisen among the school teachers of the State, owing to the fact that the depleted condition of the state treasury made it impossible for them to receive their salaries for November at the usual time. In some counties they have not yet been paid.

A number of Congressmen breathed a sigh of relief when Mr. Underwood declared openly that he would vote against Mr. Hobson's prohibition amendment. It must have been an indicator which they have been seeking as a guide to further activities in the matter.

Judge Clayton of the United States District Court has ruled that the damage suits of citizens of Chilton, Shelby, Talladega and Coosa counties against the Alabama Power Company must be given trial in the state courts. The Power Company attorneys will appeal to the United States Supreme Court to have Judge Clayton's decision set aside.

The Progressive Farmer October 12 shows the picture of a tick infested steer that on August 12, weighed 730 pounds also the same steer after being freed of ticks on October 12, weighed 1015 pounds, or a gain of 285 pounds in two months.

Lets make our country tick free then we can get double the clean profit from our cattle.

We are still receiving requests for information as to what to sow for winter pasture. To have winter pasture one must either sow the seeds early or provide a silo. Oats, barley, wheat, rye, rape or other crops intended for furnishing winter grazing should be sown in September or early in October. Spring grazing may be obtained from later seeding, but to get late fall and winter grazing early seeding is absolutely essential.—Progressive Farmer.

The application of the principle of cooperation in buying and selling, throngh organized companies and associations is important as it goes, but cooperation for greater efficiency in production is equally as important, and it is encouraging to note that organized groupes of farmers in many localities are beginning to realize the economic value of this phase of cooperation in actual practice.

In the cooperative purchrse of pure-bred livestock several Local Unions I know have laid the foundation for more prafitable farming. When it is possible to add several thousand dollars to the value of the livestock industry in a community by the purchase of one pure-bred sire I am sure that we do not yet realize fully the economic importance of the cooperative purchase of such sires by every Local Union in the state. In three years time the raising of pure-bred live stock alone would revolutionize Southern agriculture, and tend to put us out of the one crop mania and into the kind of farming that embraces the livestock industry, where applied intelligence carries its premium. This, too, will put the intelligent organized white farmers out of competition with the labor of an inferior race in the South. Without special attention to livestock no agricultural community on earth has ever reached a high degree of prosperity.—Progressive Farmer.

Rheumatic Throat Is Common Trouble

Should Be Treated in Blood To Prevent Recurrence.

There are successful gargles that stop soreness in the throat, but to prevent their incessant return, the blood must be put in order. The best remedy is S. S. S., as it influences all the functions of the body to neutralize the irritants or waste products and to stimulate their excretion through the proper channels.

Rheumatic sore throat is a dangerous indication, as it means that the blood is loaded with more uric acid than the kidneys can excrete, and may thus lead to serious general disturbance.

The action of S. S. S. stimulates cellular activity. It prevents the accumulation of irritants in local spots. It enables the arteries to supply quickly the new red blood to replace worn-out tissue.

For this reason uric acid that finds the throat an easy prey to its breaking-down influence, is scattered and eliminated. In other words, S. S. S. prevents chronic conditions by enabling all the mucous linings of the body to secrete healthy mucus. Its influence is shown in a marked improvement of the bronchial tubes, whereby the huskiness of voice with thick, grayish expectorations is overcome. S. S. S., well diluted with water, means a blood bath, since it is welcome to any stomach and at once gets into the blood.

S. S. S. is free of all minerals and contains ingredients wonderfully conducive to well-balanced health.

You can get it at any drug store, but do not accept anything else. There is danger in substitutes. S. S. S. is prepared only by The Swift Specific Co., 528 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Our Medical Dept. will give you free instruction by mail on any subject of blood disorders. Write today.

CAVE DWELLERS OF AMERICA

Europe Is by No Means the Exclusive Holder of Prehistoric Dwellings.

The American cave dwellers were not ape men, nor even big-jawed, low-browed meat eaters, like the alleged associates of the famous, albeit anonymous, owner of the "Neanderthal skull.' Corn and squash seeds, three kinds of gourds, the stone wetate, and the slender bones of birds tell of the largely vegetable diet of these primeval cave dwellers.

Evidences of religious worship abound—little estufas, with places for the sacred fire among the dwellings, and large ones in the open canyon where circles of communal huts, inclose the central floor, hardened by the feet of thousands of dancers.

Here, still unexplored, are hundreds of tiny cavern houses burrowed in cliffs 500 to 600 feet high, colored in maroon, ochre, sober gray and gypsum white—hues that in the sunset glow in furnace reds and royal purple and deep lavender.

Not far away at Casa Grande, a race of tall men lived in larger caves and left their mummified dead to tell of six-foot braves and broad-hipped women, while at Frijoles the bodies dium height, with here and there a swathed in woven cloths were of metaller warrior. Reservoirs to impound water for siege or drought; ditches for irrigation; pictographs that are a melange of bird and reptile, beasts and weird imitations of the human form divine; pottery in shards and unbroken; splintered bows and featherless arrows; fiber-soled sandals, and blankets thickened with rabbit fur are found in some of these ancient cavern houses.—National Magazine.

SOME GOOD FOUND IN WAR

Causes More Thought to Be Given to the Beauty of the Ordinary Things of Life.

Commenting on the fact that the war in Europe has caused a revival of the religious spirit in France and that a similar revival of religious feeling is reported from other countries engaged in the great conflict, the Chicago Sunday Herald says editorially:

This is not strange. In the face of the terrific fact of world-wide war, not only religion but also art, literature, life and all sights and sounds and shades of beauty must have taken on an added value.

The peasant's vine-embowered cottage, the little vineyard in the South, the simple rounds of daily life—things which seemed a matter of course three months ago—must now seem beyond all measure valuable.

Fatherhood, motherhood and all the intimacies of family life so rudely cut by war—how incredibly high, holy and important they must seem now that separation has come to show exactly what they meant to all!

In ordinary times men take life, love, religion, calmly. They take them as mere incidents of the common way, as things which no one need dwell too fondly on. Then suddenly there comes a crisis and they see them in a different light.

Truly of religion, art and all forms of beauty that move and breathe upon the world it may be said:

But you were not so fair, nor so could move,
Were it not your beauty, wonder-sweet, had caught
An added splendor from the face of death!

Author's Unique Find.

Before Earnest Coppie buried himself in the dead oblivion of a Canadian forest he found one friend among humankind.

Lee Wok, the taciturn laundryman, was unwrapping the last boiled shirt the author would ever wear. Coppie suddenly grasped him by his cotton shoulder and looked searchingly into the celestial's narrow eyes.

"Tell me," he pleaded, "did you ever hear of a poem called 'When Willie Came to Say Good-Night?'"

"Me no sabee," he mumbled.

The yellow peril staggered in fright as Earnest Coppie hugged joyously the only mortal who had never read "When Little Willie Said Good-Night."

Much Money Is Wasted.

Americans spend $20 for alcoholic liquors for every $1 that buys tea and coffee. Our tobacco costs five times as much as our new churches, remarks Gerard in the Philadelphia Ledger.

Every time we give $1 to a heathen we hand out $1.10 for chewing gum. Candy takes from our pockets two and one-half times as much as our medicines, which is truly fortunate.

It is said that Americans spend an average of $8 a year for jewelry, but I don't believe it. Our total imports of precious stones are only about fifty cents a year for each inhabitant. All the silver and the gold which are mined on earth in a year added to those precious stones does not equal $8 a head.

Power Trawl Fishers' Success.

The adoption of power trawl vessels for fishing in many parts of the world has been frequently described in Daily Consular and Trade Reports. At Hull, England, all previous records in connection with the local fishing industry were broken on September 23 by the trawler Dane. The vessel had fished off the coast of Iceland and its catch realized $9,000, or $1,000 more than the previous record figure. In this instance, however, the owners were helped by the keen demand for fish

HARRIS-DRIVER

The marriage on last Thursday night of Mr C. C. Harris of Atlanta, and Miss Clemmie Driver, a popular young lady of South Clanton, was a quiet event, and more or less a surprise to the many friends of the contracting parties in Clanton. The ceremony was performed by Rev. H. W. Fancher at the Baptist parsonage, attended by a select number of friends and relatives of the bride and groom. They left on the 10:20 train for Atlanta, where they will make their future home. Their many friends will learn of their wedding with much interest, and extend to them many good wishes and congratulations.

Judge Reynolds was in Gadsden Monday on business.

Claud Reynolds of Rutherford is in Clanton to spend the holidays with relatives.

On next Sunday Rev. Fancher will begin a series of sermons at the Baptist church on the subject of, "Why people fail to attend church." There will be as many as a half dozen of the sermons, and will be delivered by this able minister at the regular morning services on Sunday.

Shirley Brothers of Montgomery, plumbing contractors, who have been in Clanton installing the furnaces and heating apparatus of the High School building, have decided to locate at Clanton and will in the nesr future open up a plumbing shop here.

Wallace C. Edler and Sam W. Collina of Thorsby were here on Wednesday.

Attorney Hill, for the J. B. McCrary Co. here, was in south Alabama last week on business.

J. Hugh Jones was a visitor to Montgomery Sunday.

The city school of Clanton will vacate on next Wednesday for the holidays.

THORSBY NEWS

Mr. Lee who was formerly of this place, but now of Calera was hurt in a fight with a Mr. Eliot Saturday 12th, Lee was bruised considerably about the head, but is is not expected that the wounds will be serious.

The concert given by the Alkahest Favorites at the Thorsby Institute on Thursday evening December 10, was very good and enjoyed by a large audience.

A musical recital will be given by the Unity-Chilton Baptist High School on Tuesday evening December 17. The school will also hold their fall term debate Saturday evening, December 19, subject: Resolved that the women of the United States should have equal suffrage with the men, affirmative: Walter E. Martin and Nolia Robinson; negative: Wallace H. Cook and Maud Robinson.

The basket ball team of the Unity-Chilton Baptist High School will play the Union Grove team on the latter's grounds on Saturday p. m. December 19.

(By Gus Jackson)

40 years ago the farmer would gather his corn and haul it up to the front end of the crib and pile it in a long narrow pile. And he would build a shuck pin out of rails that he had split with a hammer and wedge. He would ask in a few of his neighbors, also a few negroes; and about 7:00 p.m., they would all gather near the mound of corn and begin shucking. They would make the shucks fly till about 11:00, when they would all rejoice to hear each other say hunt for the last ear, boys. After the corn was all shucked, each one would toat shucks to the pin till every one was removed. After this was finished, the negroes would depart; and all the white people would gather around a long table covered with such things to eat as beef, hash, chicken, pork, kid, mutton, turkey, and all sorts of pies, custards, and cakes; and with a dim light furnished by a pine torch at each corner of the table, they would jest and tease each other as they enjoyed their bountiful meal.

The young men at that age took great pleasure in gathering at some of their neighbors homes immediately after supper, and after building a large fire in the front yard, would gather around it and jump, wrestle, run, turn summersets and cut all kinds of capers, while the girls sat in the window and laughed at them. Sometimes one of them would say something funny to the girls and watch them blush.

It didn't take as much then to make a girl blush as it does now. Neither did it take as much to clothe them, nor educate them, nor for them to get married. What has caused such a great change? The farmer scarcely ever thought of hard times then. Although he could not get over 7c for his cotton and could not sell his other products at all, he was happy and enjoyed life. Today, when he cau't get a good price for his products he worries and broods himself nearly to death. What is the trouble and how is he going to get relief?

HEROES DEVELOPED BY WAR

Terrible as Is the Battlefield, It Brings to the Surface Man's Great Qualities.

Hateful as war is and utterly abhorrent to the Christian mind, we must yet recognize the fact that it brings to the surface as nothing else can certain heroic qualities in man that the whole world admires. And the great war has already been prolific of heroes. What is a hero? He is one who does his duty fearlessly, as he sees it, with all the energy, ability, power and enthusiasm at his command. At Liege a German officer, directing his men in the trenches, fell shot in the head. At once the others came to him, eager to help. He waved his hand. "No, no," he said, "I have got my account—go forward—do your duty." And so died a hero. Prince Frederick of Lippe, leading his command, received a bullet in his breast. He knew it to be a mortal wound, but with his last ounce of strength he sprang forward, grasped the regimental standard, which was in danger of being taken, and shouting, "Save the flag!" fell to rise no more. Many incidents of individual heroism like these are told of both sides, and they relieve the somber tragedy of war. Many undistinguished heroes went to their death at Namur, Charleroi and other battlefields in Belgium and along the border from Mons to Muelhausen, and at the great battle in Lorraine, where 300,000 fought on either side. The story is told of a number of students of Liege university who had volunteered for military service. There was an examination to be held, but a great battle had already begun. It was at first purposed to abandon the examination, but with a unanimous voice the students and faculty decided that it should go on. "The examination took place," relates the correspondent, "and then the candidates trooped from the hall to the battlefield, where many of them lay dead a few hours later."—Christian Herald.

SECURED HER FREE TICKET

Clever Ruse Practiced by Los Angeles Woman to Get Transportation to Chicago.

A woman obtained a free ticket to Chicago yesterday by a novel method of extortion. She called one of the managers of a down-town department store to the telephone.

"I've got the smallpox," she said. "It doesn't show yet, but I have it. If I can get to Chicago I can get all the help I need, but if I stay here I shall have to go to the county pesthouse. I want you to send me a ticket to Chicago, and if you don't I'm coming to your store, get sick there, and you will have to quarantine the whole place."

Then she detailed her plan to escape detection. She demanded that the store manager should give the envelope containing the money or ticket to a messenger, the first messenger to give it to a second, who would meet the first at Sixth and Olive streets, and the second would give the envelope to a third at Fifteenth and Vermont avenue.

The department store notified the police and then consented to the woman's demands. The envelope was turned over to a messenger boy, who called. The police followed him to Sixth and Olive streets, where a second messenger awaited. They followed the second boy to the Vermont meeting place. The police were in an automobile. The third messenger had a motorcycle. He dashed up Vermont avenue, turned cross-town, and circled back, came into town, dashed through a congested crossing, and disappeared in the traffic while the police motor car was delayed at the crossing.—Los Angeles Times.

Virginia Only Producer of Rutile.

Virginia produced all the American output of rutile in 1913, according to the United States geological survey, the deposits being located at Roseland, Nelson county. During the year the company which controls and works these deposits produced 305 tons of rutile, valued at about forty-nine thousand dollars.

A large part of the rutile produced in 1913 was used in the manufacture of titanium carbide electrodes for arc lamps. A part of the ilmenite found in the deposits and separated by means of a magnetic separator has been sold for use in making electrodes for electric lights, and the experiments with the electric furnace point to the possible use of ilmenite in the direct production of tool steel.

Booth Tarkington's Long Climb.

Although Booth Tarkington, the Hoosier novelist, today is one of America's literary successes, he had a long and difficult climb to his present position. Mr. Tarkington himself is responsible for the statement that the financial rewards of the first five years of his literary endeavors amounted to just $22.50, or a little over four dollars per year. He refused to be discouraged, however, and now his income from serial rights and book royalties puts him up near the head of the street called Easy.

Getting Even With the Teutons.

A little boy in England, according to a letter received since the war began, has a peculiar brand of patriotism. He had heard his uncle complain because the government has seized his horses. "Yes," said the youngster, "and I hope they make sausage of them for the German soldiers."—Kansas City Star.

WAR AT A GLANCE

The pendulum of war apparently has swung back again in favor of the Russians in the Eastern war zone.

An official report from Petrograde declares the Russians have repulsed two units of Field Marshal von Hindenburg's army—near Mlawa and Lowicz—administering enormous casualties and taking many prisoners and guns. At some places on the Mlawa front and before Lowicz the Russians assert that the Germans made fierce attacks, but that these were repulsed and that the Germans retreated in disorder.

Near Lowicz according to the Russian statement, the Muscovites permitted the Germans to approach their trenches and then put them to flight with a galling fire.

Successes also are claimed by the Russians south of Cracow where, however, the Germans are said to be stubbornly resisting.

That Germany realized that Field Marshal von Hindenburg's brilliant maneuver, which brought the Germans almost before Warsaw again after they had been thrown back to the East Prussian frontier, was not a decisive victory, was acknowledged in a statement of the German official press bureau. Dealing with the situation in the vicinity of Lodz the statement said Russian resistance "is by no means broken" and that "much yet remains to be done before the Russians can be considered definitely defeated."

The Servins continue to claim they have administered a crushing defeat to the Austrians and have taken large number of prisoners and great quantities of war materials. On their side the Austrians say no new material events have occurred in Servia and that the recorganization of the Austrian force is progressing without heavy battles.

Fighting continues in France and Belgium and claims of advantages are made by both the contenders. After having admitted the loss of trenches in the region of Ypres the latest French report declares these again are occupied by the Allies.

DETAIL

Operating a railroad involves a maze of detail. The spike to hold the rail is relatively as important as the bond issue for betterments and extensions. The local ticket from station to station must be printed, sold, collected and recorded, just as the ticket from Montgomery to Cincinnati. The small parcel must be taken up, recorded and delivered, just as the train load shipment.

Thousands of people—human beings, with human hopes and ambitions, weaknesses and faults—are employed by a railroad. They are as prone to nerves, to indigestion, to temper, to resentment, as other human beings.

Mechanical appliances are necessary. These appliances may get out of order, may break, may slip a cog, just as appliances in your store or factory.

States, counties and municipalities, located in the United States, must be traversed. Each state has different laws, different policies; each municipality has different ordinances, different forms of government; each county has its individual regulations. In many instances the policies, rules and regulations are not the same as those of the United States.

Instances are on record that what was urged on us by one state, or county, or municipality, was strenuously objected to by the very next state, county or municipality along our line.

The L. & N. writes of these things, not in a spirit of complaint, but in the hope that a feeling of tolerance may be entertained by you for what you may term our faults. You, not being in possession of all the facts, may not be qualified to judge us, just as we, not being qualified, do not pronounce judgment on you.

We endeavor to at all times render good service, and do those things desired by the greatest number, always granting that it is within our power to do so.

May we express the hope that you will think of these things, and co-operate with us to render that service for which all of us are striving?

MORTGAGE SALE

Under and by virtue of the power of sale contained in the mortgage executed by J. A. Welden and wife, Mattie T. Welden, to J. E. Weldon on the 13 day of January 1913, which said mortgage is recorded in the office of the Judge of Probate of Chilton county, Alabama, in the record of mortgages in volume 125, beginning on page 532, default having been made in payment of said mortgage, the said J. E. Weldon will proceed to sell on Monday, the 21 day of December, at the court house door in Clanton, Chilton county, Alabama, at public outcry, to the highest bidder for cash, within the legal hours of sale, the following described real estate, situated in the county oi Chilton, state of Alabama, to wit: the west half (w1-2) of the northwest quarter (nw1-4) section 17; the west half (w1-2) of the southwest quarter (sw1-4) section 8; the southeast quarter (se1-4) of the southeast quarter (se1-4) section 7, all in township 20, range 14, and containing 200 acres, more or less.

And said sale will be made for the purpose of paying the balance due upon said mortgage, and the expenses incident to said sale, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

THE UNION-BANNER

VOL. 3 | THE UNION 11th Year | CLANTON, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 24, 1914 | THE BANNER 21st Year | NO. 37

WAR AT A GLANCE

German—On the west front the enemy has ceased his unsuccessful attacks in the vicinity of Nieuport and Bixschoote.

The French and English attacks near La Bassee were beaten off with heavy losses to the enemy. Two hundred colored and English prisoners were captured. Six hundred bodies of English soldiers lay on our front near Notre Dame de Lorette.

Southeast of Bethune we lost a trench sixty metres long, which was taken by the enemy.

We made some progress in the Argonne. We took three machine guns.

On the frontiers of east and west Prussia, there is nothing to report.

In Polland, the Russians are preparing strong positions near Rawa and Nida. We are attacking them everywhere.

French—From the sea to the Lys, we have gained a litte land, before Nieuport and St. Georges.

To the east and south of Ypres where the enemy reinforced his organizations, defensive artillery battles occurred and there was slight progress on our part.

From the Lys to the Oise the allied forces have seized a portion of the German trenches of the first line on the front running through Richeberry L'Avoue and Givenchy-Les La Basse

To the souteast of Albert the trench captured by us on the 17 near Maricourt and lost on the 18, was recaptured yesterday.

In the region of Rehons the Germans made two very violent attacks for the purpose of retaking trenches won by us on the 18. They were repulsed. From the Oise to the Argonne the superiority of our artillery continues to be manifested by the interruption of the enemy's fire, the destruction of machine gun shelters and observatories and the dispersion of a considerable number of troops.

In the Argonne, the forest of La Grurie, we have repulsed three attacks, two upon Fontaine Madame, one of St. Hubert.

Between the Argonne and the Vosges there has been no salient incident to report.

Russian--On the left bank of the Vistula river, on the front of the Bzura and Rawka rivers, a number of encounters. some of them of a very fierce description, took place on the 19 inst.

Two German companies that had crossed the Bzura, near the village of Rakhova, on a half-burned bridge, were immediately attacked by our troops and annihilated. Of this force only five men remained. These we made prisoners.

Fighting is also reported in this region of Apoozno (to the east of Plotrowko).

In Golicia the situation is without important change. At certain points we have made counter attacks and captured some prisoners and machine guns.

In the district of Przemysl the Austrians attempted a sortie in great strength. The movement failed and the outcome was that we took them on the flank and captured a great many prisoners.

Brewton Farmer Is Found Killed

Brewton, Ala., Dec. 20—News reached here today that Roy Clements, a farmer living about twenty miles from this city, had been killed and the body left in the woods by a negro named Bud Nearer. It is reported that the two were running a wild cat still together and some trouble arose about the business which caused the killing. The white man left his home with a gun Saturday morning, and when he did not return during the day, neighbors went in search of him but did not find him till this morning. When found he was lying with head in the water, in some thick woods. He had been knocked in the head with some blunt instruments.

The accused negro has not been caught, but it is expected that he will be during the day. Clements was a man about thirty-five years old and leaves a family.

PROF. SLATON ELECTED HIGH SCHOOL PRINCIPAL

At a meeting of the educational board of Chilton county last Saturday, Prof. C. C. Slaton of Birmingham was elected as principal of the Chilton county High School, which opens its first session early in next month. The nomination of the county board was referred to the state board of education at Montgomery, and was readily confirmed by that body.

Prof. Slaton is no doubt a splendid school man, as is attested by the number of testimonials which he bears of his work, and by the fact that the county board of education saw fit to accord to him a place of such high importance.

With such an experienced and competent man at the head of this new institution, which is to come into the history of our county in the future, and with the assistance of competent helpers in the work, we may justly look for an influence to eminate therefrom which will make the whole county proud of the institution.

State Teachers Examination

The December state examination for teachers was conducted Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, by the county superintendent, Prof. W. T. Bean at the court house.

Following are the names of those who applied, and took examination for certificates to teach in the public schools:

Misses Corita Wilson, Mabel C. Swan, Carrie S. Willis, Fannie Vance, Phala B. Roper, Leona Wilson, Vonzella Mooney, Ethyl Mooney, Harietta L. Swan, Lessie Reynolds, Florence Mims.

Colored—J. I. Abrams, Lillie P. Cobb.

A total number of 27 applicants, four of whom were for first grade certificates, two for second and the rest for third.

MARRIAGE MARKET IN A HOLIDAY RUSH

Despite the prevalence of hard times, war taxes, and other things that might have a tendency to produce more or less inactivity in the various avenues of business at present, the marriage market of Chilton county has experienced a decided rush in the opening of the holiday season. During the last week thirteen couples have secured credentials of matrimony at the Probate's office and "Plunged into the Gulf of Deep Despair," or begun to "Sip Nectar from the Cup of Connubial Bliss," as the case might be.

Following are the names:

Howard Reynolds and Miss Lonie Nix.

J. W. Wood and Miss Grace Williams.

R. J. Marler and Miss Mollie Morgan.

Charley D. Hughes and Miss Fannie B. Robinson.

Walter Marcus and Miss Dovie Dupriest.

H. M. Lowery and Miss Neomi Pate.

James Carbett Riggins and Miss Iona Lowery.

J. C. Jones and Miss Katie Duncan.

A. J. Vance and Miss Mary J. Yeargan.

Mose Donavan and Miss Lillie Hayes.

G. W. Strother and Miss Hattie Jones.

Colored:

Walter Foshee and Mattie Motley.

Ralph Price and Lottie Johnson.

Burton Higgins and Hoke Pipes are at home from the Georgia Military College at Milledgeville to spend the holidays with friends and relatives.

I. O. O. F. LODGE ELECTS OFFICERS

On the night of the 19th, the Geo. R Ward Lodge, No. 164, I. O. O. F., met in regular session, and the following new officers were elected: E. L. Glass, Noble Grand; H. J. Hunnicutt, Vice Grand; E.B. Langston, Secsetary; J. M. Dalton, Treasurer. Installation of officers will take place at the next meeting of the Lodge at which time there is expected a large attendance. Meetings held on first and third Saturday nights; yisiting brothers always welcome.

The Rebekas are also doing good work. They are planning to send a box of quilts and other things to the orphan's home at Cullman for a Christmas gift.

Jumbo

Miss Dovie Willis was at home to several of her friends Saturday evening from eight to eleven o'clock. Quite a number of interesting games were played and excellent music was rendered by Amos and "Pet" Glass of Jemison, which was enjoyed very much.

Among those present were: Misses Celea Sammons, Sophia Martin, Annie Mae House, Edna Boulton, Evelyn House, Arletha Willis, Lucy house; Messrs Amos Glass, Robert Varden, 'Pet' Glass, Pottridge, Grover Boulton, Doil Willis, Leroy Ellison, Burl Littlefield, Ed Willis; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Willis, Mr. and Mrs. Boulton, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Willis, and others.

Clanton will Have A Large Ice Plant

By the opening of next spring season, Clanton will have a large well equipped twenty-ton ice plant in operation. The enterprise is to be fostered by Messrs J. Q. and A. C. Wade, owners of the Wade Electric Light & Power Company. The machinery will be installed right away, in the large brick building near the railroad, which has formerly been used as a cotton warehouse.

The electric light plant will be removed from its prestnt location at Mr. Wade's gin to the ice plant and operated in connection therewith.

The manufacturing of ice in Clanton will supply a want that for some time has been most imperative to the city. The handicap that frequently arises in summer from depending on outside sources for refrigeration, and causing the entire town to be without ice for intervals, will be magnificently overcome by having this most important summertime necessity produced right here in town, and available any and all times, at only a few moments notice.

THORSBY NEWS

On Tuesday morning a horse belonging to Lawrence Hayes broke loose and ran in front of a freight train and was instantly killed.

The musical recital given by the Chorus of the Baptist school on last Thursday evening was enjoyed by a large crowd.

The basket ball game at Union Grove, Saturday afternoon resulted in a score of 22 to 4 in favor of the Baptist school. Any one wishing a game with the Baptists should write to the secretary.

The fall term debate was held Saturday evening as announced. The judges rendered the decision in favor of the negative.

The schools of Thorsby have vacated for the holidays until January 4.

Thanks

Editor Union-Banner:—Please give me space in your paper to say to the people of my community that I most heartily thank them for their kindness to me, while I have been confined to my room with pneumonia. Their kindness will never be forgotten, and I ask them to accept this as a faint indication of how much I appreciated their friendship and favors. I am proud to live among such good people.

B. M. ROBERTS APPOINTED POSTMASTER

This week the appointment of Mr. Barney M. Roberts as postmaster of the city of Clanton, to succeed the present encumbent, Mr. Felix O. Dudley, was made at Washington, and is now pending in the United States senate for confirmation. Mr. Dudley's long and efficient service in the position expired on the 14 of this month. Mr. Roberts, his successor, is a prominent business man of Clanton and Chilton county, and no doubt will conduct the affairs of the office in an efficient and satisfactory manner.

UNION SPRINGS

Merry Christmas and happy New Year to all.

Mr. Gillespie, V. D. M., lectured in this community on the 18, as previously announced. Attendance was good. Mr. Gillespie is a good speaker. He based his lectures on 2nd Pet. 1st chapter, 1st and 2nd verses, showing that the faith of the church began in Eden, with the statement that the serpent's head would be bruised. It was manifested in Abrahamic promise of the blessings of all nations; continued to Jacob and his posterity; it looms up in the poetry of Job and the Psalms, also in the Prophets.

The work was inaugurated by the Redeemer, and seems now to be nearing fruitation in the gathering of the groaning creation, and ushering in the grand Sabbatic year of blessingt over all the earth. Yet, the introduction of which would be with a great trouble, of which the war in the East is the beginning. The lecture was in line with last Sunday's lesson—"Universal peace."

Joe Jones and Cleveland Martin visited near Fenwood Sunday

In the poetry in my correspondence last week, there was a slight error. It should have read thus:

A Letter From Tucumcari, N.M.

Tucumcari, New Mexico.

Editor Union-Banner:—I take this method of informing my many old friends about the condition of land in New Mexico. There is a large tract of land in the western part of the state that will be open for settlement in a short time, and there is now quite a lot of vacant territory for homestead. 320 acres can be obtained here and live on it for three years and get a deed; and state lands can be bought for not less that $5 per acre on thirty years time and pay one-tenth down and the rest at four per cent interest. You can buy good deeded land, where 34 bushels of wheat per acre can be raised, at $5 to $10 per acre; any amount you want.

If you are interestad, you may get further informaiton from W. L. Traylor, Quay county, Tucumcari, New Mexico.

There are plenty of good schools and churches here, and the climate is healthy and very desirable.

Yours, truly,
R. A. Miller,

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS

To all who are a year behind with their subscription to the UNION-BANNER we are mailing notices of the fact, and asking that they send or bring in renewals.

Those who do not pay up by January 1st, must, in conformity with the postal laws, be dropped from our mailing list until they do pay up all back dues.

If you happen to be one of the number who are behind, we would be pleased to have your renewal at once, so we will not be compelled to stop your paper.

In renewing dont overlook the club offere we are making in connection with our paper.

THE UNION-BANNER.

We wish to extend to our subscribers and friends, our hearty Christmas greetings.

Hon. Chas. Henderson will be inaugurated Governor of Alabama on the 18th of next January.

The next Legislature of Alabama will assemble in its regular session on Januaiy 12, 1915. There is a probability of an extra session for the first week in January.

It is bad enough to have to endure a democratic administration of affairs at its best; therefore, we hope that the incoming state officials will give us the best they have in their shop.

Governor Henderson is pledged to the desires of the people for economy in the administration of progressive business policies. And it is to be hoped that he will not become so engrossed with the many questions that will be up in the Legislature, that he will loose sight of this one obigation.

A subscriber to the Union-Banner (a democrat) says, "Stop sending me your paper. It is all right, but I am tired of hearing those Bull Moosers howling over their victory in last election." Yes, we suspect it does cut rather deep for some of them, but they should remember that to the victors belong the spoils.

Alfred M. Tunstall of Greensboro, member of the next legislature expresses the opinion that the best plan for the state of Alabama to emerge from the financial hole which it is in, is by the issuance of bonds in the sum of $2,000,000, more or less. The issuance of bonds seems to be a resort believed to be more satisfactory to the people than an increased rate of taxation.

We feel that our County Board of Education should be complimented for the splendid selection they made in getting a man for the Principalship of the County High School. Prof. C. C. Slaton, the man whom they have selected for the place, is already rather extensively acquainted in this county, having taught some years ago in the school of Verbena and Jemison. By all who know him he is recognized as a highly refined Christian gentleman, and withal, is an able educator. The fact that such a man is to have charge of the school, will give to the institution a prestige of no mean standard, and will, without doubt, return to the people of the county, a goodly measure of educational benefit and general satisfaction.

GET READY FOR IT

What about your plan for next year, Mr. Progressive Farmer? Are they made? Have you a definite, clear-cut system already outlined and to which you mean to adhere? Above all, have you agreed with yourself that next year your cotton acreage will be reduced and that you will give yourself, your family, your stock, and your land a chance by planting liberally of food, feed and soil-building crops?

We want to make this an urgent, individual appeal to you, for we believe that it is only as the individual grower realizes that all cotton another year means ruin that we can hope to achieve any real results in acreage reduction. Let's see what the facts in the case are and then look them squarely in the face:

1. Cotton is now selling at seven cents, or from three to three and one-half cents a pound below the cost of production. It is, of course, always unsafe to attempt to prophesy, but we are only stating a truth when we say that to base our 1915 operations on any higher price is to court financial disaster.

2. Undoubtedly the coming season will see the almost entire withdrawel of the credit usually extended to the cotton grower. This is merely good business on the part of the merchant and banker, for they will see that advancing money on a crop for which there may be no market is too dangerous a risk to take.

3. Corn, oats, hay, meat, butter and eggs—in fact, food and feedstuffs of every kind, because of the vast destruction wrought in Europe, will be in enormous demand and at higher average prices than for years.

With these facts before us, it is nothing more than sound business sense to plant less cotton another year. And left us not cut the cotton acreage to get a higher price for cotton, but simply because we can't afford to grow it at present prices—prices that in all likelihood will prevail next year.

Let's not expect the other fellow to do it for experience has shown that he can't be depended on. Rather we, you and I, my friend, must do this thing, and prepare for it now. Otherwise the hard times we are now experiencing will be doubly, trebly severe a year from now. For the all-cotton farmer the handwriting is on the wall—Progressive Farmer.

PROHIBITION QUESTION AND NEXT LEGISLATURE

There are many big questions coming up before the next Legislature of Alabama. It is calculated to be the busiest and most important session of that body for many years. The legislators claim to have it in the curriculum to enact measures for the permanent good of the people.

The organization of the Houses is a question that is absorbing a deal of interest at present. It seems to be in the most part a mere contest between the prohibitionists and local optionists. The candidates for speaker are A. H. Cnrmichael of Tuscumbia, Henry Merritt of Tuskeegee, and Edward Johnston of Huntsville. The first two mentioned are prohibitionists, while Mr. Johnston is a local optionist.

The prohibitionists claim that they will have only one candidate in the race at the time for election; while the local optionists hope that the prohibitionists will become divided and maintain their two candidates through the contest, and give them a chance to elect their man to the place.

There seems to be not much question as to the fact that the prohibitionists will be in control of the body, if they can manage to hold their forces together.

The question of the appointment of committees in the Legislature is probably the most important of all.

Oscar Lewis of Tuskeegee is a local optionist candidate for President Pro Tempore of the Senate; and he and his friends claim that the power of appointment of committees should be given to the President of the Senate. There are three prohibition candidates for President Pro Tempore of the Senate; and they and and their followers believe the power of appointment of committees should be given to the Lieutenant Governor.

Prohibitionist leaders declare openly that they intend to rush through a state-wide prohibition law as soon as possible after the meeting of the Legislature. There has been no definite outline of the measure that will be up for adoption but the leaders have all pledged their support to whatever is presented to bring about the desired effect.

It can be clearly seen that there is a great battle for the cause of the prohibitionists in this state now brewing; and it is going to break in the meeting of the next legislative body. We hope that they will succeed in keeping their forces together, and place Alabama back in the dry column.

"Of the People, for the People And by the People"

In laying the foundation of our government, it was mutually understood by the founders, that the government of these United States of America should be "Of the people, and by the people, and for the people."

When they say of and by the people we understand that they infer the majority of the people; when they say for the people, we understand that they mean all of the people in this grand domain. Many days have passed since our fore-fathers fonght, bled and died upon the battlefield. It was through their sacrifice, that the above mentioned article was made a reality.

The question which confront us now: "Is our government in keeping with the Constitution of seventeen hundred and seventy-six?"

Yea, we still elect our officers by the majority of the people. The next question we ask ourselves is, "Are the officers elected performing their duties in keeping with the the wishes of those who elected them?" This question will be left for the public to answer.

I do not wish to infer that I am in favor of an officer being wishy-washy, but when it comes to taxation without representation I think that a halt really ought to be made.

There are a great many counties in the state of Alabama that believe in issuing bonds for the purpose of building roads. When the majority of the people of a country vote a bond issue, I think it is the very thing that they ought to have, but on the other hand, when the majority of the people of a county oppose debt, it seems to me that the majority really ought to rule.

I announced last week that my subject for this week would be the High-way, but however it seems that I have written about enough, and I have not directly said anything about it yet, though I really must express my views on it.

Yes, I am a strong advocate of good roads; in fact, I think they are something that we ought to have. But there is one thing that I do not feel good about in connection with our Highway, and that is the way we are getting it. I feel just like we are receiving something that the majority of the people of Chilton county oppose. In fact, to a great many it seems like this County Warrant business is being run over them. Some have said that the people of Chilton county are like sick children,—If they need medicine give it to them even if they do cry about it. This may prove to be a fine remedy for children, but I don't think that it will set so well with the most of our people. At the beginning of this road question, it was stated that it was to be built principally by public subscription; that the automobile owners of Montgomery and Birmingham would contribute largely to this fund. So far I have not seen any announcement of anyone's donation. So I guess the tax payers of Chilton county will pay for the road, and the best advice that I can offer is to use the road all you can, and next election day try to vote for some one, whom you think will spend the county's money, according to the wishes of the majority of the people.

I fear that a majority of the people of this county opposed the county's donation to the High School at Clanton.

Trust that the Little Red Stocking, for the Orphanage at Evergreen was generously remembered in the Suuday Schools throughout the county.

Wishing all a merry Christmas and a happy New Year, I am,

Yours very truly,
Chas. Cooper.

FIRE IN CLANTON

On Wednesday afternoon just as we were going to press, the fire alarm was sounded for what proved to be one of the most disastrous fires which has occurred in Clanton for a long time.

About three o'clock fire was discovered to be raging on the roof of the residence of Dr. Arthur Johnson, and it was seen that there was no hope for saving the handsome structure. Scores of men were at hand ready to assist in removing the household goods from the determined path of the flames, and a majority of them were saved.

From the fire of Dr. Johson's residence the flames spread to an adjoining building occupied by Mr. F. W. Denty, completely destroying it. But the furniture and household goods of the latter were all saved.

The Baptist church which was only a few yards away from Mr. Denty's was threatened but was saved.

Both the buildings which were burned were owned by Dr. Arthur Johnson, and the total loss will probably reach two or trhee thousrnd dollars. At the time of the writing of this article, definite information could not be had, but it is proble that the loss was nearly covered by insurance.

THORSBY NEWS

The music recitals held at Thorsby Institute and the Baptist High School on Tuesday and Thursday of last week were very much enjoyed by all.

The contest between the two divisions of the Helen Keller Literary Society at Thorsby Institute on Friday night was an interesting and profitable program. The contest consisted of two declamations by W. L. Fretwell and Oscar Swanlund, two recitations by Grace Maxwell and Sadie Waites, twe piano solos by Ellen Swanson and Giula Williams, and a debate on the question, "Resolved that the United States should build no more battleships until 1925." The debaters were, for the affirmative, B. C. Betterson, and Uriel Williamson; for the negative, D. L. McKay, and Einar Anderson. The decision was in favor of the negative. So close was the contest for each point that the decision of the judges was not unanimous on any one. The winners each by a two-to-one decision, were as follows: W. L. Fretwell, Giula Williams Grace Maxwell, D. L. McKay, and Uriel Williamson. The final score was a tie between the Stars and Crescents, each side receiving three points. Judges were Rev. John A, Pool, Dr. W. H. Bell and Rev. C. H. Rogers.

The Thorsby Local of the Farmers Union met and elected officers on Monday night of this week, as follows: For President, W. L. Leary; Vice-President C. R. Marshall; Secretary-Treasurer, S. H. Herbert; Chaplain, H. H. Dahl; Doorkeeper, J. L. Collins; Conductor, G. Berlin; Lecturer, J. S. Moran; Business Agent, P. K. Villadsen. W. L. Leary, C. R. Marshall, and H. H. Dahl were appointed a committee of arrangements for the coming meeting of the county Union. A committee of ladies was appointed to have charge of the dinners to be served under the joint auspices of the Farmers Union and the Fruit Growers Association at the Girls Dormitory during the County meeting.

The Institute Basket Ball team were very much disappointed to receive notice that the East Lake Team could not play their engagement here for Dec. 19th. They may come later.

(By Gus Jackson)

The farmer of today has many things to buy that he didn't have forty years ago. Times have gotten so fast that he just can't keep up with them; exthavagance has crept in, disguised as necessities of life. The customs and styles and farhions of today demand that "pa must furnish John and Tom" many things that weren't required forty years ago. Today they must have a horse and buggy, a $20 suit of cloths twice a year, and money to go to state fairs and picture shows, and circuses, and many other things that they did not require forty years ago.

And "pa has to fit up Sis and Mollie" with a fall suit that costs from eight to fifteen dollars and a $5 cocked heel pair of shoes, and a $1 pair of hose, etc.

Early in the spring, John and Tom have to get them a lighter weight suit, and a fine straw hat, and some spending money to set up their sweethearts with, and also they have to get their smoking tobacco and cigars.

Also Sis and Mollie require a change of apparel to a lighter weight for summer mear which costs as the fall out fit. And of course pa and ma cant afford to dress like they did forty years ago. They come along not for behind the "chilren" in styley.

It isn't because the farmer doesn't work: He works harder than he did forty years ago; he produces ten times as much stuff and gets a much better price for it. Style and custom have gotten ahead of the real necessities of life, so far that the farmer can't tell exactly what is the matter. If he ever gets relief, he will have to turn a new leaf,—leave the poesent style and customs and go back to the real necessittes of life, first, last and all the time. If this is practiced two or three years the farmer will live as a king and not as a servant. He will enjoy life as nature intended it to be.

Now, if there is any way of relief, I would like for some one to give it out,

LOCAL DRUGGIST SAYS: "TAKE ONLY ONE DOSE"

We want to tell those in Clanton suffeaing from stomach or bowel trouble that we are agents for the simple mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., known as Adler-i-ka, the remedy which became famous by curing appendicitis. This is the most thorough bowel cleaner known and JUST ONE DOSE relieves sour stomach, gas on the stomach and constipation almost IMMEDIATELY. You will be surprised at the QUICK action of Adler-i-ka. OUR COMBINATION SUBSCRIPTION OFFERS

There are some of our subscribers who are behind with their dues for The Union-Banner, and it is very necessary that they be paid up right away; necessary for two reasons. First, we are greatly in need of the money; second, the papers must be stopped if they become a year behind. As an enducement to those who who are delinquent, we have arranged some very attractive combination offers, whereby we are able to give the very best values for their money. Following are some of the clubs we have secured:

(1) The UNION-BANNER and the Tri-Weekly Constitution, both $1.50

(2) The UNION-BANNER and the Montgomery Daily Times, both 2.00

(3) The UNION-BANNER and the Alabama Weekly Times, both 1.00

(4) The UNION-BANNER and the Progressive Farmer, both for 1.25

(5) The UNION-BANNER and the Southern Ruralist, both for 1.00

(6) The UNION-BANNER and the Yellow Jacket, both for 1.00

We want you to look over this list, and if you are behind with your subscription, select one of the clubs, and let us hear from you. If you send remittance by mail, simply give the number of the club you want and send the proper amount—we will do the rest.

GREAT NEED FOR COURTESY

Matter Really Costs Very Little, Yet It Means So Much to the Recipient.

After the nations of the world have proved that they are through with war by melting up all their armament, the great reform next in order will be that of instituting universal courtesy. This reform may be said to be on its feet, even at the present time, but it is wobbly-legged and needs a great deal of encouragement.

We have some very courteous individuals in our midst, most of whom were born that way and who insist on staying that way despite all temptations to the contrary; but we have some who are almost hopeless.

Courtesy is just another name for unselfishness. The greedy, self-centered individual is never courteous, no matter what kind of manners he displays in public. Courtesy does not reveal itself for effect; it is not calculating. It acts out of the promptings of consideration for the just claims and rights of others, and, in smaller matters at least, it is even willing to make sacrifices. It is the sense of service revealed in action.

When you give your neighbor a smile instead of a frown you do him a real service, for you cause him to smile and be happy. It is courteous, therefore, to smile.

When you smother the needless word of criticism you save some one a pang. It is courteous, therefore, to control your tongue.

It doesn't matter very much at just what angle you tip your hat to a lady, although it is commendable to regard such points. The important thing is to look like you were glad of the opportunity to tip it. That is the real courtesy.

If the world would start out today to follow two rules—smile and avoid mean gossip—it would be almost civilized at the end of a year.

COULDN'T ATTEND TO BOTH

Grocery Clerk Found That Putting Up Orders and Talking Baseball Didn't Go Together.

The manager of a large Portland (Ore.) grocery store took great pleasure in relating a few "plays" pulled off by one of his clerks. This clerk is a "fan." One of those absorbed, wild and woolly baseball lovers who can talk, expand and argue the great game at any time and anywhere. His duties at the store keep him anchored most of the time, though on special occasions he is assigned to the teams.

Among his duties is to put up orders for customers in the high-toned section of the city. While he was engaged in this work the other day one of his chums (also a "fan") came in and they began to talk baseball. The grocery clerk kept on putting up the orders, but his thoughts were all on that important subject, baseball.

In the course of his argument he went to the shelf and got a case of starch instead of a package of sugar; put up tomatoes instead of potatoes, put in a bag of flour in place of an order for lard; read maple sirup instead of condensed milk, and would have drawn molasses into the kerosene can if some one had not called him away for a moment as he started for the molasses barrel.

For a time this was the way that his orders went out and it caused a riot among three or four of the best customers. He is still a good deal of a "fan," but he is not going to put up any orders while engrossed in his favorite subject.

Protested War With England.

One hundred years ago Massachusetts sent a circular letter to the other New England states inviting them to send delegates to a convention in Hartford to protest against the continuance of the war with England. The presence of the British and the demoralization of the shipping had long weighed heavily on the people of New England. While the loyalty and patriotism of the citizens were never in question, there was a certain element, made up principally of the political opponents of President Madison, who were confirmed in their hostility to the war. It was said at the time that their opposition went so far as to contemplate secession or obstruction to the government in prosecuting the war, but this was stoutly denied by those responsible for the Hartford convention.

Land Engagement in 1812.

One hundred years ago the Americans and British met in a skirmish at Lyons Creek, near the Niagara frontier. This was the last long engagement fought in the North in the War of 1812. The action was between several detachments of United States regulars, with a small party of dragoons and riflemen, about nine hundred men in all, and a select British corps of 1,300 men. The British made the attack, and after some sharp fighting were repulsed with considerable loss. The loss on the American side amounted to 68 killed, wounded and missing. Soon after this date the American army, after destroying Fort Erie, retired across the border and went into winter quarters at Buffalo, Black Rock and Batavia.

WAVED FAREWELL BY PROXY

The other morning, as a departing transatlantic steamer was casting off its lines and swinging out into the stream, an elderly business man hastily embraced a lady who was one of the passengers, and rushed down the gang-plank to the wharf, says the London Answers.

Going hurriedly up to a melancholy loafer who was watching the busy crowd, the gentleman drew him behind a pile of baggage and said:

"Want to earn a shilling or two?"

"You bet I do."

"You see that lady in black on the bridge there?" said the elderly one.

"Certainly."

"Well, that's my wife going abroad. Now, of course, she'll expect me to stand here for the next 20 minutes, while the steamer is backing and filling in, waving my handkerchief and watching her out of sight. D'ye see?"

"I do, sir."

"Well, I'm too busy to humbug about here; stock to buy, biz to attend to. She's a little near-sighted, so I'll just engage you to wave this handkerchief instead. It's a big one, with a red border, and as long as she sees it she'll think it's me. Come up to 202 Bangup street when they are well off, and I'll

MANY READERS OBTAIN NEW MEDICAL WORK.

Hundreds of readers of this paper have already taken advantage of the generous offer by which Dr. Miles' Medical Guide can be obtained entirely free of cost.

As has been stated before this offer is only for a limited time and all those who want to avail themselves of it should hasten to send in their names.

This book is filled with sound advice given in a clear, readable form. Read it over and over again until you know its contents thoroughly. Do not wait for the emergency to occur and then look up the necessary treatment, but in your leisure moments carefully read and absorb the knowledge contained therein.

Do not make the mistake that this book is just an advertisement for Dr. Miles' Restorative Remedies. It is true that in the particular cases where any of the Miles' Remedies are indicated their use is advised. This is because it is believed that they are the best remedies of their kind. But Dr. Miles' Medical Guide is an honest endeavor to give the general public a practical insight into household medicine and in all cases the treatment recommended is that which is considered to be the best.

If you wish to obtain one of these books without any cost to yourself send your name and address on a post card or in a letter addressed clearly to

Family Medical Guide,

DETAIL

Operating a railroad involves a maze of detail. The spike to hold the rail is relatively as important as the bond issue for betterments and extensions. The local ticket from station to station must be printed, sold, collected and recorded, just as the ticket from Montgomery to Cincinnati. The small parcel must be taken up, recorded and delivered, just as the train load shipment.

Thousands of people—human beings, with human hopes and ambitions, weaknesses and faults—are employed by a railroad. They are as prone to nerves, to indigestion, to temper, to resentment, as other human beings.

Mechanical appliances are necessary. These appliances may get out of order, may break, may slip a cog, just as appliances in your store or factory.

States, counties and municipalities, located in the United States, must be traversed. Each state has different laws, different policies; each municipality has different ordinances, different forms of government; each county has its individual regulations. In many instances the policies, rules and regulations are not the same as those of the United States.

Instances are on record that what was urged on us by one state, or county, or municipality, was strenuously objected to by the very next state, county or municipality along our line.

The L. & N. writes of these things, not in a spirit of complaint, but in the hope that a feeling of tolerance may be entertained by you for what you may term our faults. You, not being in possession of all the facts, may not be qualified to judge us, just as we, not being qualified, do not pronounce judgment on you.

We endeavor to at all times render good service, and do those things desired by the greatest number, always granting that it is within our power to do so.

May we express the hope that you will think of these things, and co-operate with us to render that service for which all of us are striving?

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Haydn and Church Music.

Carpani, the poet, once asked his friend, Haydn, "how it happened that his church music was almost always of an animating, cheerful and even gay description." To this Hadyn's answer was: "I cannot make it otherwise. I write according to the thoughts which I feel. When I think upon God my heart is so full of joy that the notes dance and leap, as it were, from my pen, and since God has given me a cheerful heart, it will be easily forgiven me that I serve him with a cheerful spirit."

Florist's Bright Ideas.

"The young lady has many admirers. I wish to send her some flowers that will cause her to keep me in mind while she's away." "Well, there's rosemary," said the dealer reflectively. "That's for remembrance. Or you might send some forget-me-nots." —Louisville Courier Journal.

THE UNION-BANNER

VOL. 3 THE UNION 11th Year CLANTON, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1914 THE BANNER 21st Year NO. 38

ANOTHER FIRE HERE LAST SATURDAY NIGHT

Clanton had two rather disastrous fires to occur last week, the last of which broke out in the building occupied by the Clanton Bottling Works about midnight Saturday night. The destruction was with much difficulty, confined to two wooden buildings, one of which was a cotton seed warehouse; but the whole block of brick stores adjacent to the bottling works was in imminent danger. They were saved only by daring and persistent efforts on the part of Clanton's gallant bucket brigade.

The buildings which were destroyed were the property of Dr. N. S. Johnson, while the bottling works plant was owned by J. W. Morrow. Joe Calloway and Bud Alred were using the other building next to the bottling works as a warehouse for cotton seed and cotton seed meal and hulls.

The bottling plant, together with a large quantity of cotton seed, cotton seed meal and hulls was destroyed. Loss partially covered by insurance.

UNION SPRINGS

Holidays very quiet here.

Misses Neelie and Mae Waldrup, two of our beautiful Belles, have spent several days near Jemison. Also a visit to Lock 12 was on this program.

The store at the Turpentine Camps was entered by burglars a few nights ago, and quite a lot of goods were taken. Since then some of the goods have been recovered.

Miss Sallie Russ is visiting in Florida.

Mr. and Mrs. Jackson of Bibb visited here during the holidays.

Several famllies are moving to Siluria to work in the cotton mill.

The review exercises in the Sunday school of last Sunday were quite interesting, as the members read different subjects bearing on the quarter's lessons.

As we enter the new year we cross the border land where we never tread before. None of us can read the future, but let the old year go, and enter the fight for God and the right. 1914 has been marked by prophetic students as the end of Gentile times. According to their views the great Eastern war came on time. We had been prepared to believe that Socialists would never enter war against each other, but the present great war seems to contradict that idea.

Hobson's prohibition bill lost in Congress, but the fight is on in Alabama, and it promises to be lively.

Mr. W. H. Mahan has been quite sick but is now reported a little better.

Citizen.

COTTON REPORT

There were 20,672 bales of cotton ginned in Chilton County prior to December 13th, 1914, as compared with 15,959 bales ginned prior to December 13th, 1913. The above figures are from the official report as complied for the bureau of government statistics by R. J. Jones, special agent for this county.

Culp Schoolhouse

Everybody enjoyed Christmas.

On last Thursday evening, Dec. 24th, a Xmas tree and Box Supper was held at Culp Schoolhouse with a large attendance. The school building and Xmas tree was fittingly decorated. Candles of many colors flashed their sparkling rays over the splendid decorations and handsome presents.

The color scheme of the decorations was successfully carried out in green, red and yellow.

Santa Claus was present and with the assistance of his brother excelled himself in liberality and furnished amusement.

For the entertainment of the guests, a string band was furnished by four of the best musicians in the county. The splendid music added enthusiasm to the scene of festivity.

The Box Supper was enjoyed. Mr. W. C. sold at auction many handsomely decorated boxes filled with the best of eatables. Again the color scheme was in evidence. After the boxes were sold, a voting contest was conducted by Mr. W. C. McCraw, and Mr. Loren Smith on the most popular young lady present. Seven young ladies were in the field but the race ran between Miss Frances Vaughn of Ashville, Ala., teacher of the Culp school, and Leuna Rasberry, of the Mulberry community. Both young ladies had many supporters and the contest waxed warm with the result of 1900 votes for Miss Vaughn and 2625 votes for Miss Rasberry, who being the most popular lady by a majority of 725 votes.

Among the ladies most noticeable were Miss Frances Vaughn who was most becomingly gowned and whose brunette type of beauty shone to pertection in a silk crepe de chine costume in the new shade of blue with real lace trimming and draped up with hand made rose buds.

Miss Luna Rasberry was neatly attired in serge dress with white collars and cuffs.

Misses Everree Williams and Annie Culp, two young girls of the senior class (eighth grade) were charming in their toilettes of combinations of serge and satin.

Miss Ada Williams, a recent student of Wheeler Business College never looked more stately and superb, being gracefully robed in silver net over white satin with parisian trimming and coral jewelry.

About two hundrad people enjoyed this Christmas Social and a handsome profit was realized for benefit of the school.

Paul Littlejohn a Prize Winner

Paul Littlejohn, son of W. A. Littlejohn, raised 69 bushels of corn on an an acre of land last year; and for this meritorious effort he was awarded a prize in the boys corn club of Chilton county—a $25 suit of clothes, offered at the beginning of the season by Judge L. H. Reynolds. Upon notification of the award by Mr. T. E. Williams, manager of the individual prize department of the club, the suit was delivered to the young man by Judge Reynolds, with high compliments for his splendid achievement.

PROTESTS MADE TO GREAT BRITAIN

Washington, December 29.—The President today confirmed the reports that a protest had been sent Great Britain against the treatment given American shipping on the high seas. The protest was made Saturday. No reply has yet been received. No treaty is involved, but the position of the United States is strictly in accordance with international law.

Since the war started the United States has protested against detaining each American vessel held up. The note to Great Britain combines all these former protests. The move by President Wilson is a surprise to diplomats. It is believed other nations will now take the same steps.

Opposes Rural Credit

Wilson Will Not Allow Farmers Aid

Washington, December 28.—Any light and lingering hope that the administration might tolerate, if not endorse, rural credits legislation by this congress has been dispelled by an official utterance to the effect that there is no emergency which justifies government assistance direct to the farmers through government cash or credit. For over a year the rural credits advocates from the south have felt that no such help would be extended, and the currency committee headed by Representative Ragsdale, has been outspoken in its dissatisfaction.

While the president in person simply has expressed regret that consideration of such legislation cannot be considered advisable at this session, the views of the administration are expressed in full by Secretary Houston of the department of agricultnre.

Mountain Creek

The Baraca-Philathea society enjoyed a social event at the home of Mrs. Ruby Knox Sunday.

A public library has been established here which is due to the efforts of Mrs. J. J. Mayfield and Mrs. Horace Stringfellow, two splendid charitable women.

Mrs. Carrie McMasters has been entertaining during the holidays Mrs. Bessie Hestle, of Nashville; Mrs. Wade Allen, of Birmingham, and her two pretty daughters, Virginia and Annette.

Miss Lucy Simpson, of Birmingham, is here visiting her father, Captain James M. Simpson, commandant of the Alabama Soldiers' Home.

Mrs. R. A. Walker, of Jackson, Miss., is here with Mrs. R. B. Thornton.

Mrs. N. Y. Atkinson, of Birmingham, is here spending the Christmas holidays with her parents.

The Episcopal rector, Rev. Mr. Greiger, has established a mission at this place and holds a regular service every week in the chapel, a building donated by Mrs. Horace Stringfellow for the purpose.

The poor children of this vicinity were treated to a gift tree loaded with pretty presents contributed by Mrs. Stringfellow and Mrs. Judge Mayfield. There were 50 little hearts made happy by these excellent ladies.

WAR AT A GLANCE

Russian announcements of defeats of the Germans are disputed today in the Berlin War Office statement, which declares that the attacks of the advancing armies in Poland have made progress and that strong Russian assaults have been repelled. No mention is made, however, of the situation in Galicia, where the Russians are described as having inflicted a severe defeat on the Austro-German forces.

The French campaign for repossession of its lost province of Alsace, one of the first objectives of the republic after the war's outbreak, apparently is making progress. Unofficial reports last night that the Allies were shelling Muelhausen are supplemented today by the statement of the French War Office that the town of Steinbach, Upper Alsace, has been invested.

In France and in Belgium the fighting drags on with small victories for each side. The German official announcement tells of the capture of a French trench in a burned forest west of Apremont. The French statement admits the temporary loss of this trench, but adds it was retaken later after three counterattacks. Both Paris and Berlin mention minor gains with violent fighting at various points. The French statement says the Allies have captured the Belgian town of St. Georges, around which heavy encounters have been in progress for some time.

Another striking change in the eastern military situation, where neither of the contending forces has been able to keep the ascendancy for any considerable period, is indicated in dispatches from Petrograd and Vienna. The Russians appear now to have won the upper hand. The Petrograd War Office states the Germans who have been pressing forward in Poland have been repulsed with heavy losses. In Galicia the Austrians are reported to have suffered a reversal and to be hastily retreating. Their defeat apparently breaks up the maneuver aiming at the combined Austro German attack on the southern forces of the Russians, which, if successful, might have imperilied the Russian left wing. Berlin, however, views the situation in the east with optimism, intimating important developments in Poland may be expected shortly.

Recent developments have given the United States a more direct interest politically in the European situation. Washington has sent to the British government a note voicing its objection to the methods employed in holding up and searching American vessels.

Another important questisn is raised by Germany's disposition not to recognize longer American consuls in conquered Belgium territory unless they are acceptable to Germany.

Old Chilton Citizen Dead

News was received in Clanton Saturday of the sudden death of Mr. Dave H. Mullins, an old citizen of this county, who was residing at Helena at the time of his death. Mr. Mullins had just a few weeks ago moved from his old home at Jumbo, to Helena. He was well known in the county, and was a highly respected upright citizen. He had a number of relatives in Clanton, several of whom atteded his funeral Sunday at Helena.

President Wilson was 58 years old on Monday of this week.

The people of the State of Alabama are invited to attend the inaugural ball to be given at Montgomery next month in honor of Governor and Mrs. Charles Henderson.

The death sentence which has been hanging over Leo M. Frank has been stayed by Justice Lamar of the United States Supreme Court. Frank will have a hearing before the highest Court of the country.

Read the article in this issue, which comes from Hon. C. B. Colquitt, Democratic Governor of Texas. We reproduce it from the Montgomery Journal of last Sunday, and wish our readers to take special notice of it. Remember too, that Governor Colquitt is a Democrat, and at one time was heartily in accord with the Wilson policies; but he sees in them what many others have seen—failure—and comes out boldly with an open acknowledgement of his convictions.

We are publishing an announcement in this issue of our paper from Prof. C. C. Slaton, Principal of the Chilton County High School, stating that said institution will be open for the regis tration of students next Monday at 9 a. m. This means that all preliminaries to the operation of the school are completed. or will be by that time, and the real work of the teaching force will begin as soon as all students are registered, and organization com pleted. We hope to see an auspicious opening, and trust that all citizens will accord to the school their sympathetic support, as it is by this means only that we can hope for the best results to arise from its activities.

FIGHTING FIRE IN CLANTON

Clanton's bucket brigade has proved remarkably efficient in the recent fires that have threatened us with untold destruction. Of course, like all other out-of-dates and back-numbers, it has some serious impediments, but considering all things, it is a fine specimen of its class. Probably the most impressive thing about Clanton's fire fighting device is the process in actual operation. It is a terrible test of a mans capacity for pulling a well rope or vibrating a pump handle; and none the less does it try the ability of his legs to lug him up a flight of stairs with two or three buckets of water, and to stand in the blazing heat of a burning building and make desperate efforts to pour a pail of dampness upward upon the raging ignition, till he finds that the water has literally evaporated, his body become scorched to a crackling, and the fire still raging as if he had never been on the premises.

When a number of men have stopped a fire under such conditions as these it is not hard for them to realize that they have really perfected a marvelous achievement; nor does it take them long to wish for no more occasion to draw out their efforts. What they wish and pray for is a new and improved method of fighting the terrible enemy that is liable to strike us any moment, and demand a half of our city to be floated to the heavens in smoke and ashes.

Give them water—not obtained by the unhandy and exhausting process of drawing it from a well or hand pump—but water from the mains that are lying dormant under our streets; with that they might be able to save property enough to amount to many times the price of obtaining the water, whereas at present they would have to stand afar and view with agony the terror of a mighty conflagration.

SOUP HOUSE OPENED IN MONTGOMERY

Last Monday Montgomery saw the first real "soup house" ever operated within the limits of that city, according to the Montgomery Advertiser. The place was opened some time before noon, and by 2 o'clock the register showed that 123 persons, consisting of destitute men, women and children, had been treated to the fare of hot soup and milk and bread. Most of the men who were served were Montgomery men, who are out of work, and not able to support themselves and families. The hungry crowd was not a bunch of transient floating hoboe trash; it was men women and children of Montgomery, who have always heretofore been able to find work enough to buy their own food and clothes.

As evidence that these are the hardest times that have ever visited this country, many instances similar to that mentioned above, are happening in places that never before experienced such perilous conditions.

It seems to us that what the European war and the Demoratic administration have given us surely must be any kind of remedy, except one which produces prosperity and plenty.

Democratic Governor of Texas Condemns Wilson's Policies.

From The Montgomery Journal:

The Wilson administration has been the greatest failure in the history of the presidency. The South is a land literally flowing with milk and honey, it has made of the biggest and best crops in its history and yet, because of the utter incompetence of the men in charge of the government, its business is prostrated, its credit is impaired and thousands of its people are starving.

The administration's tariff law was pledged to lower the cost of living and it has had the contrary effect. By putting raw material on the free list and keeping the protective tariff on manufactured goods, it has condemned American farmers by hundreds of thousands to peonage and has enabled the mannfacturers, getting their raw materials cheaper, to charge higher prices for their goods which they have done.

Hides are free listed and shoes have gone higher. It is true of virtually every single item similarly treated in the administration tariff law. The American farmer gets less for his raw materials, the American working man pays more for the finish product and both are further robbed to enrich the protected manufacturing trusts and combines.

The administration's foreign policy has been imbecile. It has allowed England to dictate conditions as to cotton shipments to European countries that enabled English spinners to rob the American cotton growers of half the value of their crop. England stopped American shipments until the English spinners had bought their supply at 6 1-2 cents a pound and stored it in Texas and southern warehouses.

Then England consented to declare cotton not contraband and France followed suit a day or two later. Our government weakly submitted to England's dictation playing into the hands of the English spinners and betraying the American cotton growers as completely as if this country were an English vassal state.

If I had been president I would have served notice on England's premier that our foreign trade in cotton and other non-contraband commodities was going forward with or without England's consent and if necessary I would have sent American ironclads to England's door to enforce that notice.

The administration's repeal of the Panama tolls exemption law in violation of the party's national platform was another weak surrender to England. If free tolls for American ships had not been repealed, hundreds of American-owned ships flying a foreign flag would have come under the American flag to get the benefit of the exemption and we would today have an American merchant marine competent to carry our goods to foreign markets, We have no such merchant marine and to supply it the Wilson administration is proposing to spend the tax payers' money by buying a subsidized national shipping service.

The Wilson-Bryan management of the Mexican affair has been an egregrious failure. They landed an American army in Vera Cruz to force Huerta to salute the flag and have brought it back without getting the salute. They now ask Congress to appropriate over $500,000 to pay the expenses of that ridiculous expedition. For what? What did it accomplish?

It set all Mexico aflame against the Americans, not only in Mexico but in Texas, where all along the north bank of the Rio Grande there are ten Mexicans to one American. It brought on a reign of terror all along the Texas border so that when the federal government refused to afford protection for our people in their own state I was forced to send 1200 Texas troops down there to give it.

Mexican bandit gangs were crossing the border into Texas raiding and terrorizing our scattered people. Women and children were huddled together in brick houses, menaced with murder and worse. My desk was flooded with telegrams from chambers of commerce, bankers, stock men and other responsible citizens praying for protection all along our 1200 mile frontier.

The federal government had only 60 troopers at Brownsville to cover more than two-thirds of that long border. When I rushed the Texas troops down there, stationing a company at each of the principal border towns, I instructed them not to cross the river, nor in any way to violate the neutrality law, but at all costs to protect the lives and property of Texas people.

Secretary of War Garrison telegraphed me that he thought it unwise to have two military forces occupying the same territory under separate commanders and suggested that I withdraw the state troops. I wired him that I would withdraw the Texas troops when he sent an equal number of regulars to replace them at every place where our men were stationed.

I understood they had everything prepared at Washington to have me indicted by a federal grand jury and put in a federal prison on the assumption that I meant to invade Mexico—a palable absurdity which only men utterly ignorant of the situation could have entertained. It is a fact which the whole country does not know, that Brownsville the Mexican commander at Mataromus, across the river, offered to surrender that city to the troops of United States cavalryman. The commander at Mataramcus evidently believed that the Texas troops meant to take this city and thought the United States troops were more friendly than the Texans. The Washington conception of our business on the border was as ridiculous as that of the Mexican commander.

Wilson and Bryan have stood by encouraging one gang of bandits after another while people were being butchered all over Mexico, while the vast American interests in that country were being confiscated and shot to pieces and today the Mexican chaos is worse than at any time since Madero was assassinated. Villa is the dictator of the country and I understand that all he wants is to be chief of police of Mexico with control of the gambling concessions of Mexico and Juarez.

Our government has kept England and Germany from restoring order in Mexico and has itself done nothing but contribute to the disorder and lawlessness by its vacillating "watching and waiting" policy—if it can be called a policy.

The proprietied interests of Mexico and the big exploit of Mexican resources have got control of the situation absolutely and these same interests have got the ear of our government at Washington.

The administration's anti-trust laws are bare faced fakes so far ss protecting the people from trust oppression is concerned. These laws protects nobody so well as the Standard Oil, the Steel and other great trusts. I believed at first that the federal reserve banking act was the administration's meritorious achievement, but now bankers tell me it is going to prove a failure. The control of the system in practice appears to rest in New York City instead of Washington.

I am fully convinced the national election of 1915 will end the Democratic regime. The policies of the Democratic national administration have wholly failed to either curb monopolies or lower the cost of living for the people and they have materially contributed to deprive millions of wage earners of employment.

The administration valorized twenty billion dollars worth of corporate securities owned in the North and East by a treasury department ordered to national banks to loan money on listed securities at not less than the closing quotations of July 30, 1914, but the same administration when asked to allow the people to use a quarter of a billion dollars of their collective credit for two or three years to save them from losing five hundred million dollars on their cotton crop, regarded valorization as violative of sound government.

The president stood in the road and condemned the south which made him, to heavier loss and more widespread misery than it has known in three generations. He vindicated an obsolete theory of political economy but he mighty near ruined the country doing it.

I raised among my personal friends in Texas more than $10,000 for the Wilson campaign fund and the only favor I asked of him was that he appoint men who would aid the Texas state government to enforce law and order along the Mexican border. It was my earnest desire to assist in making the Democratic national administration a success, but I would not sacrifice the honor of my state nor the welfare of her people to win the favor of any administration. At no time have I failed to get courteous treatment from the leaders of the Mexiean revolution. I sympathize with the Mexican people but I also sympathize with Americans who have property rights in Mexico that ought to have been protected.

Most Skin Trouble Readily Overcome

The Active Principle of a Famous Remedy Works Wonders.

Many people have marveled the way S. S. S. overcomes skin troubles. The explanation is the fact that S. S. S. works in the blood and the blood is really a most intricate and extraordinary mass of arteries and veins.

When you come to realize that the skin and the flesh beneath are composed of a network of tiny blood vessels you solve the mystery.

There are wonderful medicinal properties in S. S. S. that follow the course of the blood streams just as naturally as the most nourishing food elements.

It is really a remarkable remedy. It contains one ingredient, the active purpose of which is to stimulate the tissues to the healthy selection of its own essential nutriment. And the medicinal elements of this matchless blood purifier are just as essential to well-balanced health as the nutritious elements of the meats, grains, fats and sugars of our daily food.

Not one drop of minerals or drugs is used in its preparation. Ask for S. S. S. and just insist upon having it. And if you desire skillful advice and counsel upon any matter concerning the blood and skin, write to the Medical Department, The Swift Specific Co., 529 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

NEW LAW OFFICES OF MIDDLETON & REYNOLDS

The enterprising law firm of Middleton & Reynolds have moved their offices into the new Hayes Building across the street from their former locaiion in the Gowan building. The new offices are the finest in arrangement and equipage of any in Clanton, and are not to be excelled in Alabama, outside the larger cities. It consists of a suite of halt a dozen rooms, among them a reception room, splendid and costly library, stenographer's room, and individual consultation rooms. These attorneys are receiving high compliments upon the arrangement of their new place, and truly it is one of which they may be justly proud.

GIN NOTICE

The gins in Clanton will not run after Wednesday the 23rd inst except on Saturday Beginning Saturday the 2nd day of January 1915.

TRAINING BOYS FOR WARFARE

Youth of Australia, From an Early Age, Undergo a Compulsory Military Service.

Australian lads of twelve years begin a more or less voluntary form of military training. It is an indulgent, happy-go-lucky sort of thing, designed primarily to be of physical advantage. When the lads are fourteen years old, a limited military service is severely compulsory, with penalties for evasion, and fines laid upon employers and parents who interfere, and thus continues, with physical exercises, drill, parades, and rifle practice, for four years, whereupon these cadets are passed into the citizen forces. Four whole-day drills are required each year, and 12 half-day drills and 24 night drills. A perfunctory attendance upon these grave obligations—inapt, sullen, frivolous behavior—counts for nothing at all. If the cadet fails to be marked efficient by his battalion officers he must perform his service all over again. In Kalgoorlie of western Australia—A great dust storm blowing that night—we watched a column of these "little conscripts" march past with rifles and bugles and drums; and they were smart to see—brown uniforms, with tricks of green, and wide-brimmed Australian hats caught up at the side in the Australian way. It is no farcical affair. When we were in Brisbane of Queensland, a score of truant youngsters were packed off to the military barracks for ten days of close confinement and drill; and away they went, in a big cape wagon, in charge of a sergeant major, and under escort of some brilliant artillerymen—a melancholy little crew, these truants, then, facing ten days of absence from home, with six hours of drill on the hot parade-ground, under a sergeant major, who doubtless knew how to improve the patriotism of small culprits, and would do it with a switch.—Norman Duncan, in Harper's Magazine.

Patch Broken Plaster.

To fill up the broken place in the plastering make a mixture as follows: Two parts each of sifted coal ashes and sand, one part of wheat flour, mixed with water. This can be applied with little trouble, and hardens quickly.

Where She Doesn't Understand.

Whenever, says a Macon editor, a fellow tries to be as nice to his wife as he was in the good old days when he was courting her she at once begins to wonder what's the matter with the old fool.

Daily Thought.

It is a good thing to be rich, and a good thing to be strong, but it is a better thing to be beloved of many friends.—Euripides.

A Good Record.

"Harold Percy doesn't seem to have any difficulty in getting engaged." "Of course not," replied Miss Cayenne. "All the girls to whom he has previously been engaged wear such stunning collections of jewelry."

Grateful Suburbanites.

Towne—"Do you make your cook pay for what she breaks?" Suburbs (in amazement)—"Make her pay? I should say not! Why, every month, besides paying her salary, we reward her liberally for what she didn't break!"

A Time-Saver.

Farmer Oatcake—"Mandy, every feller's bound to be worked up over the political situation this year." Mrs. Oatcake—"Mebbe, Silas; but as it only takes you a few minutes to vote, I don't jest see the sense of talking about it for three months ahead."

Astonishing Supplication.

A famous college principal used to give out notices at the morning devotional exercises, which always closed with a prayer. One morning he forgot a certain notice until he had begun his last prayer. Praying for the professors and students of the college, the notice from the French professor came to mind, and the assembled students were astonished to hear the president say: "And, O Lord, bless Professor Karge, whose French class will be held this morning at nine o'clock instead of at half-past nine, as usual."

THAT COLD YOU HAVE

may bring sickness, doctors bills and loss of work; you know that serious sickness usually starts with a cold, and a cold only exists where weakness exists. Remember that.

Overcome the weakness and nature cures the cold—that is the law of reason. Carefully avoid drugged pills, syrups or stimulants; they are only props and braces and whips.

It is the pure medicinal nourishment in Scott's Emulsion that quickly enriches the blood, strengthens the lungs and helps heal the air passages.

And mark this well—Scott's Emulsion generates body-heat as protection against winter sickness. Get Scott's at your drug store to-day. It always strengthens and builds up.

GREAT NEED FOR COURTESY

Matter Really Costs Very Little, Yet It Means So Much to the Recipient.

After the nations of the world have proved that they are through with war by melting up all their armament, the great reform next in order will be that of instituting universal courtesy. This reform may be said to be on its feet, even at the present time, but it is wobbly-legged and needs a great deal of encouragement.

We have some very courteous individuals in our midst, most of whom were born that way and who insist on staying that way despite all temptations to the contrary; but we have some who are almost hopeless.

Courtesy is just another name for unselfishness. The greedy, self-centered individual is never courteous, no matter what kind of manners he displays in public. Courtesy does not reveal itself for effect; it is not calculating. It acts out of the promptings of consideration for the just claims and rights of others, and, in smaller matters at least, it is even willing to make sacrifices. It is the sense of service revealed in action.

When you give your neighbor a smile instead of a frown you do him a real service, for you cause him to smile and be happy. It is courteous, therefore, to smile.

When you smother the needless word of criticism you save some one a pang. It is courteous, therefore, to control your tongue.

It doesn't matter very much at just what angle you tip your hat to a lady, although it is commendable to regard such points. The important thing is to look like you were glad of the opportunity to tip it. That is the real courtesy.

If the world would start out today to follow two rules—smile and avoid mean gossip—it would be almost civilized at the end of a year.

COULDN'T ATTEND TO BOTH

Grocery Clerk Found That Putting Up Orders and Talking Baseball Didn't Go Together.

The manager of a large Portland (Ore.) grocery store took great pleasure in relating a few "plays" pulled off by one of his clerks. This clerk is a "fan." One of those absorbed, wild and woolly baseball lovers who can talk, expand and argue the great game at any time and anywhere. His duties at the store keep him anchored most of the time, though on special occasions he is assigned to the terms.

Among his duties is to put up orders for customers in the high-toned section of the city. While he was engaged in this work the other day one of his chums (also a "fan") came in and they began to talk baseball. The grocery clerk kept on putting up the orders, but his thoughts were all on that important subject, baseball.

In the course of his argument he went to the shelf and got a case of starch instead of a package of sugar; put up tomatoes instead of potatoes, put in a bag of flour in place of an order for lard; read maple sirup instead of condensed milk, and would have drawn molasses into the kerosene can if some one had not called him away for a moment as he started for the molasses barrel.

For a time this was the way that his orders went out and it caused a riot among three or four of the best customers. He is still a good deal of a "fan," but he is not going to put up any orders while engrossed in his favorite subject.

Protested War With England.

One hundred years ago Massachusetts sent a circular letter to the other New England states inviting them to send delegates to a convention in Hartford to protest against the continuance of the war with England. The presence of the British and the demoralization of the shipping had long weighed heavily on the people of New England. While the loyalty and patriotism of the citizens were never in question, there was a certain element, made up principally of the political opponents of President Madison, who were confirmed in their hostility to the war. It was said at the time that their opposition went so far as to contemplate secession or obstruction to the government in prosecuting the war, but this was stoutly denied by those responsible for the Hartford convention.

Land Engagement in 1812.

One hundred years ago the Americans and British met in a skirmish at Lyons Creek, near the Niagara frontier. This was the last long engagement fought in the North in the War of 1812. The action was between several detachments of United States regulars, with a small party of dragoons and riflemen, about nine hundred men in all, and a select British corps of 1,300 men. The British made the attack, and after some sharp fighting were repulsed with considerable loss. The loss on the American side amounted to 68 killed, wounded and missing. Soon after this date the American army, after destroying Fort Erie, retired across the border and went into winter quarters at Buffalo, Black Rock and Batavia.

OLD CUSTOM STILL SURVIVES

While I was the guest of Prince A. at his Austrian castle, writes a contributor to Chambers' Journal, Princess Karl took me under her special guidance. She insisted that I should make acquaintance with the village the morning after my arrival.

"You had better put on gloves, or at any rate the right-hand glove," she said, as I met her at the great entrance.

"I never wear gloves if I can help it," I answered. "And on a hot day like this!"

She laughed. "Well, I have warned you. You must buy your experience."

We descended the steep slope to the village, and stopped at the post office; it was likewise a cafe and a general provision store. Several peasants sat at a table drinking beer, and two or three women were talking with the postmistress. When we entered, the postmistress ran from behind her counter, the peasants rose from their bench, and crowding round the Princess Karl, they all kissed her right hand. To my intense surprise, after they had kissed the princess' hand, they each bestowed a similar attention on me.

"I warned you to wear a glove," said the princess, when the ceremony was over. "Now you know the reason. You will find that whenever you meet peasants, they will kiss your hand. They even leave their work in the fields, and run out into the road if they see you passing. Last year a young attache from the French embassy was staying here, and he had a great fright. He was walking along a road between some bean fields. The peasants were taking in the harvest, and to his horror he saw them all, men and women, suddenly throw down their scythes and rakes and rush toward him from both sides. He was convinced that they were going to attack and rob him; and so he took to his heels and ran. He never stopped until he got to the Schloss; to this day he will not believe that the poor peasants only wished to kiss his hand as a mark of respect to an excellenz. At my home in Hungary the peasants kneel down and kiss the hem of your dress."

In these days such subservience seems incredible; but the custom is a survival of the days when all the peasants were slaves, and the nobles had the power of life and death over them.

WOULD AID COTTON GROWERS

Flour-Milling Firm Urges Its Customers to Accept Deliveries of Product in Cotton Sacks.

In order to increase the demand for cotton, one of the largest flour-milling firms in America has directed its managers and salesmen all over the country to urge its customers to accept deliveries of flour that are shipped in cotton instead of jute sacks. Hitherto jute imported from India has been used extensively for shipments of flour, both to home and foreign markets. The sacks employed hold 140 pounds each. If the trade can be induced to accept shipments in cotton sacks holding 98 pounds each, there will be a marked increase in the demand for home-grown cotton, and the action of the flour-milling firm is regarded as a long step in this direction. Anything that will improve the financial condition of the cotton growers, it is pointed out, will increase the volume of their cash purchases and thus benefit general business conditions. For this reason it is believed that the trade will not insist on the jute sacks used hitherto.

One Result of War of 1812.

One hundred years ago the War of 1812 had virtually closed so far as the operations in the North were concerned. Henceforth the activities of the opposing forces were to be confined to the South. The hope of obtaining the Floridas had encouraged the Southern states to enter into the war. The president had expected congress to approve the seizure of Spanish Florida. Andrew Jackson, as the most prominent military man in the South, was appointed major general of militia. Congress was at first reluctant to act in the matter of Florida, which belonged to Spain, a friendly power. But at last a bill was signed authorizing the seizing of Western Florida and the occupation of Mobile, Pensacola and other points. Shortly afterward Pensacola was captured This was the only gain of territory made during the war.

Important Inheritance Decision.

Mrs. D. C. Alred Died Last Friday

On last Friday, Christmas day, about four o'clock Mrs. D. C. Alred died at her home here, after a lingering illness with pellagra. She had been confined to her room with the illness for several months, and for many days prior to her death, her life was known to be in grave danger.

Mrs. Alred was the wife of Mr. D. C. Alred, for many years a prominent business man of Clanton. She was the mother of four children, all of whom are small, and yet living.

Funeral services and interment were held at Samaria church on Saturday, in presence of scores of friends and relatives of the deceased lady and the bereaved husband and family.

Marauder Put to Death.

At Sutterton, England, a hen was in a garden with her newly-hatched brood when a jackdaw pounced upon a chick. The hen gave battle at once, and a sharp encounter ended in the jackdaw being killed.

Simplified Music.

Berlioz used to tell a story about a young woman in a music store. "But, mademoiselle," suggested the clerk, "will not this piece in five sharps perhaps be rather difficult?" "Pooh!" she replied disdainfully. "That is all one to me. Whenever I find more than two sharps or flats I scratch them out with my penknife."

GOOD SUGGESTION TO CLANTON PEOPLE

It is surprising the amount of old, foul matter the simple mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., known as Adler-i-ka, drains from the system. This remedy became famous by curing appendicitis and acts on BOTH the upper and lower bowel so thoroughly that ONE DOSE relieves sour stomach, gas on the stomach snd constipation almost IMMEDIATELY. We are mighty glad we are Clanton agents for Adler-i-ka. The Upchurch Drug Company.

CAVE DWELLERS OF AMERICA

Europe Is by No Means the Exclusive Holder of Prehistoric Dwellings.

The American cave dwellers were not ape men, nor even big-jawed, low-browed meat eaters, like the alleged associates of the famous, albeit anonymous, owner of the "Neanderthal skull.' Corn and squash seeds, three kinds of gourds, the stone wetate, and the slender bones of birds tell of the largely vegetable diet of these primeval cave dwellers.

Evidences of religious worship abound—little estufas, with places for the sacred fire among the dwellings, and large ones in the open canyon where circles of communal huts, inclose the central floor, hardened by the feet of thousands of dancers.

Here, still unexplored, are hundreds of tiny cavern houses burrowed in cliffs 500 to 600 feet high, colored in maroon, ochre, sober gray and gypsum white—hues that in the sunset glow in furnace reds and royal purple and deep lavender.

Not far away at Casa Grande, a race of tall men lived in larger caves and left their mummified dead to tell of six-foot braves and broad-hipped women, while at Frijoles the bodies dium height, with here and there a swathed in woven cloths were of metaller warrior. Reservoirs to impound water for siege or drought; ditches for irrigation; pictographs that are a melange of bird and reptile, beasts and weird imitations of the human form divine; pottery in shards and unbroken; splintered bows and featherless arrows; fiber-soled sandals, and blankets thickened with rabbit fur are found in some of these ancient cavern houses.—National Magazine.

SOME GOOD FOUND IN WAR

Causes More Thought to Be Given to the Beauty of the Ordinary Things of Life.

Commenting on the fact that the war in Europe has caused a revival of the religious spirit in France and that a similar revival of religious feeling is reported from other countries engaged in the great conflict, the Chicago Sunday Herald says editorially:

This is not strange. In the face of the terrific fact of world-wide war, not only religion but also art, literature, life and all sights and sounds and shades of beauty must have taken on an added value.

The peasant's vine-embowered cottage, the little vineyard in the South, the simple rounds of daily life—things which seemed a matter of course three months ago—must now seem beyond all measure valuable.

Fatherhood, motherhood and all the intimacies of family life so rudely cut by war—how incredibly high, holy and important they must seem now that separation has come to show exactly what they meant to all!

In ordinary times men take life, love, religion, calmly. They take them as mere incidents of the common way, as things which no one need dwell too fondly on. Then suddenly there comes a crisis and they see them in a different light.

Truly of religion, art and all forms of beauty that move and breathe upon the world it may be said:

But you were not so fair, nor so could move,
Were it not your beauty, wonder-sweet, had caught
An added splendor from the face of death!

Author's Unique Find.

Before Earnest Coppie buried himself in the dead oblivion of a Canadian forest he found one friend among humankind.

Lee Wok, the taciturn laundryman, was unwrapping the last boiled shirt the author would ever wear. Coppie suddenly grasped him by his cotton shoulder and looked searchingly into the celestial's narrow eyes.

"Tell me," he pleaded, "did you ever hear of a poem called 'When Willie Came to Say Good-Night?'"

"Me no sabee," he mumbled.

The yellow peril staggered in fright as Earnest Coppie hugged joyously the only mortal who had never read "When Little Willie Said Good-Night."

Much Money Is Wasted.

Americans spend $20 for alcoholic liquors for every $1 that buys tea and coffee. Our tobacco costs five times as much as our new churches, remarks Gerard in the Philadelphia Ledger.

Every time we give $1 to a heathen we hand out $1.10 for chewing gum. Candy takes from our pockets two and one-half times as much as our medicines, which is truly fortunate.

It is said that Americans spend an average of $8 a year for jewelry, but I don't believe it. Our total imports of precious stones are only about fifty cents a year for each inhabitant. All the silver and the gold which are mined on earth in a year added to those precious stones does not equal $8 a head.

Power Trawl Fishers' Success.

The adoption of power trawl vessels for fishing in many parts of the world has been frequently described in Daily Consular and Trade Reports. At Hull, England, all previous records in connection with the local fishing industry were broken on September 23 by the trawler Dane. The vessel had fished off the coast of Iceland and its catch realized $9,000, or $1,000 more than the previous record figure. In this instance, however, the owners were helped by the keen demand for fish

MOUNTAIN CREEK

Old Santa Claus seems to have had a very hard time making his round this Christmas,—Some children perhaps have been entirely neglected, while others have not been visited too extensively. It surely is a shame that so many children have been disappointed, most especially in a land of peace and plenty.

Though I suppose we should forgive those who have voted such conditions upon us. Should we wish to imitate Him, who on Calvary's cross, suffered, bled and died that we might be saved? He it was, said, while nailed to to that cruel cross "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do." Those who crucified our Savior, afterwards discovered their mistake. We feel confident that those who are now laboring under such false allusions, will soon discover their error.

Every thing in our berg is moving along slowly. Most of the people are complaining of the hard times. Some few democrats are still laying the "Cause" of the trouble to the poor old European war, but however, our people seem to be better informed, and are laying the cause of the trouble at the proper place.

We have been indirectly informed that one of our most influential democrats, now wish that Beat five could be annexed to Autauga County. We feel inclined to object to anysuch move, as we are very proud of the strides that beat five has recently made, most especially of the Mountain Creek box, as formely we only received about twenty votes and at the last election we had forty- five rolled up to our credit. We hope that beat five will soon be among the "Banner" beats of the county. We had a strong majority at this box, with the exception of the Soldiers Home vote.

We notice in the columns of the Press that "One Prof Pickens" is blowing his horn rather loud over his success in building the Clanton High School. While he is gratifying himself, I wonder what the most of the people over the county are thinking about that donation made by the county.

Wishing all a happy New Year I am, yours very truly.

Hadn't Looked for That.

"When we bought dear little Bobby the electric flashlight he had been begging for so long," says a mother, "we never anticipated that the first time we had company he would hold it up to the guest's ear and say: 'Oh, I just want to see if your ear is clean!'"

FAMILY MEDICAL GUIDE GIVEN FREE TO SUBSCRIBERS

Prominent physicians have estimated that 68 per cent of the cases of sickness in America could be prevented if there was a more widespread knowledge of practical medicine.

The majority of us, up-to-date in everything else, obey the same rules of health that were the fruits of popular superstition in those days when practically nothing was known about preventive medicine.

In the hopes that people will begin to see how important it is that they learn a little more about the ailments of the body, a practical medical guide is offered to all the readers of this paper Free of Cost.

The name of this work is Dr. Miles' Family Medical Guide. It is a work that has been very carefully compiled. It has been written in very plain language, omitting, when not absolutely necessary, all technical words and phrases.

It tells how to recognize various ailments. It tells what to do before the doctor arrives, or if he does not arrive at all. It tells what to do and what not to do in case of accident. It gives a few practical laws of health. It tells of how to take care of the sick room, of what to eat, of how to care for infants and other important details.

Aiding Education

Realizing that next to health education is the most vital force in life the L. & N. long ago adopted a policy of co-operation in educating the young people located along its lines.

We do not confine our efforts to our advertisements, which are published to inform the people of our policies and ambitions for the prosperity of the whole country. Believing that whatever contributes to the educational and religious welfare of the people contributes to the welfare of the L. & N., we have rendered substantial assistance to the public schools of the community.

The L. & N. has paid in many instances illegal school taxes, where the levies were clearly unconstitutional, in order to keep the public schools from being closed. This policy has been in force for some twenty years, during which time many thousands of dollars of illegal school levies have been paid into the public treasury to educate the people of the state, in addition to the legal levies we were compelled by law to pay.

At times these illegal levies became unfair and burdensome, causing their constitutionality to be tested in the courts. Some of the taxpayers took the position that these levies could not be collected as a matter of law, and the courts upheld that position.

The L. & N. paid, and continues to pay, some of the illegal levies which no law compels, always reserving the right to resist payment of those levies which are not in the interest of the general public good, or which might be unduly burdensome.

The levies are paid on the same policy of development that causes the L. & N. to operate dairy cars, maintain an industrial bureau, send out agricultural experts, analyze minerals and promote industry generally.

We could cite numerous specific instances, but we are determined not to indulge in self praise. We simply want to inform the people so that the people will know of our spirit of mutual co-operation for the general public good.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Home, Sweet Home.

Between thirty and forty thousand Sicilians emigrate from Palermo to the United States each year, and in the course of time almost all of them go back permanently or for a visit.

What We May Expect.

"Now an automobile has been introduced which plays tunes." "More expense. I suppose next any man who pretends to be in the swim will have to own a grand-opera car, a light-opera runabout and something sedate for Sundays."

Haydn and Church Music.

Carpani, the poet, once asked his friend, Haydn, "how it happened that his church music was almost always of an animating, cheerful and even gay description." To this Hadyn's answer was: "I cannot make it otherwise. I write according to the thoughts which I feel. When I think upon God my heart is so full of joy that the notes dance and leap, as it were, from my pen, and since God has given me a cheerful heart, it will be easily forgiven me that I serve him with a cheerful spirit."

Florist's Bright Ideas.

"The young lady has many admirers. I wish to send her some flowers that will cause her to keep me in mind while she's away." "Well, there's rosemary," said the dealer reflectively. "That's for remembrance. Or you might send some forget-me-nots." — Louisville Courier Journal.
